The plaintiff is entitled to costs up to the time of the defendant's paying money into court, though the plaintiff entered the record for trial, and withdrew it. Lorck v. Wright, 8 T. R. 486.

If a defendant pays money into court, which the plaintiff does not take out, but proceeds, and the defendant obtains a verdict, the defendant is entitled to full costs of the whole action. Jeffs v. Smith, 4 Taunt. 196.

Where a defendant took out a summons, calling on plaintiff to show cause why proceedings should not be stayed on payment of a sum certain and costs, and plaintiff stated he proceeded for a larger sum, but afterwards, on payment of that sum into court, took it out, and obtained an order for taxation of costs, and the defendant obtained a rule to show cause why the master should not tax him his costs subsequent to the issuing the summons, but which, under the particular circumstances of the case, was discharged with costs. In a proper case, however, the court considered that they might interfere in the manner required. Edwards v. Harrison, 11 Price, 533.

The plaintiff is entitled to costs up to the time of paying money into court by the defendant, even after a double default to try the cause and peremptory undertaking given. Foulstone v. Blackmore, 1 Y. & J. 213.

Where the defendant had, before declaration delivered, tendered a sum of money in discharge of debt and costs, but the plaintiffs declined to accept it, the court refused to grant a rule, that upon payment of such debt and costs by the defendant into court, and upon the same being taken out by the plaintiffs, the subsequent costs should be paid by them, as their conduct did not appear vexatious or oppressive. Hatchard v. Hague, 12 Moore, 66.

In Policy Cases.—Where money is paid into court in several actions, which are consolidated, and the plaintiff, without taxing costs, proceeds to trial on one and fails, he shall be entitled to costs on the others up to the time of paying money into court. Reg. Gen. K. B., C. P., and Exchequer, H. T. 2 W. 4, 1 Dowl. P. C. 197; 8 Bing. 404; 1 M. & Scott, 430; 3 B. & Adol. 389; 2 C. & J. 197; 2 Tyr. 350; 4 Bligh, N. S. 605.

Generally, if money be paid into court, and the plaintiff does not take it out, but proceeds to trial, and recovers nothing, he is not entitled to costs up to the time of paying the money into court; but in policy cases, where there is a consolidation rule, and money paid into court, although the cause be tried, and the case follows the general practice, giving the defendant, if he succeeds, the whole costs of that action, yet the plaintiff is entitled to the entire costs of the short causes up to the time of paying the money into court. Twemlow v. Brock, 2 Taunt. 361.

If in an action on a policy, which is not included in any consolidation rule, the defendant pays the premium into court, and the plaintiff takes it out, though the plaintiff had failed in the special counts in another action on the same ship and policy, he cannot therefore be restricted from his costs of the special counts in the principal case. Redman v. Woodman, 5 Taunt. 607.

In a special count on a policy, the risk was stated to continue until the ship was unloaded, and there were common counts:—Held, that the defendant having afterwards obtained a rule to amend the rule for paying money into court, by confining it to the money counts, and for a new trial on payment of costs, and the plaintiff thereupon determining to take the money out of court, and not to proceed further, is entitled to all the costs of the action, and not merely to the usual costs of a new trial. Andrews v. Palsgrave, 9 East, 325.

The defendants in several actions on a policy of insurance paid money into court, which the plaintiff took out, without taxing the costs at that time: afterwards they entered into the common consolidation rule, and the plaintiff was nonsuited in the action which was tried:—Held, that the latter was not entitled to the costs in any of the actions up to the time of paying money into court. Burstall v. Horner, 7 T. L. 372.

The defendants in several actions on a policy of insurance paid money into court, and (the plaintiff refusing to consent to a consolidation rule) obtained a rule for staying proceedings in the others, until after the trial of one, upon the terms of their admitting their subscription to the policy, the interest of plaintiffs, &c.: and afterwards judgment passed for defendant in the case tried:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled in the other actions to costs, to the time of paying money into court. Powell v. Parkinson, 6 M. & S. 107.

Where Plaintiff takes Money out and stops.—If a defendant offers to pay part of a debt which the plaintiff refuses to accept, and the defendant then pays the money into court, and the plaintiff takes it out, the defendant is entitled to costs from the time of the offer. Marryott v. Clapp, 1 Dowl. P. C. 701.

Where a defendant took out a summons to stay proceedings on payment of a certain sum with costs, and the plaintiff refused to accept it, but afterwards, when the money was paid in under a rule of court, took it out and discontinued:—Held, that the plaintiff was only entitled to costs up to the time of the first offer, though he stated as a reason for not proceeding that he could not find a material witness. Hale v. Baker, 2 Dowl. P. C. 125.

Where in a country cause the defendant, before declaration took out a summons to stay proceedings, upon payment of a sum less than the plaintiff's demand and costs, upon which an order was made; and the defendant afterwards paid that sum into court, which the plaintiff's agent, having in the mean time consulted his principal in the country, took out of court:—Held, that the plaintiff, not having been guilty of fraud or vexation, was entitled to costs up to the time at which he took the money out of court. Haworth v. Holgate, 2 Y. & J. 257.

Where money is paid into court upon the common rule, the court of C. P. will not discharge that part of it which directs the payment of costs, unless the defendant have been prevented from making a legal tender, by the fraud or vexatious conduct of the plaintiff. Last v. Benton, 2 Marsh. 478.

In an action for work and labour, the defendants, having offered by letter to pay a certain sum for the debt, with the costs up to that time, which was refused by the plaintiff, obtained a rule to show cause why the sum of 5*l.* and the costs should not be paid into court, and further proceedings be stayed, and why the plaintiff should not pay the costs incurred since the tender; and why, if the plaintiff refused to accept it, the 5*l.* should not be paid into court, and struck out of the declaration. The court discharged the rule, it appearing that there was nothing oppressive in the plaintiff's conduct. Gibson v. Capman, 1 Marsh. 392; 5 Taunt. 840.

Where the plaintiff, an attorney, claimed 5*l.* from the defendant, as his moiety of the expenses for preparing a lease, and five years afterwards sued him for the recovery of that sum; and the defendant, before the delivery of the declaration, took out a summons to stay proceedings on payment of 15*l.* and the costs then incurred, which the plaintiff refused to accept, but proceeded in the action by delivering a declaration; and the defendant pleaded the general issue, and paid 15*l.* into court, which the plaintiff afterwards took out in full satisfaction of his demand: the court of C. P. refused to deprive him of the costs incurred between the obtaining the rule and the taking the money out of court, there being nothing oppressive or vexatious in the plaintiff's conduct. Carr v. Smithies, 6 Moore, 430; 3 B. & B. 168. And see Draper v. Neill, Jones v. Johnson, and Aspinall v. Smith, 6 Moore, 431, 436, n.; and Porter v. Pittman, 2 D. & R. 266.

Where the defendant paid 1*l.* 1*s.* into court, which the plaintiff accepted:—Held, that he was not therefore liable to pay costs as suing for a sum under forty shillings. Cadwallader v. Batley, 3 Anst. 627.

What costs.—If a defendant pay money into court upon some of the counts only, and the plaintiff take it out; the latter is only entitled to the costs of those counts. Baillie v. Caxelet, 4 T. R. 579; S. P. Skarrott v. Vaughan, 2 Taunt. 266.

If a plaintiff, for the sake of costs, delivers a declaration, and afterwards accepts from the defendant a sum which was offered to him before declaration, he shall have costs only up to the time of the plaintiff's first offer. Sawbridge v. Coxwell, 4 Taunt. 255.

Where a defendant applied to the plaintiff's attorney to settle the action the day after being served with process, held that he was not liable for the costs of the declaration. Charlwood v. Berridge, 1 Esp. 345—Eyre. S. P. Golding v. Grace, 2 W. Black. 740. But see Partington v. Williams, 2 N. R. 399, and Fawcett v. Christie, 2 B. & P. 515.

If after action commenced, and before money can regularly be paid into court, a tender is made of a sum for damages, with costs up to that time, and refused, the court will, on motion, permit that sum to be paid into court, and struck out of the declaration, and will order all subsequent costs to be paid by the plaintiff, although the plaintiff goes for other causes of action than those on which the sum is tendered. Roberts v. Lambert, 2 Taunt. 283. But see Burmester v. Hilch, 13 East, 551.

If after action commenced, and before declaration, the defendant offers to pay the debt and costs, and the plaintiff refuses to receive it, the court will permit the defendant to pay into court the debt and the costs up to the time of his offer only, and the plaintiff will be compelled to pay the costs of the application, and all costs in the action subsequent to the offer. Zeevin v. Cowell, 2 Taunt. 203.

Plaintiff's Procedure for

—If, after action brought, the debt without the knowledge of the plaintiff, the action may be proceeded in. Toms v. Powell, 7 East, 530. Esp. 40: S. P. Holland v. Johnson, 1 Camp. Swain v. Senate, 2 N. R. 9. Haw, 1 Taunt. 341.

Where the defendant, ha judge's order to stay proceed debt and costs, gave an under on or before a given day, on granted, and the costs were al the defendant refused to pay plaintiff could not compel the such payment, although the u was made before the order, as ditional in terms; and that il plied with, the plaintiff mig action as if no such order had man v. Bach, 8 Moore, 102.

Where there was an under costs of an action in a limited ti not so paid:—Held, that the p ceed in the action for nominal v. Holland, 1 Tidd's Prac. 574.

A defendant paid into court an order which did not contain taking from the defendant to p it being doubtful whether the cepted that sum, would be ent defendant offered to give the p of the term for that sum, in c opinion of the court upon the qu tiff, notwithstanding, took the c upon the production of the rule into court, had a verdict for c court, upon motion, ordered th the defendant all costs incur Jones v. Owen, 2 C. & J. 476; 1

Proof of the rule to pay mon entitle the plaintiff to a verdict mages, unless the defendant pr paid the costs under the rule master's allocatur. Horsburgh 558, n.—Ellenborough.

5. Nolle prosequi

By 8 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2, if after a plaintiff shall not prosecute his but shall willingly delay the same award the defendant his costs.

By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 32 persons shall be made defendants action, and any one or more of th nolle prosequi entered as to him such person shall have judgment his reasonable costs.

By s. 33, where any nolle prosequi been entered upon any count, or a declaration, the defendant shall be have judgment for, and recover costs in that behalf.

If the plaintiff enter a nolle pr defendant is entitled to costs under 8 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2. Cooper v. Tiffin, 3 T. R. 511.

Where a nolle prosequi is entered on any of the counts in a declaration, there was no rule for allowing costs on such counts. Hubbard v. Biggs, 16 East, 129.

In trespass against two defendants, one suffered judgment by default, and a writ of inquiry was executed as against him, and the plaintiff entered a nolle prosequi as to the other:—Held, that the latter was entitled to costs under 8 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2. Jackson v. Chambers, 2 Moore, 718.

Where, before the stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, in an action against two, one of them pleaded his bankruptcy, and the plaintiff entered a nolle prosequi as to him, and proceeded to trial, and obtained a verdict against the other, who had pleaded the general issue, the former was not entitled to costs. Harewood v. Matthews, 2 Tidd's Prac. 1018.

Even although, before plea, the plaintiff was apprized of the bankruptcy. Booth v. Middlecoat, 6 Bing. 445; 4 M. & P. 182.

6. Nonpros.

By 13 Car. 2, st. 2, c. 2, s. 3, if a plaintiff be nonprossed for want of declaration before the end of the term after appearance, the defendant is to have costs.

Where a defendant removes proceedings by a recordari facias loquelam from a county court into one of the superior courts, and signs judgment of nonpros in default of the plaintiff's appearing, he is entitled to costs. Davis v. James, 1 T. R. 371.

Where defendant removes proceedings from an inferior court by certiorari, plaintiff is not bound to follow the suit: in such case if defendant signs judgment of nonpros for want of a declaration, he is irregular, and is not entitled to costs. Clark v. Berwick, 7 D. & R. 104; 4 B. & C. 649.

The defendant, an uncertificated bankrupt at the time of his arrest, put in bail and pleaded the general issue, and afterwards delivered a plea of his bankruptcy and certificate puis darrein continuance, on which the plaintiff withdrew the record, and countermanded notice of trial, and the defendant, after a rule to reply, signed judgment of nonpros and taxed his costs; the court ordered the proceedings on the judgment to be stayed without costs. Baker v. Morrey, 1 M. & P. 138.

The court of K. B. will not allow costs upon a judgment of nonpros for not entering the issue, upon a demurrer to a plea in abatement. Micklam v. Bates, 3 M. & R. 91; 8 B. & C. 642.

7. Nonsuit.

The 23 Hen. 8, c. 5, the 8 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2, and the 4 Jac. 1, c. 3, give costs to the defendant where the plaintiff is nonsuited.

Where plaintiff is nonsuited defendant is entitled to costs. Cameron v. Reynolds, Cowp. 407.

Where a qui tam informer in debt on the stat.

21 Hen. 8, c. 13, is nonsuited, the defendant is entitled to costs. Wilkinson q. t. v. Allot, Cowp. 366.

On motion for a nonsuit, on the ground of variance between the declaration and the contract of guarantie therein set out, or for a new trial on the ground that the guarantie was not continuing, the court, being of opinion that the defendant was liable upon the contract, but that it was improperly declared on, made a rule that the verdict which had been found for the plaintiffs for the sum secured should stand, but that the defendant should be allowed to deduct therefrom his costs of the trial and taxation. On taxation, the officer allowed to the plaintiff his costs up to the notice of trial, and to the defendant all the subsequent costs:—Held, that he had done right. Allen v. Kenning, 3 M. & Scott, 80.

8. Judgment as in case of a Nonsuit.

By 14 Geo. 2, c. 17, on the plaintiff's neglect to bring the issue to trial, the court may give judgment as in case of a nonsuit.

And by s. 3, the defendant shall, upon such judgment, be awarded his costs, in any action or suit, wherein he would, upon nonsuit, be entitled to the same, and in no other action or suit whatsoever.

The costs of a rule for judgment as in case of a nonsuit, are to be paid by the plaintiff. Hut v. Boorne, Forrest, 3.

If such a rule be afterwards made absolute generally, without costs, that part of the order applies only, in the Exchequer, to the costs of the application, and not to the costs of the case. Shaw v. Mansfield, 7 Price, 709.

Where the rule is discharged on the plaintiff's peremptory undertaking, no sufficient reason having been given for not proceeding to trial pursuant to notice, the defendant, in the Exchequer, is entitled to the costs of the application. Hartwood v. Hart, 6 Price, 202.

Where a rule for judgment as in case of a nonsuit, is discharged upon a peremptory undertaking, costs incurred at the sittings in consequence of notice of trial are not allowed, unless mentioned in the rule. Partington v. Wyatt, 6 Bing. 171; 3 M. & P. 316.

A rule for judgment as in a case of a nonsuit for not proceeding to trial after issue joined in an ejectment and notice of trial given, discharged on a peremptory undertaking without costs, when the plaintiff gave a satisfactory reason for not proceeding pursuant to his notice, and had done all he could to apprise the defendant as early as possible that he should not try the cause. Ward v. Burge, 7 Price, 531.

Action against two, judgment against one by default, rule for judgment for the other as in case of a nonsuit, yet this defendant cannot have his costs taxed as in such a case. Weller v. Gyles, 1 Barr. 358.

Where the motion is discharged on a peremptory undertaking, the defendant is not in all cases entitled in the Exchequer to the costs of the application as of course. Brown v. Tanner, 13 Price, 503; McCl. 593.

Where he gives a fair reason for not having proceeded, the costs abide the event. Id.

Contrary to the old practice, by which they were allowed to the defendant. Id.

The court of Exchequer discharged a rule for judgment as in case of a nonsuit, with costs, where the plaintiff showed reasonable ground for not proceeding to trial, and had offered the defendant, out of court, a peremptory undertaking to try at the next assizes. Challiner v. Leech, 13 Price, 666.

9. Not proceeding to Trial.

Where notice of trial for the Spring Assizes had been given, and the cause was made a remanet to the next summer assizes; and the defendant, having then attended with his witnesses, and found that the cause was not set down, afterwards applied for costs to be paid by the plaintiff for not proceeding to trial:—Held, that he was not entitled to such costs. Gains v. Bilson, 1 M. & P. 17; 4 Bing. 414.

Where a corporation were defendants in a cause in which the record was withdrawn, in consequence of the absence of a material witness, who was a member of the corporation, and it did not appear that his absence arose from fraud or the act of the other corporators:—Held, that the prosecutor must pay the costs of not proceeding to trial pursuant to notice, as the absence of the witness, although without sufficient excuse, arose entirely from his own act. Rex v. Great Yarmouth, 5 B. & A. 531.

Where a trial was put off at the instance of the defendant, who undertook to pay the costs of the day and also of the application, the court of C. P. granted an attachment for non-payment. Rice v. Brown, 1 B. & P. 39.

The payment of costs for not proceeding to trial is not a condition precedent to the party's right to proceed to trial. Doe d. Hope v. Carter, 1 M. & Scott, 516; 8 Bing. 330.

Unless it is so specified in the rule. Wilson v. Collins, 8 Bing. 374.

III. OPERATION OF COURTS OF REQUESTS' ACTS.

1. Statutes.

[For the Cases upon the Jurisdiction of the several Courts of Request, and upon the Construction of the several Statutes, see tit. INFERIOR COURTS, Div. Courts of Request.]

By 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 104, s. 12, (London Act), of any action shall be commenced in any other court than the court of Requests, for any debt not exceeding 5*l.*, and recoverable by virtue of the acts in the court of Requests, the plaintiff shall not, by reason of a verdict for him, or otherwise, be entitled to any costs; and if the verdict shall be given for the defendant, and the judge shall think fit to certify that the debt ought to be in the court of Requests, the double costs.

By 23 Geo. 2, c. 33, s. 19, an action of debt or assumpsit any of the superior courts at V a defendant who shall live and of Middlesex, and be liable to county court, and the jury upon damages for the plaintiff and judge shall, in open court, certify the record that the freehold or land, or that an act of bankruptcy in question at such trial, the plaintiff costs, but the defendant shall Evans*, 2 East, 135.

2. Part Payments in Re

Where, before action, a debt had under 40*s.* by part payment, the plaintiff is deprived of costs by the Middlesex gale v. Bernard, 4 Bing. 169; 12

Where the plaintiff's witness paid debt, which was originally above 40*s.* by part payment below 40*s.* by part payment brought, the case was held to Southwark Act, 22 Geo. 2, c. 47. Keo, 8 East, 28. And see Fountain Taunt. 60.

So, upon the London Act. Hors 8 East, 317.

Where the plaintiff had claimed defendant on two bills of exchange, and had been made on the general account was a fit question to be tried whether the cause of action had been liquidated refused to deprive the plaintiff of his genton v. Hood, 2 Chit. 147.

The court will not allow a suggestion for double costs, under the Middlesex Act, where the original debt, being above 40s., has, by a balance of accounts, been reduced below that sum. McCollum v. Carr, 1 B. & P. 223.

Where an action was brought in K. B. for a debt of 9l. 17s., and the plaintiff's demand was reduced by partial payments on account, and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for 1l. 13s.:—Held, that the defendant, who resided within the jurisdiction, was entitled, under the Middlesex Act, to his double costs of suit. Chadwick v. Bunning, 8 D. & R. 155; 5 B. & C. 532; 2 C. & P. 106; R. & M. 306.

Although it appeared by affidavit that the debt originally exceeded 40s., and although the plaintiff had failed in proving some of the items in his bill. Id.

Where a demand for plumber's work, and new materials found, amounting in value to 8l., was reduced below 5l. by the plaintiff's taking the old lead and allowing for it, instead of using it as far as it would go, in which case the original demand would have been under 5l., under the Southwark Act, 46 Geo. 3, c. 87, it is not a demand reduced below 5l. by balancing an account within the exception in the 12th section. Porter v. Philpot, 14 East, 344.

Where the plaintiff sued in a superior court for 34l. ascertained by a surveyor to be due to him for measured work and labour, done within the jurisdiction of the Rochester court of Requests, and the defendant proved payment to the amount of 24l., and the jury, estimating the work at 26l. found for the plaintiff only 1l. 2s. damages:—Held, that this was not a case in which the defendant was entitled to enter a suggestion to deprive the plaintiff of costs, under the stat. 48 Geo. 3, c. 51, on the grounds, first, that he had reasonable cause for litigating his demand; secondly, that if the defendant intended to take advantage of 22 Geo. 3, it should have formed part of his defence at the trial; and lastly, that it fell within the exception contained in the 13th section of 48 Geo. 3. as being the balance of an account or demand originally exceeding 5l. Harsant v. Larkin, 7 Moore, 68; 3 B. & B. 257.

Where the plaintiff in assumpsit failed to prove his special counts, but upon the common counts recovered less than 5l. upon the balance of an account which contained items both on the debit and credit side:—Held, that by the London Act he was deprived of costs, it appearing that the defendant resided and traded in London. Fomin v. Oswell, 1 M. & S. 393; S. C. not S. P. 3 Camp. 357.

In an action to recover 3l. 6s. 6d. remaining due to the plaintiff on a bill of exchange for 8l. 6s. 6d., which bill was given to secure the balance of an account between the parties originally amounting to more than 400l.:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to enter a suggestion to deprive the plaintiff of his costs under the Boston Act, (47 Geo. 3, s. 2, c. 1,) as s. 15 provides that the commissioners are not empowered to decide on any debt for any sum being the balance of an account on demand originally exceeding 5l. Abbey v. Lill, 2 M. & P. 534; 5 Bing. 299.

A balance of less than 5l. due on a bill of exchange for 17l., drawn payable in London, and reduced by previous payment, was held a debt under 5l. arising within the jurisdiction of the Halifax Baron Court, the parties residing at Halifax. Walker v. Watson, 8 Bing. 414; 1 M. & Scott, 674.

3. Set-off.

Where a plaintiff sued a defendant for 22l. for work and labour, who pleaded a set-off amounting to 16l., but refused to furnish the plaintiff with an account until after the commencement of the action, in which the plaintiff recovered a verdict for less than 10l.:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to enter a suggestion on the roll to deprive the plaintiff of his costs under the Bath Act (45 Geo. 3, c. 67, s. 47). Cottrell v. Langman, 9 Moore, 625.

An action may be brought in a superior court when the demand is above 40s., though it be reduced by a set-off. Gobed v. Birt, 2 Chit. 34.

Where a plaintiff recovers less than 4l. against a defendant, resident within the jurisdiction of the Middlesex Act, and his demand has not been reduced by set-off, the defendant is entitled to double costs. Jones v. Harris, 1 Dowl. P. C. 374; S. P. Humphreys v. Amos, 1 Dowl. P. C. 376.

4. Payment into court, and Tender.

Payment of money into court is an admission of the jurisdiction of the superior court, so as to prevent a defendant from taking any objection on the ground of a court of conscience act. Milner v. Williams, 5 Esp. 19—Ellenborough.

He cannot therefore fix the plaintiff with costs by pleading the London Act. Id.

A tender and payment into court, by which the plaintiff's claim is reduced below 40s., will not entitle the defendant to enter a suggestion on the London Act, although the issue on the tender is found for the defendant. Weistell v. Atkinson, 3 Bing. 289; 11 More, 14.

Where the defendant pleads a tender to an action for goods sold, it does not preclude him from entering a suggestion upon the roll to deprive the plaintiff of his costs under the London Act. Jordan v. Strong, 5 M. & S. 196.

5. Judgment by Default.

After judgment by default, and the damages assessed upon a writ of inquiry, the defendant may, under the London Act, come into court and move to stay proceedings on payment of the damages assessed without costs. Dunster v. Day, 8 East, 239.

So, where the plaintiff sued a defendant in a superior court for a demand above 5l., and upon judgment by default the jury reduced the damages to 5l., and it appeared that the defendant at the time of action brought, resided within the jurisdiction of the London court of Requests. Fleming v. Davies, 5 D. & R. 371.

After judgment by default, and writ of inquiry executed, the defendant cannot enter a suggestion under the Middlesex Act, to deprive the plaintiff of costs. Strutton v. Whitwell, 1 M. & R. 562.

Nor can a suggestion be entered under that act, to entitle the defendant to double costs, after judgment by default and writ of inquiry; but only where there has been a trial. Harris v. Lloyd, 4 M. & S. 171.

6. Effect of other Things.

Semle, that the amount found by the verdict of the jury, and not the sum which the plaintiff claims to be due, is to be considered the debt for which the action is brought, and is to decide whether the plaintiff ought to have been sued in the court of Requests. Baddley v. Oliver, 1 C. & M. 219; 1 Dowl. P. C. 598; 3 Tyr. 145.

So, held on the London Act. Shaddick v. Bennett, 7 D. & R. 229; 4 B. & C. 769.

If a debt be reduced below 5*l.* by a plea of the statute of limitations, the case is within the London Act, and the plaintiff is not entitled to costs. Id.

Jurisdiction is given to the Bradford court of Requests, where the debt demanded does not exceed 5*l.* which means rightfully demanded; and if the plaintiff sues elsewhere, and recovers less than 5*l.* he will not be entitled to his costs. Drew v. Coles, 1 Dowl. P. C. 580; 2 C. & J. 505.

The defendant is entitled to have a suggestion entered to deprive the plaintiff of costs, where he does not recover 5*l.*, though his demand was in reality more than that amount, but he failed to prove it, through the absence of witnesses. Moore v. Jones, 2 Dowl. P. C. 58.

If there is a plea of tender as to part, and non assumpsit as to the residue, and the plea of tender being found for the defendant, the balance proved on the non assumpsit is under 40*s.*, yet, if that, added to the sum tendered, exceed 40*s.*, the defendant, though subject to the jurisdiction of the county court of Middlesex, is not entitled to double costs. Heaward v. Hopkins, 2 Dougl. 448.

If the plaintiffs sue in a superior court for a demand of above 40*s.*, which at the trial is cut down below that sum by the defence of infancy; and the jury thereupon find the damages for the plaintiff under 40*s.*; the defendant, residing in Middlesex at the time of the action brought, and liable to be summoned to the county court there, is entitled to enter a suggestion on the roll to that effect, entitling him to double costs of suit. Bateman v. Smith, 14 East, 301.

Where a cause is referred to arbitration, and the costs are to abide the event of the award, the defendant is entitled to them, if it appear by the award that the plaintiff's demand was originally under 40*s.*, and he might have recovered in a court of conscience. Butler v. Grubb, 2 Tidd's Prac. 884; 3 Dougl. 217.

And an award of less than 5*l.* will bring a cause within the London Act. Day v. Mearns, 2 Chit. 156.

The defendant cannot enter a suggestion on the roll, under the Middlesex Act, if a verdict is found for 1*s.* damages upon a plea in abatement of. Le Pelletier, 1 Chit. 636.

Where the plaintiff recovers less than 5*l.*, and no objection to entering a suggestion is made to that effect, under the London Act, the plaintiff believed he had a more than that sum. Young v. Young, 145; 6 Taunt. 452.

Where, in an action against a defendant who resided in the Isle of Wight, by consent for 5*l.*, when the plaintiff claimed upwards of 6*l.*:—Held, that for the summary recovery of the debt, the plaintiff was not entitled to costs. Oakes v. Albin, 13 Price, 79.

The defendant is entitled to costs under the London Act, though he delays that if the plaintiff had postponed his action a few months, the action would have been good. Tucker v. Crosby, 2 Taunt. 145.

Where a plaintiff recovers in a transitory action against a defendant within the jurisdiction of the county court of Requests' Act, the defendant is not entitled to a suggestion to deprive the plaintiff of costs, although the plaintiff resides out of the county, and the cause of action did not accrue within the jurisdiction. Graham v. Brown, 309; 2 C. & J. 327; 2 Tyr. 145.

7. Course of Proceedings.

The proper mode for the defendant to enter a suggestion on the record after judgment is by a writ of inquiry. H. Black. 351.

Where the plaintiff, having obtained a general demurrer to such a writ of inquiry, on which the damages were assessed at less than 40*s.*, five days before the end of the term, and signed final judgment at the day of the term; the court of the county of Middlesex refused to direct the plaintiff's taxation of costs to the plaintiff, on an affidavit stating the former proceedings, and that the defendant was residing within the jurisdiction of the inferior court; because the plaintiff had not entered a suggestion, and no judgment was signed. Id.

The Southwark Act, 22 Geo. 4, c. 13, s. 1, may be pleaded to an action brought in the county court. Id.

Under the London Act, the plaintiff is not obliged to pay the costs of the proceedings on paying the money, and not to require a suggestion. Vickers, 1 Chit. 636, n.

The court will not stay proceedings under the Middlesex Act, on an affidavit stating that the plaintiff is under 40*s.*, and that the parties are within the jurisdiction of an inferior court. v. Dyche, 2 Chit. 395.

A defendant living within the jurisdiction, may plead the Westminster Act, if he is sued in one of the superior courts for a debt under 40s. Taylor v. Blair, 3 T. R. 452.

But, if he omit to do so, the court will not, after verdict, either enter a suggestion on the record that the defendant lived within the jurisdiction, or stay the proceedings. Id.

Where there is a verdict for 40s. the defendant may suggest on the roll that he resided in Middlesex, in order to have the benefit of the Middlesex Act. Fitzpatrick v. Pickering, 2 Wils. 68; 1 Wils. 19.

If an action against a person within the jurisdiction of the Bath court of Requests be brought elsewhere, the court, on motion, will deprive the plaintiff of costs. Baildon v. Pitter, 3 B. & A. 210; 1 Chit. 635. And see Axon v. Dallimore, 3 D. & R. 51.

The court of C. P. refused to stay proceedings before verdict, upon payment of debt without costs, upon the ground that the action ought to have been brought in the Bath court. Meredith v. Drew, 8 Bing. 141; 1 M. & Scott, 225; 1 Dowl. P. C. 252.

Under the St. Alban's Court of Requests' Act, 25 Geo. 2, c. 38, the defendant must plead his residency within the liberty; and if he omit to do so, he will not be allowed to enter a suggestion to deprive the plaintiff of his costs where the verdict is under 40s. Anstee v. Liley, 1 M. & R. 564.

The court of Exchequer will not, on a motion to enter a suggestion for costs on the roll, receive the facts from affidavits, but will require the judge's report. Oakes v. Albin, 13 Price, 793; M'Clel. 582.

Where a rule nisi for entering a suggestion has been obtained on affidavit, and affidavits have been made on the other side, and used in showing cause, fresh affidavits for the purpose of controverting the statements of the latter, cannot be read in support of the rule. Id.

If the plaintiff in an action of assault, having recovered only 20s. damages, whereby he is entitled to no more than 20s. costs, bring an action on the judgment; and obtaining judgment by default in that action, enter it up for debt and costs, the court, on affidavit of the defendant being resident in the city of London, and liable to be summoned to the court of Requests, will, under the London Act, set aside the judgment as to the costs. Foott v. Coare, 2 B. & P. 588.

Under the London Act, where a plaintiff as assignee recovered less than 5*l.*, the court ordered a suggestion to be entered on the record to deprive the plaintiff of costs; but defendant having given notice of his intention to dispute the petitioning creditor's debt, &c. (which was proved at the trial), it was holden that the plaintiff was entitled to the costs thereby occasioned; and the court ordered the suggestion to be entered accordingly. Ward v. Abrahams, 1 B. & A. 367.

To take advantage of a court of requests' act, to deprive the plaintiff of costs, the defendant must bring himself directly and expressly within the words of the act; and, therefore, if he merely swears "that he keeps a counting-house, or warehouse," the act only specifying a "warehouse," and leaves it doubtful whether he seeks his livelihood within the limits of the act, he does not show sufficient to entitle the court to interfere to deprive the plaintiff of costs. Newton v. Pascock, 1 Dowl. P. C. 677.

When a defendant is entitled to enter a suggestion under the Middlesex Act, the plaintiff is bound to find the record, or be answerable for the default of his attorney who withholds it. Jones v. Harris, 1 Dowl. P. C. 433.

8. When Application to be made.

After final judgment, the defendant is too late to apply to the Court under a court of requests' act, in order to deprive the plaintiff of costs. Calvert v. Everard, 5 M. & S. 510.

It is too late in the term, for the defendant after judgment signed, and execution levied, to enter a suggestion on a court of conscience act to deprive the plaintiff of his costs if he could have applied in the same term. Watchers v. Cook, 2 M. & S. 348.

A party entitled to enter a suggestion for the purpose of depriving the plaintiff of his costs, under a court of requests' act, must apply promptly, and it is not sufficient that he applies before final judgment is signed: where a defendant might have applied in Easter Term for such a purpose, but suffered all that term to elapse, and did not apply till Trinity Term:—Held, that he was too late, though the delay occurred through a negotiation having taken place respecting the costs. Hippesley v. Laying, 7 D. & R. 265; 4 B. & C. 263.

Where a judge, at the trial, in pursuance of the 1 Will. 4, c. 7, orders that the plaintiff shall have execution within a limited time, and judgment is thereupon entered up, and execution is issued, and the amount paid under a ca. m., the defendant is not precluded from applying to the court above, to enter a suggestion to deprive the plaintiff of costs, under an act for a local court of requests, provided he comes to the court within the first four days of the next term. Baddley v. Oliver, 1 C. & M. 219; 1 Dowl. P. C. 598; 3 Tyr. 145.

A judge at the assizes has no power to order such a suggestion to be entered. Id.

IV. OPERATION OF STAT. 43 ELIZ., c. 6.

(Certificate against costs.)

By 43 Eliz. c. 6, if upon any action personal in any of the superior courts at Westminster, not being for any title or interest of land, nor concerning the freehold or inheritance of any land, nor for any battery, it shall appear to the judges of the court, and so signified or set down by the justices before whom the same shall be tried, that the debt or damages to be recovered therein shall not amount to 40*s.*, or above, no more costs than the sum recovered shall be awarded to the plaintiff, but less at the discretion of the court.

Where the judge certifies under the 43 Eliz., in actions of assault, there shall be no more costs than damages. Walker v. Robinson, 1 Wils. 93; 2 Str. 1232.

A judge may certify, although there be pleas of justification. Broadbent v. Woodhead, 2 Tidd's Prac. 988.

In an action for assault, battery, and false imprisonment, if the verdict be for 1s., and the judge certify under 43 Eliz., the plaintiff will be deprived of his costs, though a battery was proved at the trial. Wiffin v. Kincard, 2 N. R. 471.

Even where there was a separate count for the false imprisonment. Briggs v. Bowgin, 2 Bing. 333; 9 Moore, 628.

If a plaintiff sue for assault, battery, and imprisonment, but only prove an imprisonment, and obtain one farthing damages, a certificate of the judge under 43 Eliz. will deprive him of costs. Emmett v. Lyne, 1 N. R. 255.

If the plaintiff in trespass for beating the plaintiff's dog, recover less than 40s., the judge may certify under 43 Eliz., to prevent his recovering more costs than damages. Dand v. Sexton, 3 T. R. 37.

If, in an action on the case for an injury done to the plaintiff's right of common, by digging turves there, the judge certify under 43 Eliz. that the damages did not amount to 40s., the plaintiff shall have no more costs; for the interest or title of the land does not necessarily come in question in such action. Edmonson v. Edmonson, 8 East, 294.

Where the plaintiff recovered 5s. damages in trespass for taking his cart, and the judge certified under 43 Eliz., the court would not allow the plaintiff his costs. Pyeburn v. Gibson, 8 Moore, 450.

An issue on a plea of license, in trespass, found for the plaintiff, with 1d. damages, warrants a certificate of the judge, under 43 Eliz. Howard v. Chesbire, 1 Ld. Ken. 245.

In trespass for entering the plaintiff's close, and digging a ditch, and cutting down a tree, with a count on an asportavit, to which the defendant pleaded not guilty and liberum tenementum, where the material question on the trial was, whether the tree grew on the plaintiff's or defendant's ground, the jury found a verdict for the former, with 37s. damages, (the value of such tree,) and the judge certified under 43 Eliz.:—Held, on a motion, that the master should be ordered to tax the plaintiff his costs, as the action was not within the statute; that notwithstanding the certificate, the plaintiff was entitled to his full costs; for although the title to the freehold did not in fact come in question, it might on the record so framed; and the cause could not have been tried in an inferior court. Littlewood v. Wilkinson, 9 Price, 314.

Where a statute prohibits an act, and gives damages for the violation, with costs, it does not take away the judge's power to certify under 43 Eliz. that the costs are less than 40s. Williams v. Miller, 1 Taunt. 400.

Though the statute 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 19, speaks of "full costs," it does not take away the judge's power to certify under 43 Eliz. that the costs are less than 40s. Irwin v. Reddish, 1 D. & R. 313; 5 B. & A. 796.

Where a plaintiff furnished defendant's wife with articles of dress, which were rendered unnecessary by the defendant's having supplied her wardrobe amply, and in an action for the price of the articles, (18l. 5s. 6d.), the jury found a verdict for plaintiff for 10s., the judge of C. P. certified to deprive him of costs. Seaton v. Benedict, 2 Bing. 187; 2 M. & P. 301.

A certificate to deprive the plaintiff of costs may be indorsed on the postea after costs have been taxed, although the attorney for the defendant was present, and did not object to such taxation. Foxall v. Banks, 5 B. & A. 536.

To a declaration of trespass quare domum fregit, with a count de bonis asportatis, the defendant pleaded the general issue, and accord and satisfaction, (the question at the trial being whether a term for years had expired), and the jury found a general verdict for the plaintiff, with damages under 40s., and the judge certified the amount of damages under 43 Eliz.:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to costs notwithstanding the certificate. Wright v. Piggin, 2 Y. & J. 544.

Where the plaintiff in an action against an attorney recovers less than 40s., the judge may certify under 43 Eliz., and deprive the plaintiff of costs. Wright v. Nuttall, 10 B. & C. 492.

V. OPERATION OF STAT. 21 JAC. 1, c. 16.

(Slander.)

By 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 6, in all actions for slanderous words, if the jury either upon trial, or writ of inquiry, shall find or assess damages under 40s., the plaintiff shall only recover the same amount of costs as the damages given.

In an action for words, if they be in themselves actionable, and less damages than 40s. are found, full costs shall not be allowed, unless a colloquium and special damage be laid. Surman v. Shelleto, 3 Burr. 1688.

In actions for words with special damage, if a verdict be found for the plaintiff, and the words are in themselves actionable, no more costs than damages are allowed; but if otherwise, full costs. Collier v. Gaillard, 2 W. Black. 1062.

In actions for words not in themselves actionable, but where special damage is laid, the plaintiff is entitled to full costs, of whatsoever amount the damages found or assessed may happen to be. Greaves v. Warner, Hull. Costs, 28.

Where, in an action for slander, some of the counts in the declaration are for actionable words, and others for words not actionable, and special damage is laid, referring to all the counts, and the plaintiff has a verdict on the whole declaration; though the damages recovered be less than 40s., he is entitled to full costs. Saville v. Jardine, 2 H. Black. 531.

The stat. 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 6, is confined to actions for slanderous words spoken of the person, and does not extend to actions for libel, or slander of title, &c. Hall v. Warner, 2 Tidd's Prac. 997.

Although formerly it was thought that no costs were recoverable in scan. mag., the court ordered the costs to be taxed. Bolingbroke (Lord) v. Woodfall, Hull. Costs, 34.

In slander, though the defendant justify, and it be found against him, yet if the damages be under 40s., the plaintiff cannot recover more costs than damages. Halford v. Smith, 4 East, 567.

In an action for slanderous words, actionable only because spoken of and concerning the plaintiff in the way of his business, less than 40s. being recovered, the plaintiff is only entitled to the same amount of costs and damages. Greenfell v. Pierson, 1 Dowl. P. C. 406. And see Berry v. Perry, 2 Ld. Raym. 1588; Turner v. Horton, Willes, 438.

VI. OPERATION OF STAT. 22 & 23 CAR. 2.

(Certificate for Costs.)

By 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 9, s. 136, in all actions of trespass, assault, and battery, and other personal actions, wherein the judge at the trial of the cause shall not find and certify under his hand, upon the back of the record, that an assault and battery was sufficiently proved, or that the freehold or title of the land mentioned in the declaration was chiefly in question, the plaintiff, in case the jury shall find the damages to be under 40s., shall not recover any more costs than damages.

When Assault justified.—If, to a declaration stating that the defendant assaulted the plaintiff, and beat, bruised, wounded and ill-treated him, the defendant plead the general issue, and a justification as to the assault and ill-treating only, by a plea of molliter manus imposuit:—Held, that such latter plea admitted a battery, and that the plaintiff was entitled to full costs, although he had obtained a verdict for 1s. damages only, and the judge had not certified at the trial. Johnson v. Northwood, 1 Moore, 420; 7 Taunt. 689.

If, to an action for an assault and battery, the defendant plead the general issue and a justification to the whole, and the plaintiff obtain a verdict with damages under 40s., the plaintiff is entitled to full costs. Smith v. Edge, 6 T. R. 562.

In trespass for an assault and battery, where the defendant justifies the assault only, and the plaintiff obtains damages under 40s., and the judge does not certify, the plaintiff is entitled to no more costs than damages. Page v. Creed, 3 T. R. 391; S. P. Brennan v. Redmond, 1 Taunt. 16.

Assault with other injuries.—Where a declaration in trespass contained two counts, the first for assaulting the plaintiff and destroying a scraper affixed to his house; and the second for destroying the scraper; and the jury found a general verdict for him, damages 2s.:—Held, that he was entitled to his full costs. Reece v. Lee, 7 Moore, 269.

There shall be no more costs than damages in trespass for an assault, battery, and tearing the plaintiff's clothes, if the jury find that the tearing was in consequence of the beating, and give less than 40s. damages. Cotterill v. Tolly, 1 T. R. 655.

Where, in trespass for assault and battery, the count, after stating the battery, goes on, "and the said defendant then and there tore the clothes, &c., of the plaintiff, (specifying them,) wherewith he was then and there clothed, and which he then and there had on, &c.," and the damages are found under 40s., and the judge does not certify, the plaintiff is not entitled to more costs than damages. Mears v. Greenaway, 1 H. Black. 291; S. P. Lockwood v. Stannard, 5 T. R. 462.

To a similar declaration, the defendant pleaded that he was not guilty of the said supposed assaults, in manner and form as the plaintiff had complained against him; and the jury having found a verdict for the plaintiff, damages 20s., and the judge not having certified:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to no more costs than damages, as the plea in substance denied the battery and tearing of the clothes, as well as the assault. Weatherell v. Howard, 10 Moore, 582; 3 Bing. 835.

If one count state an assault on a man, and an assault on the horse which he is riding, and the jury give a verdict with general damages under 40s., the plaintiff shall have no more costs than damages. Bannister v. Fisher, 1 Taunt. 357.

Trespass for assaulting, beating, and turning out of a room, whereby plaintiff was prevented from exercising the business of an attorney there. Plea, not guilty; verdict for the plaintiff, damages 1s.:—Held, that he was not entitled to more costs than damages. Daubney v. Cooper, 10 B. & C. 830.

If, in an action of trespass and assault for criminal conversation, the damages given at the trial are 1l. 11s. 6d., the plaintiff shall have full costs, without a certificate of the judge under the stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. Batchelor v. Bigg, 3 Wils. 319; 2 W. Black. 854.

Trespass to real Property.—In trespass for throwing stones, &c., at the plaintiff's window belonging to his dwelling-house, and breaking the glass, &c., if the plaintiff recover less than 40s. he is entitled to no more costs than damages, unless the judge certify that the title to the house came in question. Adlem v. Grimes, 6 T. R. 281.

In trespass for breaking free warren, though damages under 40s., the plaintiff shall have full costs. Dacre (Lord) v. Tebb, 2 W. Black. 1151.

On trespass for breaking the plaintiff's close and digging up the soil upon the place in which &c., and taking and carrying away the same, if the defendant plead not guilty, and a verdict is found for the plaintiff, but with damages under 40s., and the judge does not certify, the plaintiff shall have no more costs than damages. Clegg v. Molyneux, 2 Dougl. 780.

If a defendant pleads a justification in trespass, and the plaintiff, without traversing it, recovers

Where to trespass at A., and throwing down, burning, and totally destroying the plaintiff's hedge there then erected, &c., whereby, &c., the defendant pleads the general issue, and justifies as to the throwing down the hedge, because it was erected on a common, over which he prescribes for right of common, and issue is taken on such right, which is found for him, and a verdict for the plaintiff with 20s. damages on the general issue, the facts stated in the special plea and found cannot be taken into consideration to show that the title to the freehold could not come in question on the declaration, and as on the declaration, the freehold might have come in issue, and the judge did not certify, the plaintiff is entitled to no more costs than damages. Stand v. Gemble, 7 East, 325; 3 Smith, 249.

Where a defendant justifies for a right of way, and the plaintiff replies extra viam, and the defendant pleads not guilty, the plaintiff shall have no more costs than damages, unless the judge certifies, for the title does not necessarily come in question, and, if it does, the judge ought to certify. Cockeril v. Allanson, Hull. Costs, 76.

In trespass quare clausum fregit, if the defendant pleads not guilty, and a justification which does not make title to the land, upon which issues are joined, which are found for the plaintiff with damages under 40s., still the plaintiff is entitled to full costs. Peddell v. Kiddle, 7 T. R. 659.

Where, to an action of trespass, the defendant pleads a special plea of justification to the whole declaration, and the verdict is against him, the plaintiff is entitled to full costs, although the damages are less than 40s., and the judge at the trial does not certify. Redridge v. Palmer, 2 H. Black. 2; 3 P. Comer v. Baker, 2 H. Black. 341.

In an action of trespass for entering plaintiff's dwelling-house, and making a great noise, till defendant compelled plaintiff to give him a promissory note, the jury giving only a guinea damages, no more costs than damages allowed. Appleton v. Smith, 3 Burr. 1262.

If the plaintiff in an action for mesne profits recover less than 40s., and the judge do not certify that the title came in question, the plaintiff is entitled to no more costs than damages. Dee v. Davis, 6 T. R. 593; 1 Esp. 358.

The plaintiff, in trespass for breaking his close, who recovers less than 40s., is not entitled to costs of increase, merely because a view was granted before trial, though upon the application of the defendant. Plint v. Hill, 11 East, 184.

A person acting under colour of 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, is entitled also to his full costs, as between attorney and client. Wright v. Wales, 3 M. & P. 94.

Trespass to Goods.—In trespass, the breaking a jar is sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to full been proved that the goods have been restored, and the damages are under 40s., quære, whether the plaintiff shall have full costs? Richardson v. Tamline, 1 East, 255—Fyre.

Form and Time of certifying.—Under the statute 22 & 23 Car. 2, a judge's certificate for costs in actions of assault and battery may be granted at any time between verdict and final judgment. Johnson v. Stenton, 4 D. & R. 156; 2 B. & C. 621.

An award is not equivalent to a judge's certificate under the statute. Svinglekurst v. Altham, 3 T. R. 138; 3 P. Anon. 1 Chit. 165. And see Ward v. Mallender, 5 East, 469; 2 Smith, 63.

Where, at the time of committing a trespass, the defendant asserts title, the judge will certify under the statute, although the defendant disclaim title at the trial. Hamber v. East, Peake's Add. Cas. 236—Ellenborough.

VII. OPERATION OF STAT. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23. (Hunting.)

By a ridiculous act, 4 & 5 Will. & M. c. 23, s. 10, reciting that great mischiefs ensued by inferior tradesmen, apprentices, and other dissolute persons, neglecting their trades and employments, who follow hunting, fishing, and other games, to the ruin of themselves and damage of their neighbours, it was enacted, that if any such person should presume to hunt, hawk, fish, or fowl (unless in company with the master of such person duly qualified by law), such person should be subject to the penalties of the act, and might be sued for their wilful trespass in such their coming on any person's land, and if found guilty thereof, the plaintiff should not only recover his damages thereby sustained, but his full costs of suit.

To entitle a plaintiff to full costs in an action against an inferior tradesman for hunting, &c., under the statute, he must prove the defendant to be exactly such a sort of tradesman as he describes him in his declaration, though the description be alleged under a videlicet; thus, where a defendant was called a bricklayer, and proved to be a waller and not a bricklayer:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to full costs. Dickenson v. Pearson, Hull. Costs, 93—Willm.

Quære, whether an apothecary is an inferior tradesman under the statute? The court was equally divided. Buxton v. Mayes, 2 Will. 70.

In trespass for hunting, laid upon the statute, against the defendant as a dissolute person, &c., if the plaintiff proves the trespass, but not the circumstances under the statute, he shall recover as in common actions of trespass, viz. no more costs than damages, if the damages are under 40s. Pollard v. Roll, 2 W. Black. 900.

VIII. OPERATION OF STAT. 8 &amp; 9 W. 3, c. 11.

1. Wilful Trespass.

By 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 11, s. 4, in all actions of trespass in any of the superior courts at Westminster, wherein at the trial it shall appear and be certified upon the back of the record, that the trespass upon which any defendant shall be found guilty was wilful and malicious, the plaintiff shall have full costs.

The statute only extends to actions of trespass vi et armis, and not to trespass on the case as for a nuisance, &c. Tipping v. Coot, 1 Selw. N. P. 41, n. But see Pedley v. Frampton, 3 Price, 474; and Barnard v. Moss, 1 H. Black. 107.

Overseers entering a pauper's house, and taking away his bed after the plaintiff had desired them to go away, is a wilful trespass under the statute. Anon. Woodf. L. T. 549—Heath.

But that statute is not merely confined to persons bringing frivolous actions. Lyttleton v. Cross, 4 B. & C. 117; 6 D. & R. 81.

Where it appeared on the trial that the trespass, though small, was committed after notice, and the jury gave less than 40s. damages, held that the judge was bound to certify for full costs. Reynold v. Edwards, 6 T. R. 11; S. P. Swinnerton v. Jervis, 3 East, 497, n.; 2 Tidd's Prac. 1004.

So, held after warning off. Rudge v. Bond, 3 East, 497, n.

A judge will not certify a wilful trespass unless there be proof of personal notice. Bevan v. Reynolds, Peake's Add. Cas. 217—Lawrence.

It is discretionary in the judge before whom the trial is had, to certify or not, according as it appears to him, under the circumstances proved, that the trespass was wilful and malicious. And the judge having declined to certify in a case where notice was given by the wife of the plaintiff to the defendant not to enter the locus in quo in his cart, there being no road there; notwithstanding which, the defendant persisted in going on for the purpose of viewing more conveniently the turning in of some cattle, in assertion of a disputed right of common in an adjoining inclosure of the plaintiff's, which right was found for the defendant, on a justification pleaded: the court refused to interfere. Good v. Watkins, 3 East, 495.

It was at one time held that a judge at Nisi Prius could not certify for costs under the statute out of court. Ford v. Parr, 2 Wils. 21.

But it has been since decided, that he may certify at any time between verdict and final judgment. Woolley v. Whitby, 4 D. & R. 147; 2 B. & C. 580; S. P. Swinnerton v. Jervis, 2 Tidd's Prac. 1004; 3 East, 497, n. And see Gundry v. Sturt, 1 T. R. 636; and Harper v. Carr, 7 T. R. 448.

2. Proceedings on Bonds.

By 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 11, s. 8, in actions on bonds for non-performance of covenants or agreements contained in any indenture, deed, or writing, the plaintiff may assign as many breaches as he pleases, upon which the jury are to assess damages; and upon the defendant paying the damages assessed, execution is to be stayed, but the judgment is to remain as a security for future breaches.

After judgment by default in debt on bond to secure an annuity payable quarterly; and scire facias thereon, suggesting a breach in non-payment of a quarter, and damages assessed to that amount on the statute:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to his costs on the 8th section, which directs a stay of proceedings on payment of future damages, costs and charges, toties quies; though the 3rd section only gives costs in scire facias after plea or demurrer. Brost v. Booth, 11 East, 387.

IX. OPERATION OF STAT. 43, Geo. 3, c. 46.

1. Generally.

By 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, s. 3, in all actions wherein the defendant shall be arrested and held to special bail, and wherein the plaintiff shall not recover the amount of the sum for which the defendant shall have been arrested and held to special bail, the defendant shall be entitled to costs of suit to be taxed: Provided it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court upon motion to be made, and upon hearing the parties by affidavit, that the plaintiff had not any reasonable or probable cause for arresting the defendant in such amount; and provided the court shall thereupon, by a rule or order, direct such costs to be allowed; and the plaintiff shall be disabled from issuing execution for the sum recovered, unless it shall exceed, and then only for such sum as it shall exceed, the amount of the defendant's taxed costs: and if the sum recovered by the plaintiff shall be less than the defendant's taxed costs, he may, after deducting such sum recovered, have execution for the costs.

To entitle the defendant to costs under the statute, there must be an actual recovery by him, and a compromise for less than the sum sworn to will not entitle the defendant to costs. Lamb v. Bellings, 2 Smith, 667.

The word "recover" in the act implies by verdict. Weaver v. Birdsall, 12 Price, 734.

Arrest for 100l., 10l. paid into court, and verdict for plaintiff, subject to an award; costs to abide the event: only 39l. 18s., including the 10l. found to be due: and the transactions between the parties being complicated. The court of C. P. refused to allow the defendant his costs. Turner v. Prince, 5 Bing. 191; 2 M. & P. 338.

The mere fact of a defendant being arrested for more than is recovered is not sufficient. Roper v. Shevely, 1 C. & M. 497; 2 Dowl. P. C. 14.

For the defendant is not entitled to costs under the statute, where a verdict has been taken for a less sum than that for which he was arrested, where the right to recover the whole sum claimed was fairly triable. Edginton v. Hood, 9 Chit. 147.

A plaintiff arresting a defendant under a misapprehension of a doubtful point of law, is not

It was considered that to entitle the defendant to costs, where the plaintiff has arrested him for a larger sum than he recovers in the action, it must appear clearly that his intention was malicious, or at least vexatious. Younis v. Mallison, 1 Smith, 521.

It was held that it is sufficient to show that the plaintiff had no reasonable or probable cause for procuring the defendant to be arrested for the sum sworn to, it not being necessary to show malice. Donlon v. Brett, 10 B. & C. 117; 5 M. & R. 29; S. P. Day v. Pictou, 10 B. & C. 120; 5 M. & R. 31.

The defendant must satisfactorily show to the court that the plaintiff had no reasonable or probable cause. Spooner v. Danks, 5 M. & P. 701; 7 Bing. 772; 1 Dowl. P. C. 232.

Plaintiff arrested the defendant for 500*l.* Plea, coverture. Verdict for 38*l.*, for money advanced since her husband's death. Defendant applied for costs under the statute:—Held, that to obtain her costs, it must be shown that the plaintiff knew of her coverture at the time of the arrest. Id.

Where the plaintiff failed in recovering the sum for which he arrested the defendant, the court allowed the defendant his costs, though the account was very long, and had been running for several years; it appearing that there must have been either gross neglect, or wilful overcharges in making out the account. Hell v. Forget, 1 Dowl. P. C. 696.

The statute is rather to be extended than confined in its operation. Id.

Where an attorney brought an action for his bill of costs, and arrested the defendant for a larger sum than was afterwards found to be due upon taxation, without having any probable cause for so doing:—Held, that this was a case within the statute, and if not, still that the court, in the exercise of its jurisdiction over its officers, might compel an attorney to pay costs under such circumstances. Robinson v. Elsom, 5 B. & A. 661.

Seemle, that the court will not give a defendant his costs, unless they think that the defendant might successfully sue the plaintiff for a malicious arrest. Turner v. Prince, 5 Bing. 191; 2 M. & P. 305—Best.

A defendant is not entitled to costs unless he has been actually arrested or held to special bail. Amor v. Blefield, 2 M. & Scott, 156; 1 Dowl. P. C. 277; 9 Bing. 91.

An attorney's undertaking to put in bail is not sufficient. Id.

2. Taking Money out of Court and staying.

A defendant cannot apply for costs under the 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, s. 3, if he pays a smaller sum into court than that for which he was arrested, and the plaintiff takes it out, and proceeds no farther in the action. Butler v. Brown, 3 Moore, 177*l.*, and he only paid 3*l.* into court. Porter v. Pittman, 2 D. & R. 266.

So, where a defendant was arrested for 15*l.*, and paid 6*l.* into court, which he had offered to pay before action brought. Davey v. Renton, 4 D. & R. 186; 2 B. & C. 711.

The defendant must show alioquin, that the plaintiff had no probable cause for arresting him for the amount. Clarke v. Fisher, 1 Smith, 428.

In C. P. it has been held, that if a defendant be holden to bail for a larger sum, and pay a lesser sum into court, which the plaintiff accepts and proceeds no farther in the action, the defendant may apply under the statute for costs. Laidlaw v. Cockburn, 2 N. R. 76.

If the plaintiff take out of court a less sum than that for which he originally proceeded, and under the amount fixed by the statute as that for which a defendant may be held to bail:—Held, in the Exchequer, not to be within the statute, if the plaintiff give a good reason for taking it out. Plummer v. Savage, 6 Price, 126; S. P. Warner v. Birdsall, 12 Price, 734.

3. Cross Demands.

Where there are cross demands between parties, and the balance due to the plaintiff does not amount to the sum limited by the statute, for which the defendant may be arrested, such an arrest is within the principle of 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, s. 3, and must be considered as an arrest without any reasonable or probable cause. Dromfield v. Archer, 1 D. & R. 67; 5 B. & A. 513.

The plaintiffs having arrested the defendant, and held him to bail for 1123*l.*, and consented at the trial to take a verdict of 710*l.*, they having, at the time of the arrest, a sum of 407*l.* belonging to the defendant in their hands:—Held, that he was entitled to his costs under the statute, as the balance was the sum ultimately due to the plaintiffs, after deducting the latter sum, although the account on which the balance was due was a joint account between the defendant and a third person. Foster v. Weston, 4 M. & P. 277; 6 Bing. 527.

Where there have been mutual dealings between the plaintiff and the defendant, and each has a demand against the other, and the former arrests the latter for the whole amount of one side of the account, with full knowledge of at least a part of the defendant's demand against him, although the defendant has neglected or refused to deliver his account, the plaintiff is liable to costs under the statute. Ashton v. Neale, 3 M. & Scott, 184.

4. Damages referred to Arbitration.

The plaintiff had holden the defendant to bail, and a verdict was taken for him at the trial, subject to an order of reference for ascertaining the amount of the damages, and the arbitrator awarded a less sum than 15*l.*; upon an application to the court to allow the defendant his costs, pursuant to 43 Geo. 3, c. 46:—Held, that in order to entitle the defendant to such costs, he must show that the arrest was vexatious and malicious. Silversides v. Rowley, 1 Moore, 92.

And if a defendant be arrested for 100*l.*, and the cause be afterwards referred to an arbitrator, who finds that 20*l.* only are due to the plaintiff, the defendant is not entitled to his costs on the ground of an arrest without probable cause. Pain v. Aclon, 3 Moore, 605; 1 B. & B. 278.

Defendant having been held to bail for 38*l.*, paid 2*l.* into court, which the plaintiff did not take out, but, before the cause was called on for trial, it was agreed to refer the cause and all matters in difference to an arbitrator, with power to him to examine the parties on oath, and call for books, &c.; the costs of the cause to abide the event; and the arbitrator having awarded only 1*l.* 19*s.* in addition to the 2*l.* paid into court:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to his costs. Keene v. Deeble, 5 D. & R. 383; 3 B. & C. 491.

The defendant was arrested for 30*l.* At the trial, it appearing that the plaintiff was indebted to the defendant in a small sum, a verdict was taken for the former, for nominal damages, subject to a reference to an arbitrator, for ascertaining the amount, and he found that 12*l.* only were due from the defendant to the plaintiff:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to costs, although he had tendered the sum awarded before the commencement of the action, as he ought to have pleaded the tender. Bryson v. Simcox, 1 M. & P. 355.

Defendant was arrested for 327*l.*, he tendered 250*l.*, but did not pay it into court. An arbitrator, to whom the cause was referred, awarded the plaintiff only 250*l.*:—Held not a case to entitle defendant to costs for a malicious and vexatious arrest. Sherwood v. Taylor, 6 Bing. 280; 3 M. & P. 641.

A cause and all matters in difference were referred to an arbitrator, the costs of the cause to abide the event of the award. The arbitrator found for the plaintiff a certain sum to be due on balance of accounts; but as the defendant had been arrested without any reasonable or probable cause for a larger sum than was due, he awarded him a sum of money as a compensation for the unlawful arrest, to be deducted from the balance found to be really due to the plaintiff, and directed a verdict to be entered for the plaintiff for the difference, deducting therefrom the damages awarded to the defendant. The court refused to allow the defendant costs, inasmuch as by the terms of the reference, the costs were to abide the event of the award, and that was in favour of the plaintiff. Thompson v. Atkinson, 6 B. & C. 193; 9 D. & R. 347.

The plaintiff, an attorney, arrested the defendant for 100*l.*, the amount of a bill of costs delivered, and served him with a copy of a declaration, the defendant pleaded the general issue, on which issue was joined; at the trial, the amount of the bill was, by consent of the parties, referred to the prothonotary to be taxed, and he found that 60*l.* only were due, as the plaintiff had neglected to take out his certificate for a part of the time during which the business was done:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to his costs under the statute. Hinton v. Warren, 12 Moore, 31.

5. Sale of Goods.

A vendor, arresting the vendee for the full amount of goods sold and delivered, is not liable to pay costs under the 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, s. 3, although part of the goods sent on approval had been returned to the vendor, and accepted by his servant, it not appearing that the vendor had personal notice of such return and acceptance. Roper v. Shevely, 1 C. & M. 497; 2 Dowl. P. C. 14.

Goods having been sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant, defendant objected to them for bad manufacture, and plaintiff agreed to take them back. They were accordingly returned to the plaintiff, who afterwards sent them back to the defendant, and arrested him for their value. A verdict having been entered for the value of part only, being a less sum than that for which defendant was arrested:—Held, that he was entitled to costs. Linley v. Bates, 2 Tyr. 753; 2 C. & L. 659.

A plaintiff had sold goods to defendant, to be paid for, half in ready money, and half by bill at three months. The defendant having refused to pay the half in ready money, the plaintiff arrested him for the full price of the goods:—Held, that he had no reasonable or probable cause for so doing, and that defendant was entitled to his costs. Day v. Picton, 10 B. & C. 120; 5 M. & R. 31.

Where the plaintiff arrested the defendant for money due for coals, and recovered less than the sum sworn to, the defendant was allowed his costs, the plaintiff having previously to the arrest compounded a penal action for delivering the same coals short of measure, and the arrest being for the price of such coals considered as full measure. Anon. 2 Smith, 261.

The seller of a horse warranted it sound, the horse proved to be unsound, and the seller refused to take it back; there being no agreement to take the horse back, or an express right to rescind at the time, the purchaser has only a right to sue for damages; but having arrested the seller, and recovered a less sum, it was held to be an arrest without reasonable or probable cause, and that the defendant was entitled to his costs. Gompertz v. Denton, 1 Dowl. P. C. 623; 1 C. & M. 207; 3 Tyr. 233.

6. Other Instances.

If a defendant be arrested for 15*l.* for goods sold, and be indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of 14*l.* only, on a promissory note, payable by instalments, the court of C. P. will not allow the defendant his costs, pursuant to 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, as he might have been arrested on the note. Pincher v. Brown, 3 Moore, 590.

An action of debt on bond, where the plaintiff recovers a verdict for nominal damages only, and takes his judgment for the penalty, is not within the relief of the statute, enabling the court to allow the defendant costs, if the plaintiff do not recover the amount of the sum for which he has held the defendant to bail. Cammack v. Gregory, 10 East, 525.

Where a bond is payable by instalments, some of which only are due, and the plaintiff arrests for the whole penalty, the court of C. P. will not interfere to give the defendant his costs; the penalty being, in law, the sum recovered. Talbot v. Hodson, 2 Marsh. 527: S. C. not S. P. 7 Taunt. 251.

If a defendant be holden to bail on an affidavit for 17*l.*, out of which 6*l.* 10*s.* have been paid, the court of C. P. will not set aside the proceedings, under the 51 Geo. 3, c. 124, s. 1; but his remedy, if any, would be under the 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, for having been maliciously holden to bail. Spink v. Hitchcock, 1 Moore, 131; 7 Taunt. 435.

The defendant was held to bail on an action for 25*l.*, he pleaded an abatement as to 12*l.* 10*s.*, and the general issue as to the remainder; verdict for the plaintiff for the latter sum. On motion for costs under the 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, supported by affidavit that the defendant believed the plaintiff had sued out bailable process, for the purpose of extorting from him the whole sum:—Held not a case of malicious arrest within the statute. James v. Francis, 5 Price, 1.

Where a defendant was arrested for a sum of money, in respect of the greater portion of which the plaintiff knew at the time that the defendant had obtained a discharge under the Insolvent Debtors' Act:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to his costs, as upon an arrest without probable cause. Huntingtower (Lord) v. Heeley, 7 D. & R. 369.

Executors holding a defendant to bail, without reasonable or probable cause, for a debt due to their testator, are liable to costs under the stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, s. 3. Feeley v. Reed, 5 B. & A. 515, n.

But it will require a strong case to subject an executor plaintiff to costs under the statute. Foulkes v. Neighbour, 1 Marsh. 21.

The court cannot tax defendant his costs under 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, s. 3, in an action commenced in the Palace Court and removed to C. P. Costello v. Corlett, 4 Bing. 474: S. C. nom. Costello v. Cawley, 1 M. & P. 315.

So, after a removal into K. B. Handley v. Levy, 1 M. & R. 37; 8 B. & C. 637: S. P. Connel v. Watson, 2 Dowl. P. C. 139; James v. Dawson, 1 Dowl. P. C. 341.

7. Proceedings.

A rule nisi having been obtained for allowing the defendant his costs under the 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, s. 3, the plaintiff, in answer thereto by his affidavit, denied an agreement which was proved at the trial, and swore that the whole sum claimed was justly due to him: the court acted upon the evidence given at the trial, and made the rule absolute. Glenville v. Hutchins, 1 B. & C. 91.

An application for costs, under the statute, cannot be supported by reference to the notes of the judge before whom the cause was tried. Fountain v. Young, 1 Taunt. 60: S. C. not S. P. 6 Esp. 113.

An affidavit made to support such an application must show that there was no reasonable or probable cause for the arrest. Id.

Upon an application without sufficient grounds, the court of C. P., in discharging the rule, directed the costs of the motion to be paid by the defendant's attorney. Rolfe v. Rogers, and Rogers v. Burgess, 4 Taunt. 191.

Where the plaintiff recovers a less sum than that for which he arrests the defendant, and a motion is made to give the defendant his costs, the court will take into their consideration the way in which the debt was contracted; and, therefore, where the debt sued for was for beer supplied to a person who was habitually drunk, and the court thought the plaintiff was not entitled to recover it:—Held, that this was a case of want of probable cause within the meaning of the act, though the beer was proved to have been delivered. Erle v. Wynne, 2 Dowl. P. C. 23.

X. OPERATION OF WELSH JUDICATURE ACTS.

13 Geo. 3, c. 51.]—Where at a trial at Hereford, upon a cause of action arising in Wales, the plaintiff recovered only 5*l.*, the judge thought himself bound to certify. Cooper v. Davies, 1 Esp. 463—Kenyon.

That part of the statute which relates to the plaintiff paying costs to the defendant, in personal actions arising in Wales and tried in England, unless 10*l.* are recovered, was wholly repealed from the 24th June, 1824, and the 21st sect. of the 5 Geo. 4, c. 106, enacting nearly similar provisions, except 50*l.* be recovered, did not come into operation till the 6th November, 1824; so that in all actions tried between those days, neither of the statutes applied, and the plaintiff got the same costs as if the cause arose entirely in England. Moore v. Williams, 1 C. & P. 468—Tent.

An action of covenant for not levying a fine was a personal action within the 13 Geo. 3, c. 51, s. 1. Davis v. Jones, 1 N. R. 267.

5 Geo. 4, c. 106.]—Under 5 Geo. 4, c. 106, s. 21, where a verdict was found for less than 50*l.*, it was in the discretion of the judge who tried the cause, whether he would testify that the cause of action arose in Wales, and that defendant was resident there at the time of the service of process; and his decision could not be revised by the court. Jones v. Kenrick, 2 M. & R. 448; 8 B. & C. 337; M. & M. 179.

Lord Tenterden, C. J., refused to testify where the evidence was merely that the defendant's usual place of residence was in Wales. Id.

To entitle the defendant, who at the time of the service of the writ was resident in Wales, to costs, the judge who tried the cause must have certified that the defendant was then resident in Wales.

It was not sufficient to state in the certificate the evidence from which such conclusion may be drawn. Jardine v. Lewis, 9 B. & C. 545.

The court, without a judge's certificate, would not enter a suggestion on the roll to deprive the plaintiff of his costs, in an action where the defendant resided in Wales at the time of serving process, although the sum recovered was under 50*l*. Mortimer v. Harris, 9 D. & R. 534.

XI. OPERATION OF OTHER STATUTES.

Although a plaintiff, in an action on the 5 Eliz. c. 4, be not entitled to costs if he recover, yet he must pay them if the verdict be found against him. Jeynes v. Stevenson, Bull. N. P. 194.

A certificate under 19 Geo. 2, c. 34, or 4 Geo. 3, c. 15, may be granted at a period subsequent to the trial, and out of court. Sullivan v. Montague, 1 Dougl. 106.

The costs of issuing writs of distringas under stat. 10 Geo. 3, c. 50, are to be paid before appearance, though no issue be levied. Martin v. Townshend, 5 Burr. 2725.

A judge's certificate that a custom-house officer "had probable cause for seizing goods," does not extend to injuries accompanying such seizure, so as to prevent the plaintiff from recovering damages and costs under stat. 23 Geo. 3, c. 70, s. 29, and 26 Geo. 3, c. 40, s. 31. Baldwin v. Tankard, 1 H. Black. 28.

In a suit by the crown upon a bond under the Post-Horse Act, the court cannot give costs, although the farmer of the duties is the real party against the crown. Rex v. Corum, 1 Anst. 50.

The defendant, in order to deprive the plaintiff of his costs, under 43 Geo. 3, c. 141, tendered evidence to show that the offence mentioned in the conviction had actually been committed by the plaintiff: it was held, however, that that statute applied only to cases where convictions had been quashed, and, therefore, that the evidence was not admissible for that purpose. Quære, whether it was admissible in mitigation of damages? Rogers v. Jones, 5 D. & R. 268; 3 B. & C. 409; R. & M. 129.

Held, upon the stat. 52 Geo. 3, c. 113, s. 93, (Birmingham Paving Act), which gives costs in all cases where a verdict shall be found for any defendant, that four of several defendants who had obtained verdicts were entitled to costs, although the verdict was against the rest. Hall v. Smith, 2 Bing. 267; 9 Moore, 226.

XII. SEVERAL ISSUES.

1. Part only for Plaintiff.

No costs shall be allowed on taxation to a plaintiff, upon any counts or issues upon which he has not succeeded; and the costs of all issues found for the defendant shall be deducted from the plaintiff's costs. Reg. Gen., K. B., C. P. & Exch., H. T. 2 W. 4, 1 Dowl. P. C. 193; 8 Bing. 299; 1 M. & Scott, 425; 3 B. & Adol. 385; 2 C. & J. 189; 2 Tyr. 347; 4 Bligh, N. S. 601.

The rule is prospective, and applies to all taxations after the commencement of Easter term. Cox v. Thomason, 2 C. & J. 498; 1 Dowl. P. C. 572; 2 Tyr. 411.

Before the rule, a plaintiff was entitled to the costs of those counts only on which he obtained judgment. Penson v. Lee, 2 B. & P. 334; overruling, Spicer v. Teasdale, 2 B. & P. 49; Bridges v. Raymond, 2 W. Black. 800; Norris v. Waldron, 2 W. Black. 1199. And see Tempest v. Metcalf, 1 Wils. 331; Costa v. Sayer, 2 Burr. 753.

And there being several defendants, some of whom suffer judgment by default, made no difference. Morgan v. Edwards, 2 Marsh. 201; 6 Taunt. 398.

When there are issues joined on several counts, and on some a verdict for the plaintiff, and on others for the defendant, the defendant was not entitled to costs on that part of the record in which the verdict was found for him. Butcher v. Green, 2 Dougl. 677.

If there were two distinct causes of action in two counts, and as to one the defendant suffered judgment to go by default, and as to the other took issue and obtained a verdict, he was entitled to judgment for his costs on the latter count, notwithstanding the plaintiff was entitled to judgment and costs on the first count. Dey v. Heath, 3 T. R. 654.

Under the rule, it has been held that when the general issue is pleaded to a declaration containing several counts, it tenders a distinct issue upon each count; and, upon taxation, the defendant is entitled to the costs of those counts found for him. Cox v. Thomason, 2 C. & J. 498; 1 Dowl. P. C. 572; 2 Tyr. 411.

And if a verdict be found for the plaintiff on some counts, and for the defendant on others, the defendant is entitled to have the costs of those counts which are found for him deducted from the general costs in the cause. Knight v. Brown, 2 M. & Scott, 797; 9 Bing. 643; 1 Dowl. P. C. 730.

Where, after verdict for the plaintiff, subject to a special case, one of the defendant's pleas is held bad, he is not entitled to the costs of witnesses in support of that plea. Cartwright v. Cook, 1 Dowl. P. C. 529.

Where a plaintiff succeeds on one of several issues, and the defendant succeeds on the other, but the defendant's witnesses are as necessary on the issues found against him, as on the issues found for him, the plaintiff will be entitled to the costs of all his witnesses upon the issues found for him, and the defendant to none of his. Richard v. Cohen, 1 Dowl. P. C. 533.

Where witnesses are called to substantiate charges contained in counts upon which the defendant obtains a verdict, it is in the discretion of the prothonotary to allow or disallow their expenses, as he may conceive their evidence material to those counts upon which the plaintiff succeeds. Andrews v. Thornton, 1 M. & Scott, 670; 8 Bing. 431.

Where immaterial issues are found in favour of defendant, and judgment is afterwards entered for plaintiff non obstante verdicto, neither party is entitled to the costs of the immaterial issues. Goodburne v. Bowman, 9 Bing. 667; 3 M. & Scott, 69; 2 Dowl. P. C. 206.

Where, in trespass, the jury found for the defendant upon a plea which went to the whole cause of action, and the judge thereupon discharged them as to the other issues:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to the costs of the pleadings or witnesses in respect of the issues upon which no verdict was given. Vallance v. Adams, 2 Dowl. P. C. 118.

2. Several Defendants.

By 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 11, s. 1, where several are defendants in actions of trespass, assault, false imprisonment, or ejectione firmæ, and any one or more shall be acquitted, the persons acquitted shall be entitled to costs, unless the judge shall immediately after trial, in open court, certify upon the record that there was a reasonable cause for making such persons defendants.

By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 32, where several persons shall be made defendants in any personal action, and any one or more of them upon the trial of such action shall have a verdict pass for him or them, every such person shall have judgment for, and recover his reasonable costs, unless the judge before whom such cause shall be tried shall certify upon the record, under his hand, that there was reasonable cause for making such person a defendant in such action.

The 8 & 9 W. 3, does not extend to an action of assault against several, one of whom had let judgment go by default, and the others had pleaded not guilty, which was found for them. Collins v. Harrison, 1 Selw. N. P. 41—Wilmot.

That statute does not extend to an action of debt on bond against executors, one of whom is acquitted on the plea of plene administravit præter. Norfolk (Duke) v. Anthony, 2 Tidd's Prac. 1023.

Nor does it extend to an action on the case for a malicious prosecution; although the plaintiff allege in his declaration, that the defendant maliciously caused him to be apprehended by virtue of a magistrate's warrant, and to be falsely imprisoned, and detained in prison for a long time. In such an action, one of several defendants obtaining a verdict is not therefore entitled to his costs under that statute, if a verdict pass against the others. Murray v. Nichols, 6 Bing. 530; 4 M. & P. 280.

In a case of trespass against several for taking goods as a distress; on a verdict against one, the judge granted a certificate under that statute, that there was reasonable ground for making the other a defendant, for the purpose of depriving him of his right to costs. Furneaux v. Fotherby, 4 Camp. 136—Ellenborough.

If one of several defendants in an action of trespass and false imprisonment be acquitted, a certificate granted under that statute will deprive him of his costs. Aaron v. Alexander, 3 Camp. 35—Ellenborough.

Where some defendants demurred to some counts, and the other defendants went to issue upon them, and all the defendants went to issue upon the other counts, and those defendants who demurred got judgment upon the demurrer before the issues were tried:—Held, that they were not entitled to have their costs taxed upon that judgment, under the 8 & 9 Will. 3. Forbes v. Gregory, 1 Dowl. P. C. 679; 1 C. & M. 435: S. C. nqm. Forbes v. King, 3 Tyr. 385.

Where in an action against several defendants, who sever in their defences, judgment is obtained by one whose plea amounts to an absolute bar, the other defendants shall have the benefit of it, and not pay costs; but if the plea be merely a discharge to the party pleading it, the others will still be liable to costs, if they fail on their own pleas, though the plaintiff fail as to the other. Baylis v. Dinely, 2 Chit. 153.

Where in trespass two defendants pleaded, 1st, not guilty, and 2ndly, separate justifications, and one obtained a general verdict, and the other a verdict on his justification only:—Held, that the latter was not entitled to any costs on the issue found for him. Holroyd v. Breare, 4 B. & A. 700.

Three defendants being sued in trespass for assault and false imprisonment appeared by the same attorney, but severed in pleading. The same evidence was adduced for all, with the exception of one witness, who was called for one of them separately; that one being acquitted, the master taxed him 40s. costs only:—Held, that he was entitled on taxation to recover from the plaintiff his aliquot proportion of the costs incurred by the three on their joint retainer, as well as the costs he had separately incurred, on satisfying the master that he was not indemnified by the other defendants. Griffiths v. Kynaston, 2 Tyr. 757.

One of two defendants in replevin cannot have his costs upon acquittal. Ingle v. Wordsworth, 3 Burr. 1284; 1 W. Black. 355.

On a joint plea of not guilty to trespass and assault, if one defendant be found guilty with 1s. damages and 1s. costs, and the other acquitted, the latter is only entitled to 40s. costs. Hughes v. Chitty, 2 M. & S. 172.

If there be two defendants in an action of assumpsit, one of whom suffers judgment by default, and the other obtains a verdict, he who obtains the verdict is also entitled to costs. Shrubb v. Barrett, 2 H. Black. 28.

In a joint action of assumpsit against three defendants, two of them pleaded together, and the third by another attorney. The two former only appeared at the trial, and a verdict having been found for the defendants generally, judgment was signed, and the costs taxed by those two were paid by the plaintiffs. The court, on the motion of the third defendant, refused to direct the prothonotary to review the taxation, and allow his costs. Smith v. Campbell, 4 M. & P. 469; 6 Bing. 637.

Where there are several defendants, who obtain a verdict generally, the costs of all must be taxed at the same time, although they defend separately. Id.

Where, by an order of reference made in a cause where there were two defendants, the costs were directed to abide the event, and one of the defendants neither attended before the arbitrator, nor took any other part in the proceedings before him; quære, whether upon an award in favour of the other defendant, the master had power to tax costs for the two separately? Dickins v. Jarvis, 5 B. & C. 528; 8 D. & R. 285.

3. New Assignment.

Where the plaintiff's cause of action is altogether denied by the defendant's pleas, and at the trial the plaintiff obtains a verdict on some issues, and the defendant on others, the plaintiff is entitled to the costs of the issues found for him, which include the general costs of the trial, but not the costs of the issues found for the defendant; on which, however, the latter is not entitled to claim any costs from the plaintiff: but where the defendant suffers judgment by default as to some causes of action, and pleads as to others, and the plaintiff takes issue on the pleas, and at the trial all the issues are found for the defendant, the latter is entitled to the costs of the issues found for him, and the plaintiff to those only of the judgment by default. Where, therefore, to an action of trespass, the defendant pleaded the general issue to the whole declaration, and several special pleas as to part, and the plaintiff new assigned, and the defendant suffered judgment by default as to the new assignment, and the plaintiff was bound to go to trial to get rid of the general issue, which would otherwise have barred his whole action, and he could not by any other means have obtained damages on the judgment by default:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the general costs of the cause, including those of the trial, although the jury found a verdict for the defendant on one of the special pleas, the costs of such issue being deducted, but not allowed to him on that issue. House v. Thames Navigation, 6 Moore, 324; 3 B. & B. 117; S. P. Broadbent v. Shaw, 2 B. & Adol. 940; 1 Dowl. P. C. 336.

So, although the jury find a verdict for the defendant upon all the special pleas which cover part only of the trespasses. Booth v. Ibbotson, 1 Y. & J. 354.

Trespass quære clausum fregit: pleas, not guilty, and justifications under a right of way: issue joined on not guilty; right of way traversed, and issue joined thereon. New assignment and judgment by default thereon; verdict for plaintiff 1s. on issue of not guilty; 40s. damages on the new assignment; and verdict for defendant on one of the justifications:—Held, that as the defendant had not withdrawn the general issue, and the plaintiff was put to the expense of going to trial to prove the trespass, the plaintiff was entitled to the general costs of the cause. Vickers v. Gallimore, 5 Bing. 196; 2 M. & P. 359.

Trespass quære clausum fregit: pleas, lib. ten. and four special pleas: replication, issue on all the pleas, and a new assignment; judgment by default on all the trespasses newly assigned, and a relinquishment of the four last pleas as far as they related to the trespasses newly assigned. One shilling damages assessed on the judgment by default. Record went down for trial, and verdict found for the plaintiff on the plea of lib. ten. and for the defendant on all the other pleas:—Held, that as the defendant had left the plea of lib. ten. to the declaration on the record, the plaintiff was forced to go down to trial, and therefore was entitled to the general costs of the cause. Forester v. Dale, 1 Dowl. P. C. 412.

One count in trespass, and several pleas of justification, on which issues were taken; new assignment, as to which judgment by default; venire as well as to assess the damages on the judgment by default as to try the issues; all the issues found for the defendant:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to the costs of those issues. Griffiths v. Davies, 8 T. R. 466.

So, he is entitled to the whole costs of the trial, provided no other plea averring the trespasses newly assigned be found for the plaintiff. Cross v. Johnson, 4 M. & R. 290; 9 B. & C. 613.

Where a declaration in trespass consists of one count only, and the defendant justifies part of it, and the plaintiff new assigns without taking issue on the special plea, and obtains a verdict, he is entitled to the costs of all the pleadings. Gaddy v. Sturt, 1 T. R. 636.

Where in trespass quære clausum fregit, the defendant pleads not guilty, and a justification of a right of way, and the plaintiff traverses the right of way, and new assigns extra viam; and there is a verdict for the plaintiff with 1s. damages on the new assignment, and for the defendant on the justification; the plaintiff is entitled to full costs, deducting the defendant's costs on the issue found for him. Martin v. Valance, 1 East, 350.

In trespass quære clausum fregit, the defendant pleaded not guilty, and a justification of a right of way; the plaintiff, in his replication, admitted the right of way, and pleaded a new assignment extra viam, and obtained a verdict upon the issue of not guilty, and on the new assignment, with 1s. damages:—Held, that he was entitled to full costs. Taylor v. Nicholls, 3 B. & A. 443.

So, where the defendant pleaded first, not guilty, secondly, a justification of a right of way, and lastly, liberum tenementum; and the plaintiff joining issue on the first, traversed the second and last pleas, and new assigned as to the second; and an arbitrator found for him generally on the first and last pleas, and also on the new assignment, with 1s. damages, and for the defendant on the second plea:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to his full costs, deducting the defendant's costs on the issue found for him, although the witnesses of the latter were detained at the assize by the plaintiff's having withdrawn his record for the purpose of amending it. Trotman v. Holden, 3 Moore, 555; 1 B. & B. 222.

Where, in trespass quære clausum fregit, the defendant pleaded a right of way, setting out the breadth of the way, and the plaintiff new assigns ed, to which the defendant pleaded not guilty; on a verdict for the plaintiff, on the new assignment, with 30s. damages, it was held that he was not entitled to his full costs. Cockerel v. Allanson, 3 Dougl. 109.

The question of apportionment of costs between plaintiff and defendant, on the several issues in trespass quare clausum fregit, of not guilty, right of way by prescription, by grant, and on new assignment extra viam, the first and third issues, and the new assignment as to part, being found for the plaintiff, and the second issue, and the other questions on the new assignment, for the defendant, having been brought fully before the court of Exchequer, who took time to consider it, it was decided that the defendant was only entitled to the disallowance to the plaintiff of the costs of the issues found for the defendant, and was not entitled beyond that to have the costs of those issues deducted from the costs allowed to the plaintiff. Hopkins v. Barnes, 2 Price, 136.

In trespass for cutting down trees, the defendant pleaded, first, not guilty; secondly, several pleas of justification, because the trees obstructed a highway; and the plaintiff in his replication joined issue on the plea of not guilty, and denied the highway, and new assigned cutting down trees extra viam; and the defendant joined issue on the special plea, and suffered judgment by default on the new assignment; the jury having found a verdict for the defendant on the issues on the special pleas, and assessed damages on the new assignment:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to full costs, except upon the issues on the special pleas; and that the defendant was not even entitled to costs on those issues. Longden v. Bourn, 1 B. & C. 278.

In trespass, the defendant pleaded, first, not guilty; and, secondly, justification. Issue on the first plea, traverse to the second, and new assignment for excess. Issue joined on the traverse, plea of not guilty withdrawn, &c., judgment by default on the new assignment, nol. pros. as to the issue on the second plea, and a writ of inquiry executed on the judgment by default:—Held, that the plaintiff was only entitled to the costs of executing a writ of inquiry. Ruddock v. Smith, 1 Dowl. P. C. 467.

Where, in trespass quare clausum fregit, the jury found for the defendant on the issue taken on a common right of way pleaded, and found no shilling damages, by consent, on a new assignment, to which there was judgment by default: the defendant was held by the court of Exchequer to be entitled to the general costs of the trial; and the plaintiff not to be entitled, on the taxation of costs, to have allowed to him the costs of the assessment of damages, as the costs of executing an inquiry, although he had a witness attending at the trial to prove notice given to the defendant before action brought, not to trespass extra viam: and the master having allowed the plaintiff costs on that principle, was ordered to review his taxation in that respect; the court holding that he was entitled to no more costs than damages. Herbert v. Read, 9 Price, 36.

4. What is the substantial Finding.

A declaration in trespass contained four counts for fishing in the plaintiff's several and free fishery, and taking away his fish. Pleas, first, not guilty; secondly, that the locus in quo belonged to J. S.; and thirdly and fourthly, that the several and free fishery belonged to him. The plaintiff newly assigned, setting out the abutments of his close, and traversed J. S.'s several and free fishery in his replication. Pleas to the new assignment, first, not guilty; secondly, that the close newly assigned was the soil of J. S.; and thirdly, that he had common of fishery over it. The last issue was found for the defendant, as well as that part of the first which related to the second, third, and fourth counts of the declaration. All the other issues were found for the plaintiff, with 1s. damages, and 40s. costs on the first count:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to the general costs of the action, deducting only the costs of such issues as were found for the plaintiff, on the ground that the whole cause of action had been substantially found for the defendant on the last issue. Bennett v. Coster, 4 Moore, 110; 1 B. & B. 465. And see 2 Moore, 83.

Trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's free fishery in A., and also in B., and also in A. and B.: pleas, first, not guilty; second, that the said free fisheries were parcel of a navigable harbour, &c., common to all the king's subjects. Replication, prescribing for a free fishery in the said place in right of the plaintiff's manor. Rejoinder, taking issue on such prescription:—Held, that on verdict for the plaintiff on the general issue, and for the defendant on the prescription, the latter going to the whole declaration, the plaintiff was not entitled to costs. Vivian v. Blake, 11 East, 263.

The defendant in replevin avows for rent in arrear, and that the goods had been clandestinely removed. The plaintiff pleads, first, non tennit; second, no rent in arrear; and, third, that the goods were not clandestinely removed. The last issue only was found for the plaintiff:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to deduct from the plaintiff's costs, the costs of the two first issues which were found for the defendant. Cook v. Green, 1 Marsh. 234; 5 Taunt. 594.

5. Demurrers.

If one of several pleas pleaded by defendant be adjudged bad on a demurrer to plaintiff's replication, the plaintiff is entitled to have the costs of those pleadings deducted from the costs taxed for the defendant upon the postea, if afterwards, upon trial of the issues joined on the other pleas, defendant should have a verdict, even though it should appear on the whole of the record that the plaintiff had no cause of action. Duberley v. Page, 2 T. R. 391.

Where a declaration consists of two counts, and there is a joinder in demurrer on plea to one, and plea to the other, and judgment for defendant on the former, and verdict against him on the latter, plaintiff is entitled to costs on verdict, but not defendant on demurrer. Astley v. Young, 2 Burr. 1332.

If the plaintiff take issue on several pleas, one of which is insufficient in law, and has a verdict on all the issues except that joined on the insufficient plea, which is found for the defendant, and afterwards judgment is entered up for the plaintiff, still he shall not be allowed any costs upon the issue found for the defendant. Kirk v. Newill, 1 T. R. 266.

Where in assumpsit the defendant pleaded the general issue, and the statute of limitations to the whole sum demanded, and, as to part of it, that the promises were made by the defendant's testator, and one A. B. jointly, which A. B. survived the other, and is still living; and this last issue was found at the trial for the defendant, and the other two issues for the plaintiff, who thereupon had judgment for the rest of his damages and costs:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to have the costs of the issue found for her deducted from the costs of the trial, which the plaintiff was entitled to on the issues found for him: aliter where all the issues at the trial are found for the defendant, but the plaintiff has judgment upon demurrer, and recovers damages on a writ of inquiry. Postan v. Stanway, 5 East, 261; 1 Smith, 499.

6. Certificate under 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16.

By 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, ss. 4 & 5, leave to plead several matters is given to defendants and plaintiffs in replevin; and if any such matter shall, upon a demurrer joined, be judged insufficient, costs shall be given at the discretion of the court; or if a verdict shall be found upon any issue for the plaintiff, he shall have costs, unless the judge shall certify that the defendant or plaintiff in replevin had a probable cause to plead such matter upon which the issue shall be found against him.

The statute, being a remedial statute, ought to be so construed as to advance the remedy, and this construction is analogous to that which has been put upon the statute of Gloucester. Volum v. Simpson, 2 B. & P. 368.

In trespass the defendant pleaded three different justifications to three different counts, and on issue joined had a verdict for him on two, and against him on the third:—Held, not to be within the statute, and that therefore the plaintiff was entitled, as at common law, to costs on the whole declaration. Anon. Bull. N. P. 335.

That statute only applies to cases where one at least of the special pleas is found for the defendant, which would entitle him to the general costs. Richmond v. Johnson, 7 East, 583.

If there be a certificate against any more costs than damages upon the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 6, s. 2, the plaintiff shall not have the costs of the double pleas, on which all the issues were found for him, although the judge have not certified under the stat. 4 & 5 Anne. Id.

Where some issues in replevin are found for the plaintiff, which entitle him to judgment, and some for the defendant, the defendant must be allowed the costs of the issues found for him out of the general costs of the verdict, unless the judge certify that the plaintiff had probable cause for pleading the matters on which those issues are joined. Dodd v. Joddrell, 2 T. R. 235.

7. Mode of taxing Costs.

The defendant is entitled to the costs not only of the pleadings which form, but also of the trial of those issues which are found in his favour. Brooke v. Willett, 2 H. Black. 435.

Where the jury, in returning a verdict, say that they find for the plaintiff as to part of the declaration, he will not be allowed the expenses of witnesses called to support a different part, although the verdict be entered for him generally. Cocks v. Peachey, 2 M. & R. 420.

In trespass, where two defendants appeared by the same attorney and pleaded not guilty, and separate justifications, and one obtained a verdict generally, and the other on his justification, but the plaintiff succeeded against him on the plea of not guilty:—Held, that the master in taxing the former costs was right in allowing only one half of the attorney's costs for appearance. Helroyd v. Breare, 4 B. & A. 700.

In trespass quare clausum fregit, where the costs of some issues were found for the plaintiff, and some for the defendant, and the prothonotary allowed the latter the general costs in the cause, and the plaintiff the costs of the pleadings on the issues found for him:—Held, that the costs on such latter issues included only those of the pleadings thereon; the only exception being in an action of replevin, where both parties might be considered as actors. Othir v. Calvert, 8 Moore, 239; 1 Bing. 275.

Where the defendant at the assizes pleaded a plea puis darrein continuance, to which plaintiff having replied, defendant demurred to the replication, and obtained judgment on demurrer:—Held, that he was entitled to the costs incurred since the plea puis darrein continuance only. Lytleton v. Cross, 6 D. & R. 81; 4 B. & C. 117.

Where in case against an agent for misfeasance, the declaration, in addition to special counts on the misfeasance, contained two in trover, with an allegation of special damage; and the plaintiff failed in substantiating the counts for misfeasance, or the allegation of special damage, but recovered on the common count in trover:—Held, that he was only entitled to the costs of that count, divested of special allegation, and the expenses of such witnesses only as were incurred to support the parts of those counts on which the verdict was taken. Lopes v. De Tastet, 7 Moore, 120; 3 B. & B. 292.

The court will not send a taxation back to the prothonotary to tax for the defendant the costs of pleading non assumpsit, where the plaintiff, by succeeding on another issue, has entitled himself to the general costs of the cause. Hibbert v. Fox, 5 Taunt. 660.

In an action on a policy of insurance, with a count for money had and received, if the defendant pay no money into court, but establish as a defence that the risk never commenced, the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict for the premium, though no demand of premium was made by his counsel in opening the case; in such case neither party is entitled to the costs of the first count, but the plaintiff is entitled to the costs of the count on which he succeeds, and so much of the expenses of the trial as were necessarily incurred by him in support of that count. Penson v. Lee, 2 B. & P. 330.

Where the plaintiffs brought four actions against two insurance companies for a loss by fire, and a verdict was found for the former against each company, on two of the causes only:—Held, that costs were to be apportioned equally, although three causes only were set down for trial at the same sittings, there being a demurrer pending in the other. Severn v. Olive, and Same v. Slade, 6 Moore, 235; 3 B. & B. 72.

XIII. LIABILITY OF EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

1. Suing in representative Character.

By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 31, in every action brought by any executor or administrator in right of the testator or intestate, such executor or administrator shall, unless the court in which such action is brought, or a judge of any of the superior courts shall otherwise order, be liable to pay costs to the defendant in case of being nonsuited, or a verdict passing against the plaintiff; and in all other cases in which he would be liable if such plaintiff were suing in his own right upon a cause of action accruing to himself; and the defendant shall have judgment for such costs, and they shall be recovered in like manner.

Before the statute, executors were not liable to costs either upon a nonsuit or verdict, where they necessarily sued in their representative character, and could not bring the action in their own right; as upon a contract entered into with the testator or intestate, or for a wrong done in his lifetime. Smith v. Rhodes, 2 Tidd's Prac. 1014.

The question was, whether the money, if recovered, would be assets in the hands of the executor, and, if it would, the executor declaring as such was not liable to costs. Thomson v. Stent, 1 Taunt. 322.

If an executor sued in covenant against the assor of his testator for not providing timber upon his own demand after the testator's death, he was not liable to pay the costs of a judgment in case of nonsuit, because he must have declared as an executor. Cooke v. Lucas, 2 East, 98. And see Powley v. Newton, 2 Marsh. 148; Taunt. 543; Booth v. Holt, 2 H. Black. 277.

In covenant by the plaintiff, as administratrix, in a breach subsequent to the death of her intestate, and judgment against her on demurrer, she was not liable to costs. Tattersall v. Groote, 2 B. & P. 253.

A plaintiff sued as administrator upon a contract made with his intestate, and assigned by the plaintiff to J. S., for whose benefit the action was brought; it appearing that the contract had been annulled, with the privity both of the plaintiff and J. S., and that the former was indemnified by the latter, and a verdict being found for the defendant, the court of C. P. made an order on the plaintiff to pay the costs. Comber v. Hardcastle, 3 B. & P. 115.

An administrator was not liable to costs of nonsuit when the cause of action arose in the lifetime of the intestate. Jones v. Williams, 6 M. & S. 178.

Where the plaintiffs sued as executors for the balance of an account due to their testator, and it appeared at the trial that the balance claimed arose out of matters of account between the plaintiffs in their own right as surviving partners of the testator, and they were accordingly nonsuited:—Held, that the court had no power to order the defendant to have his costs taxed, and allowed him as costs in the cause, and to become part of the judgment. Barnard v. Higdon, 3 B. & A. 213.

A. sued as executrix of B. on a policy effected by B. in his lifetime, in which he was jointly interested with C. and D. now living, and was nonsuited:—Held, that she was entitled to the privilege of an executrix, to be exempt from costs. Wilton v. Hamilton, 1 B. & P. 445.

If an executor sued as executor for money received by the defendant, since the testator's death, to the plaintiff's use, and failed, he was liable to pay costs. Goldthwayte v. Petrie, 5 T. R. 234.

If an executor declared on a trover and conversion in the testator's lifetime, and also on a trover and conversion after his death, and was nonsuited, he was not liable to pay costs. Cock-erill v. Kynaston, 4 T. R. 277.

An executor or administrator was liable for costs in trover, for a conversion after the death of the testator or intestate. Monkland v. De Granige, 2 Tidd's Prac. 1015.

If the conversion were in the time of the administratrix, and she was nonsuited in the action of trover, she was liable to pay costs, though she never was in fact in possession of the goods since the intestate's death. Bollard v. Spencer, 7 T. R. 358.

Administrators declaring in trover, on a possession of the goods by their intestate, and a conversion in their own time, and being nonsuited, were liable to costs; for the fact of their possession was immaterial, and they might sue in their own right. Hollis v. Smith, 10 East, 293.

Where after a nonsuit, it appeared on the face of the count that the plaintiffs might have sued in their own right, they were held liable to costs. Jones v. Jones, 1 Bing. 249; 8 Moore, 146.

Where a plaintiff executor added one count as executor, stating a cause of action for which he might declare in his own right, if he was nonsuited, he was liable to costs. Grimstead v. Shirley, 2 Taunt. 116.

An executor, nonsuited, &c., upon a declaration containing a count on an account stated with the plaintiff as executor, of moneys owing to him as executor, was liable for costs in respect of such count. Dowbiggin v. Harrison, 4 M. & R. 622; 9 B. & C. 666.

A declaration by an executor stated that the defendant, being indebted to the testator at the time of his death, in consideration thereof promised the plaintiff, as executor, to pay him the amount. The statute of limitations was pleaded:—Held, that the plaintiff, being nonsuited, was liable to costs, though he did not declare upon an account stated. Slater v. Lawson, 1 B. & Adol. 893.

The plaintiff sued, as administratrix, upon promises to the intestate for work and labour, and also on an account stated with the plaintiff, as administratrix, concerning money due to the intestate, and alleged a promise to pay her:—Held, that it thereby appeared that the contract was made between the plaintiff and another person within the words of the stat. 23 Hen. 8, c. 15, and therefore that after a nonsuit the defendant was entitled to the costs; but so far as the pleadings were concerned, to the costs of that count only in which the promise was laid to be to the administratrix. Jobson v. Forster, 1 B. & Adol. 6.

2. When Defendants.

Plea of plene administravit.]—Where an executor or administrator pleads several pleas to the whole declaration, and one of them is found for him, he is entitled to the postea and costs, although the other be found against him. Garmans v. Hesketh, and Cockson v. Drinkwater, 2 Tidd's Prac. 1016.

Where executors pleaded non assumpsit, the statute of limitations, and plene administraverunt, and the two first issues were found for the plaintiff, and the last for the defendants:—Held, that the defendants having established an absolute bar, were entitled to the postea and the general costs. Ragg v. Wells, 8 Taunt. 129.

Where an executrix pleaded, 1st, non assumpsit; 2d, ne unques executrix; and 3d, plene administravit; and the issues on the first pleas were found for plaintiff, and on the last for defendant; it was holden, that the last plea being a complete answer to the action, the defendant was entitled to the general costs of the trial. Edwards v. Bethel, 1 B. & A. 254.

An executor having pleaded non assumpsit, as well as plene administravit, and plene administravit præter; &c., and thereby forced the plaintiff to go to trial; the plaintiff obtaining a verdict on the non assumpsit, and being entitled to judgment of assets quando acciderint, is entitled to the general costs of the trial, though the issue of plene administravit, be found for the defendant. Hindsley v. Russell, 12 East, 232.

Upon the pleas of non assumpsit, and plene administravit, the plaintiff joined issue, and omitted to pray judgment of assets quando: the first issue being found for the plaintiff, and the second for the defendant, the defendant is entitled to the postea and general costs. Hogg v. Graham, 4 Taunt. 135.

False Pleas.]—A bankrupt executor, pleading a false plea, after commission, is liable to costs. Howard v. Jemmett, 3 Burr. 1368; 1 W. Black. 400.

Quære, whether a sham plea by an executor, of judgment recovered against himself, be deemed false within the executor's own knowledge? Barrroughs v. Stevens, 5 Taunt. 554; 1 Marsh. 211.

Judgment of Assets.]—A defendant executor is not liable to costs on a judgment of assets in futuro. Baff v. Deschamps, 2 Tidd's Prac. 1116.

Upon a judgment of assets quando acciderint, on a plea by an executor of a judgment outstanding, and plene administravit, the plaintiff is entitled to costs de bonis testatoris. Anon. 1 Ch. 629, n.

A plaintiff who takes judgment of assets quando upon plene administravit, and obtains a verdict on non assumpsit testator, is entitled to judgment for the costs de bonis testatoris, et si non, de bonis propriis. Marshall v. Wilder, 4 M. & R. 607; 9 B. & C. 655.

3. Discontinuance and Nonsuit.

Where the plaintiffs as executors brought an action on a bond given by the defendant to his testator, to which he pleaded a set-off, which the plaintiffs were advised by counsel (after notice of trial had been given) would constitute a good defence to the action, the court allowed them to discontinue, without payment of costs. Stalling v. Hammond, 8 Moore, 689.

A plaintiff who sued as an administrator was allowed to discontinue his action without costs in the Exchequer. Hugh v. Loyd, Hull. Costs, 26.

Not liable to costs upon a discontinuance, or for not proceeding to trial according to notice, unless he has knowingly brought a wrong action, or otherwise been guilty of a wilful default. Wright v. Jones, 2 Smith, 260; 2 Tidd's Prac. 1015; S. P. Bennett v. Cohen, 4 Burr. 1927.

An executor on discontinuing his action shall pay costs, where he has knowingly brought a wrong. Harris v. Jones, 3 Burr. 1451; 1 W. Black. 451.

The plaintiffs, as executors, having sued one of the co-obligors on a joint and several bond in K. B., to which usury was pleaded, suffered a nonsuit, and brought a second action against another co-obligor in C. P., in which the case having gone off pro defectu juratorum, they brought a third action against all three co-obligors, in order to exclude the evidence of one upon the usury, and moved to discontinue the second action without costs; but the court of C. P. would not allow them to discontinue on payment of costs. Melhuish v. Maunder, 2 N. R. 72.

After a double default and peremptory undertaking given, the court permitted an administratrix to discontinue an action where the declaration contained two sets of counts, the one lying on the promises to the intestate, and the other on the plaintiff as administratrix, upon the terms of paying the costs of the latter counts, there up pearing to be no vexation on the part of the plaintiff. Blakeway v. Edwards, 2 Y. & J. 559.

A side-bar rule to discontinue on payment of costs was discharged, because obtained after bail had justified. Belcher v. Gansell, 4 Burr. 2502.

Serving a rule to discontinue, does not of itself discontinue an action; there must be an appointment to tax the costs. Whitmore v. Williams, 6 T. R. 765.

Taxation of costs, without payment of them after a summons to discontinue, is no discontinuance. Edginton v. Proudman, 1 Dowl. P. C. 152.

An executor shall pay the costs of a nonpros. Haves v. Saunder, 3 Burr. 1584.

And if he wishes to be relieved from them, he should apply to the court for leave to discontinue without payment of costs. Anon. 1 Chit. 629, n.

So, administrators are liable to pay the costs of a nonpros. Higgs v. Warry, 6 T. R. 654.

4. Other Cases.

Where, in covenant by the testator, executors pleaded a judgment recovered puis darrein continuance, to which the plaintiff replied, and on demurrer, judgment was given for the defendants:—Held, that they were entitled to the costs incurred after such plea, but not those of the previous proceedings. Lytleton v. Cross, 4 B. & C. 117; 6 D. & R. 81.

An executor having pleaded non assumpsit, and a specialty debt sufficient to cover the assets, shall be permitted to withdraw the first plea, on payment of the costs occasioned only by that plea. Dearne v. Grimp, 2 W. Black. 1275.

Executors were liable to costs in error, in cases where they would be liable in the original action. Williams v. Riley, 1 H. Black. 566.

Executors or administrators were not necessarily exempted from costs on interlocutory motions. Anon. 2 Tidd's Prac. 1015.

Where the defendant pleaded the general plea of bankruptcy, to an action brought by an executor or administrator, and obtained a verdict, the plaintiff was not liable to costs under 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, s. 7. Martin v. Norfolk, 1 H. Black. 528.

Where plaintiff sued as executor, and was nonsuited upon evidence being given at the trial that the supposed testator was still alive, the court refused to allow costs to the defendant, it appearing from affidavits on both sides to be still at least doubtful whether the supposed testator were living or not. Zechariah v. Page, 1 B. & A. 386.

A plaintiff suing as executor, having been appointed under a former will, which the testator had afterwards revoked, and having surreptitiously obtained a probate of the first will, which was soon after annulled by the Ecclesiastical court, who also revoked the probate, but not till after the action had been commenced against the defendant, who was the executor of the last will, was held liable to the costs of the cause. Shaw v. Mansfield, 7 Price, 709.

An executor suing in his representative character upon a contract made with his testator, is liable to costs upon a judgment as in case of a nonsuit, where such costs have been occasioned by his wilful default. Woolley v. Sloper, 3 M. & Scott, 248; 9 Bing. 754; 2 Dowl. P. C. 208.

XIV. COSTS IN ARBITRATION.

1. Construction of Reference as to Costs.

Costs of a suit, on a rule of reference, are common costs. Marder v. Cox, Cowp. 127; S. P. 2 W. Black. 953.

Unless specially ordered otherwise. Barker v. Tibson, 2 W. Black. 953.

The general terms "costs," in a rule of reference, does not include the costs of that reference. Bradley v. Tunstow, 1 B. & P. 34; 7 Taunt. 213.

Costs of an arbitration under an order of Nisi Prius are not costs in the cause. Taylor v. Gordon, 9 Bing. 570; 2 M. & Scott, 725; 1 Dowl. P. C. 720.

Where, by the rule of reference, the costs were to abide the event of an award, that includes the costs of the reference as well as of the cause. Wood v. O'Kelly, 9 East, 436.

Where a cause has been referred by rule of Nisi Prius, and the costs directed to abide the event, that must be taken to mean the legal event; therefore, where an action of trespass was brought for pulling down the plaintiff's gates, and assaulting him; and the defendants justified to all the counts except one, under different rights of way, and pleaded not guilty to the whole; and under the above rule the arbitrator awarded a right of way to the defendants different from any of those pleaded by them, and found five shillings damages to the plaintiff for the assault, as having been committed when the defendants were attempting to exercise a right of way negatived by the arbitrator, the plaintiff can recover no more costs than damages; for the arbitrator's award is not tantamount to a judge's certificate under the 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 9. Swinglehurst v. Altham, 3 T. R. 138; S. P. Ward v. Malinder, 5 East, 489; 2 Smith, 63; S. P. Anon. 1 Chit. 185.

So, where a cause had been referred to arbitration, and costs were directed to abide the event, in an action of trespass to land, and the arbitrator found no damages for plaintiff, but directed both parties to pay their own costs:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to no costs. Willie v. Osborne, 1 Chit. 183.

By rule of court a cause and all matters in difference were referred to an arbitrator, and the costs of the cause were to abide the event; the arbitrator directed the verdict to be entered for the plaintiffs; but that they should not take out execution for the debt until they had paid a larger sum due to the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff's attorney might still take out execution for the costs. Highgate Archway Company v. Nash, 2 B. & A. 597; 1 Chit. 325.

Costs of a reference are costs in the cause, where the reference is for the benefit of the unsuccessful party. Tregoning v. Attenborough, 1 Dowl. P. C. 225; 5 M. & P. 453; 7 Bing. 733.

Where a cause is referred to an arbitrator, and the costs are to abide the event, and the arbitrator awards a specific performance of something to be done, which proves that the event in fact is in favour of the plaintiff, he is entitled to costs, although the arbitrator does not award a verdict to be entered in form; as where, in an action of trover for corn, the arbitrator, instead of awarding damages and a verdict, awarded that the plaintiff should have a right of entering the defendant's barns, &c. Anon. 1 Smith, 426.

It seems, in this case, the costs were to abide the event of the award, not "the event of the cause." Id.

The general term "costs" in an order of reference of an indictment, which stated that if the arbitrator should be of opinion that the defendant was guilty, and the prosecutor entitled to costs, the defendant agreed to pay them, does not include those of the reference and award. Rex v. Moate, 3 B. & Adol. 237.

2. Other Things.

Where a party applies to set aside an award, and fails in his application, he shall pay costs. Anon. Hull. Costs, 431.

Where an inquisition of damages was excessive, and, on a rule for setting it aside on that ground, the matter was referred to an arbitrator, to determine for what sum the verdict should stand, nothing being said as to the costs of the application at the time, and the arbitrator having reduced the damages by his award:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the costs of the application for setting aside the inquisition. Lewis v. Harris, 4 D. & R. 129; 2 B. & C. 620.

By order of reference costs were to abide the event; there were two defendants, one of whom did not attend before the arbitrator, or take any part in the proceedings before him. The master taxed the whole costs of the cause and the reference in one sum to the other defendant, by whom payment was demanded of the plaintiff. The court refused to grant an attachment for non-payment of those costs. Quære, whether the master had power to tax costs for the two defendants separately? Dickins v. Jarvis, 5 B. & C. 528; 8 D. & R. 285.

Where the authority of an arbitrator was revoked because the party could not procure the attendance of material witnesses before the arbitrator, the court refused to allow any costs. Aston v. George, 2 B. & A. 395; 1 Chit. 204.

Where, in three several actions of trespass, covenant, and replevin, brought by the same plaintiff against the same defendant, and referred to arbitration, the costs of the reference were awarded to be equally borne by the parties: and the master, on taxation, allowed the defendant, as costs of reference, two distinct sums for the attendance, loss of time, and travelling expenses of the same witnesses in two different actions; and made no allowance to the plaintiff for a sum sworn to have been paid by him to the arbitrator, as costs of the reference: the court of Exchequer discharged a rule nisi for reviewing the taxation, but without costs, it not being alleged that the two former sums were allowed for attendance, &c., in one day: the latter sum not appearing in the plaintiff's bill produced before the master, and no objection having been made at the time of taxation. Utting v. Evans, M'Clel. 12.

XV. IN PARTICULAR PROCEEDINGS.

1. Actions on Judgments.

By 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, s. 4, in actions on judgments recovered, the plaintiff shall not be entitled to costs, unless by the order of the court, or some judge thereof.

This does not extend to an action brought to recover the costs of a judgment of nonsuit. Barnet v. Neale, 14 East, 343.

Where a judgment was signed, and execution taken out for costs in an action on a judgment, without leave of the court, or a judge, under the statute, it was held irregular; but where recognizances of bail were taken in C. P., and the bail were sued in that court to judgment, and having no property, actions were brought on the judgment in K. B., in order to take their persons, costs were allowed by the court nunc pro tunc. Armstrong v. Fuller, 1 Chit. 190.

The statute does not entitle a defendant to stay the proceedings on the payment of the debt without costs, where there is probable ground for the plaintiff's also claiming interest on part of the debt. Wood v. Silletto, 1 Chit. 473.

A defendant against whom judgment had been obtained sued out a writ of error, and to an action on the judgment pleaded nul tiel record; the court allowed the plaintiff his costs of the action upon the judgment. Garnwell v. Barker, 5 Taunt. 264.

2. Demurrers.

By 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 11, s. 2, if judgment shall be given against the plaintiff on demurrer, either plaintiff or defendant, the defendant shall have costs.

By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 34, where judgment shall be given either for or against a plaintiff or defendant, or for or against a defendant or tenant, upon any demurrer joined in any action whatever, the party in whose favour such judgment shall be given shall also have judgment to recover his costs in that behalf.

The court of C. P. ordered the costs of a special demurrer to a declaration in replevin, for not inserting the name of the close in which, &c., to abide the event of the cause. Patten v. Dudley, 2 M. & P. 78.

3. Ejectment.

A new defendant in an ejectment may give a rule to reply, and nonpross the plaintiff, but he can have no costs. Goodright d. Ward v. Bad-tile, 2 W. Black. 763.

The only mode of recovering the costs of a nonsuit upon the merits in ejectment is to serve the lessor of the plaintiff with a copy of the consent rule and allocatur of costs, and to attach him if he does not obey. Doe d. Prior v. Salter, 3 Taunt. 485.

Where a lessor of the plaintiff dies after nonsuit, the court will not grant a distringas upon his goods for a contempt in the executor, in not obeying the order upon the consent rule to pay costs; and the case not being within the statute 17 Car. 2, c. 8, the defendant seems without remedy for his costs. Doe d. Lintol v. Ford, 2 Smith, 407.

Where the lessor of the plaintiff, having entered into the common consent rule to pay costs, died between the commission-day and the trial, and the plaintiff was nonsuited upon the merits:—Held, that the executor of the lessor was not liable for the costs under such rule, given by the testator. Doe d. Payne v. Grundy, 2 D. & R. 437; 1 B. & C. 284.

The lessor of the plaintiff dies before the commission-day at the assizes, and the plaintiff is nonsuited for not confessing, &c.: the executor of the lessor shall have no costs taxed on the common rule. Thrustout v. Bidwell, 2 Wils. 7.

In an ejectment the court will compel the real defendant to pay the costs, although he is not a party on the record. Doe d. Masters v. Gray, 10 B. & C. 615.

Where three ejectments were brought against a landlord and his two tenants, and the landlord obtained a rule for the consolidation of the three actions, and that the ejectment against one of the tenants (who was a pauper) should abide the event of the ejectment against the other; and that action was tried, and the lessor of the plaintiff obtained judgment, and took possession of all the tenements, the court compelled the landlord to pay the costs of that ejectment. Thrustout d. Jones v. Shenton, 10 B. & C. 110.

4. Error.

The 3 Hen. 7, c. 10, and 19 Hen. 7, c. 20, give costs of error to the plaintiff, where his judgment is affirmed on error brought by the defendant.

By 13 Car. 2, stat. 2, c. 2, s. 16, the defendant in error is to have double costs, upon affirmance of judgment after verdict.

By s. 11, the statute does not extend to penal actions, except debt for not setting out tithes.

The 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 11, s. 2, gives defendants in error costs, upon discontinuance of the writ of error, or nonsuit thereon.

The 4 Ann. c. 16, s. 25, gives them the same costs on quashing writs of error for defects, as on affirmance.

The stat. 13 Car. 2, is confined to cases where the judgment so affirmed is for the plaintiff below, and not where the defendant below obtains judgment upon a special verdict. Baring v. Christie, 5 East, 545; 2 Smith, 142.

The court of Exchequer Chamber is bound to allow double costs to the defendant in error, on the affirmance of a judgment of K. B., but it is entirely a matter in their discretion whether or not interest shall be allowed on such affirmance. Shepherd v. Mackreth, 2 H. Black. 284.

A writ of error having been quashed, because brought by a feme covert, the defendant in error is entitled to costs under stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. McNamara v. Fisher, 8 T. R. 302.

No costs are allowed on the stat. 3 H. 7, c. 10, where a writ of error is nonprossed before the transcript of the record by the clerk of the errors of K. B. Salt v. Richards, 2 Smith, 121; 7 East, 111.

Where errors are argued in the House of Lords, without having been argued below, and judgment is affirmed, though the alleged errors may be well worthy of consideration, the plaintiff in error must pay the costs of the proceedings, as if the case had not been argued at all in that house. Doran v. O'Reilly, 5 Dow, 233.

Where a judgment for a plaintiff was reversed on a writ of error in fact:—Held, that the plaintiff in error was entitled to the costs of the original action, although not to the costs in error. Anon. 2 Tidd's Prac. 1244.

Judgment having been given in C. P. for the plaintiffs on special verdict in assumpsit, which was reversed upon writ of error in K. B., the defendant is entitled not only to judgment of acquittal, but also for the costs of his defence in C. P., being the same judgment which the court below ought to have given; the defendant in such case being entitled to his costs by the stat. 23 Hen. 8, c. 15. Gildart v. Gladstone, 12 East, 668.

The court of K. B. will not refer it to the master to tax the plaintiff his costs in error in parliament on a judgment affirmed on error in Dom. Proc., without awarding costs, and remitted to the court, to the end that such proceedings may be had thereon as if no such writ of error had been brought. Beale v. Thompson, 2 M. & S. 249.

Judgment for the plaintiff in error from an inferior court, that it might be referred to the master to tax the plaintiff's costs, where the defendant had not joined in error, in compliance with the usual side-bar rule, can only be obtained by a rule to show cause in the first instance. Swift v. Bottom, 1 D. & R. 183.

Costs of reversing in a court of error, a judgment for the defendant in ejectment, are recoverable in an action of trespass for mesne profits. Nowell v. Roake, 7 B. & C. 404; 1 M. & R. 170.

Executors and administrators are liable to costs in error in cases where they would be liable in the original actions. Williams v. Riley, 1 H. Black. 566.

The court of C. P. will not compel security for costs in error, on the ground of the plaintiff in error being a lunatic. Steel v. Allan, 2 B. & P. 437.

Semble, if two courts have been of the same opinion on any point, and their judgments are appealed from and affirmed, the House of Lords will give costs on the affirmance. Duvergier v. Fellowes, 1 Clark & Fin. 39.

An avowant in replevin for rent in arrear, for whom verdict and judgment are given below, which are affirmed on a writ of error, is not entitled to be allowed interest on the sum recovered, by force of the stat. 3 H. 7, c. 10, which is confined to judgments recovered by plaintiffs below, and affirmed on a writ of error. Golding v. Dias, 10 East, 2.

Neither is such defendant in error entitled to his costs on the stat. 8 & 9 W. 3, which is confined to judgments for defendants on demurrer. Id.

But where defendant in trespass pleaded several special pleas, upon which issues were joined, and the defendant obtained judgment in C. P.; and plaintiff then brought error in K. B., and the judgment was there affirmed: the defendant was held to be entitled to costs in error by 8 & 9 W. 3, that statute not being confined to judgments for defendant on demurrer. Ricketts v. Lewis, 1 B. & Adol. 197.

The statute was held not to apply where the party about to sue out such writ had, in order to avoid execution, paid the damages and costs to the opposite attorney, with a notice to retain them in his hands; and the attorney had deposited the sum in a bank where it produced interest. Wright v. Fairfield, 2 B. & Adol. 959.

Where, after demurrer to a replication in formodon, the demandant obtained judgment, and upon the trial of several issues in fact, a verdict being found in favour of the demandant, the latter had judgment that he recover his seisin against the tenant; and upon a writ of error brought, the common errors being assigned, the judgment was affirmed:—Held, that the demandant was entitled to double costs under the statute 13 Car 2. Cockerell v. Cholmeley, 10 B. & C. 564.

The costs of proceedings upon writs of error from the court of Exchequer to the court of Exchequer Chamber, are to be taxed by the master of the court of Exchequer. Reg. Gen. M. T. 2 Will. 4, Exchequer Chamber, 1 C. & M. 466; 2 C. & J. 685; 2 Tyr. 761; 2 Dowl. P. C. 138; 3 M. & Scott, 298.

The costs in error to the Exchequer Chamber from the court of Exchequer ought to be taxed in the same manner as costs are taxed upon bills of exceptions. Att.-Gen. v. Key, 2 C. & J. 10.

5. Extents.

In cases of extents, costs are not recoverable where goods and lands are seized, and the goods alone are more than sufficient to pay the debt levied, not even in the case of an immediate extent. Rex v. Hopper, 3 Price, 40.

The stat. 25 Geo. 3, c. 35, held not to give the crown a right to costs, in cases where it is not necessary to resort to a sale of the lands. Id.

Quære, whether in the case of lands being actually sold under an extent in aid, the prosecutor would be entitled to costs? Id.

So, costs are not recoverable on an extent in aid under the 53 Geo. 3, although sued to secure the stamp duties on policies of insurance in the hands of an insolvent agent of the company, and founded on their bond to the crown for the due payment of those duties, and although the debt be of such a nature as that an immediate extent might have been issued on it. Rex v. Boyle, 1 Price, 434.

In scire facias against the consor of a recognizance to the crown, no costs are recoverable by the defendant, though he succeed on demurrer and in error. Rex v. Bingham, 1 Tyr. 262; 1 C. & J. 379: S. C. nom. Hollis v. Bingham, 1 Dowl. P. C. 280.

6. Feigned Issues.

Costs are recoverable in a feigned issue, as in any other action; though the statute directing the issue take no notice of costs. Pittwilliam (Lord) v. Maxwell, 2 Marsh. 355; 7 Taunt. 31.

Upon the trial of a feigned issue, the costs must follow the verdict, and the court has no discretionary power to give or not to give costs. Herbert v. Williamson, 1 Wils. 324.

But quære, when the court permit parties to try a feigned issue, whether they will not compel them to consent that the costs shall be in the discretion of the court? Hoskins v. Berkeley (Lord), 4 T. R. 402.

Costs upon a feigned issue were directed to be taxed from the time when it was first ordered by consent of parties. Thomas v. Powell, 1 Burr. 603; 2 Ld. Ken. 292.

Where an action, brought under the direction of the court of Chancery, is defeated by a formal objection, that court will make the person taking such objection pay all costs. Wray v. Barns, Peake, 69—Kenyon.

At the trial of a feigned issue at bar, in which the attorney-general was defendant, the plaintiff was nonprossed:—Held, that he should pay no costs, the defence being on behalf of the crown who neither pays nor receives costs. Williams v. Att.-Gen., Hull. Costs, 238.

But where the king is not a party, the plaintiff on a nonsuit in a feigned issue, is liable to costs, though the point of controversy should turn upon a grant from the crown. Bagshaw d. Wyse v. Bangor (Bishop), Hull. Costs, 343.

7. Mandamus.

By 1 Will. 4, c. 21, s. 6, in all cases of applications for writs of mandamus, the costs of such application, whether the writ be granted or refused, and also the costs of the writ, if issued and obeyed, shall be in the discretion of the court; and the court is authorized to order and direct by whom and to whom the same shall be paid.

The statute is confined to cases where the application is originally made after the act came into force. Rex v. War, 2 B. & Adol. 197. And see Rex v. Hungerford Market, 2 B. & Adol. 204.

Where a rule nisi for a mandamus to justice to hear an appeal is discharged, with costs to be paid to the justices by the appellants, the parish which appeared to support the refusal of the justices is not entitled to its costs, although served with the rule nisi, and although the justices did not appear by counsel. Rex v. Staffordshire Justices, 1 Dowl. P. C. 507.

The court of K. B. determined, that if an application be made for a mandamus to a bishop without good foundation, they would discharge the rule with costs. Rex v. Chester (Bishop), M. T. 27 Geo. 3, 1 T. R. 405. And see Rex v. Canterbury (Archbishop), 15 East, 159.

Where justices of peace had made a false return to a mandamus to appoint overseers for a township, and the court had thereupon granted a rule nisi for a criminal information; and on showing cause against that rule contradictory facts were disclosed, which were directed to be tried by an issue; and after it had been prepared and delivered, the justices had abandoned the issue, and obtained a judge's order for staying proceedings, without prejudice to the question of costs; the court ordered the justices to pay the prosecutor the costs of preparing and delivering such issue. Rex v. Lancashire (Justices), 1 D. & R. 485; 5 B. & A. 755.

A corporator who, upon having been removed, had been restored by a mandamus, could not recover the costs of the mandamus from the corporation. Herman v. Tappenden, 3 Esp. 278; 1 East, 555.

8. Penal Actions.

By 18 Eliz. c. 5, s. 3, if any informer or plaintiff shall willingly delay or discontinue his suit, or shall have verdict or judgment against him, the defendant shall have his costs.

Where a qui tam informer upon the statute 21 Hen. 8, c. 13, is nonsuited, the defendant is entitled to costs. Wilkinson q. t. v. Allot, Cowp. 366.

On a bona fide, but not on a collusive compensation, the plaintiff may also be allowed a reasonable sum for his costs. Wood q. t. v. Jackson, 2 W. Black. 1157.

Costs were allowed to a defendant on an information for killing game, where he had judgment for want of a declaration. Law q. t. v. Worrall; 1 Wils. 177.

Where the penalty is given to a common informer, though the party grieved happen to bring the action, he must bring it as a common informer, and shall not have costs. Anon. Bull. N. P. 833.

On an information to recover penalties under the game laws, if a verdict passes in favour of one defendant, and against another, the acquitted defendant is not entitled to his costs. Davies q. t. v. Birt, 1 C. & P. 439—Littledale. S. C. not E. P. 5 D. & R. 353; 3 B. & C. 586.

A defendant removing an information from the sessions, who has a verdict, shall have his costs. Rever q. t. v. Hodgson, 1 Wils. 139.

By charter granted to the college of physicians, confirmed by statute, no one shall practise physic within the city of London, or seven miles round, unless licensed by the college, under a penalty of 5*l.* for every month he so practises, to be sued for by the college, payable half to the king, and half to the college. The penalty is a debt vested in the college, the withholding of which is an injury for which damages may be recovered, entitling the college to receive costs if they succeed, and rendering them liable to pay costs, under 4 Jac. 1, c. 3, s. 2, where they fail. Physicians (College) v. Harrison, 4 M. & R. 404.

9. Prohibition.

The 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 11, s. 3, gives costs to the plaintiff in prohibition on judgment for him, either on plea or demurrer; and to the defendant on verdict for him, or on nonsuit or discontinuance.

By 1 Will. 4, c. 21, s. 1, the party in whose favour judgment shall be given, whether on nonsuit, verdict, demurrer or otherwise, shall be entitled to the costs attending the application and subsequent proceedings.

Where a rule is made absolute for issuing a prohibition, the costs of the rule cannot be granted to the successful party under 1 Will. 4, c. 21, s. 1; that statute only applying to cases where there have been pleadings in prohibition. Rex v. Keating, 1 Dowl. P. C. 440.

Where it was made a term on enlarging a rule for a prohibition, that the party applying should declare, and he did declare, and the defendant instead of pleading obtained a judge's order staying the proceedings upon payment of costs incurred since the rule to declare. Upon motion to set aside that order it was held, that the plaintiff in prohibition was not entitled to any further costs. Pewtress v. Harvey, 1 B. & Adol. 154.

Where the judgment on demurrer, to a declaration in prohibition, was that a writ of prohibition issue as to part of the libel, and a writ of consultation as to the rest. Semble, that it is not a case within 8 & 9 W. 3, c. 11, s. 3, so as to entitle the plaintiff to costs. Fres v. Burgoyne, (in error), 2 Bligh, N. S. 65; 1 Dow, N. S. 115; 6 B. & C. 27, 538; 8 D. & R. 587; 9 D. & R. 14, 601.

Therefore, where there was judgment in K. B. for a prohibition against proceeding in a suit in the Ecclesiastical court, against a clergyman pro salute animæ, on the ground of fornication; but a consultation was granted so far as related to the proceeding for deprivation:—Held, that the 8 & 9 W. 3, c. 11, which gives costs to the party, who obtains judgment in prohibition, did not apply, as it was a qualified judgment, which in substance was for the defendant in the prohibition; and that if it was to be considered a casus omissus, there was no authority in the court to give costs. Id.

Before the statute of 1 Will. 4, a defendant who succeeded upon demurrer in prohibition, was not entitled to costs. Brymer v. Atkyns, 2 Tidd's Prac. 983.

And no costs could be awarded on prohibition against executors, against whom judgment was obtained on demurrer, upon a question whether they were entitled to a general or limited probate. Scammell v. Wilkinson, 3 East, 202.

Where a plaintiff was put to declare in prohibition, and was nonsuited at the assizes, the defendant was only entitled to his single costs under the stat. 8 & 9 W. 3, and not to double costs under the stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6, c. 13, s. 14, which latter only applies to cases where the party, who is hindered of his suit in the Ecclesiastical court by the prohibition, acquiesces in it; and then the party obtaining it must, within six calendar months, verify his suggestion by the depositions of two witnesses in the court which granted the prohibition; otherwise the party hindered shall have a consultation, and double costs and damages. Frask v. French, 15 East, 574.

10. Quare impedit.

Costs are not allowed in quare impedit. Widowes v. Carlisle (Bishop), 3 Bing. 404: S. C. nom. Wyndow v. Carlisle (Bishop), 11 Moore, 269.

Therefore, a defendant is not entitled to costs on judgment as in case of nonsuit. Id.

Though the defendant have judgment on demurrer in quare impedit, he is not entitled to costs under sect. 2 of stat. 8 & 9 W. 3, c. 11. Thrale v. London (Bishop), 1 H. Black. 530.

11. Quo Warranto.

The 9 Anne, c. 20, s. 5, gives costs to the relators in informations in the nature of a quo warranto; and if judgment be given for the defendant he shall have costs against the relator.

Costs are not given on an information quo warranto, unless in usurpation of offices, or freedoms in corporations. Rex v. Williams, 1 W. Black. 93.

The defendant in a quo warranto information against him, to show by what authority he held the office of registrar and clerk of the court of Requests of the city of Bristol, is not entitled to costs under the statute. Rex v. Hall, 2 D. & R. 341; 1 B. & C. 237.

The court will not stay proceedings in a quo warranto information until the prosecutor give security for costs, on the ground that the relator is in insolvent circumstances, where it appears that he is a corporator, and no fraud is suggested. Rex v. Wynne, 2 M. & S. 346.

On a judgment for the relator, he is entitled to costs. Rex v. Amery, 1 Anst. 178.

Where any one of several issues in a quo warranto information is found for the prosecutor, on which judgment of ouster is given, he is entitled to costs on all the issues. Rex v. Downes, 1 T. R. 453.

A prosecutor shall pay costs where he makes groundless and frivolous applications for an information in the nature of a quo warranto, knowing it to be so. Rex v. Lewis, 2 Burr. 780; 2 Ld. Ken. 497.

The prosecutor of a quo warranto information against a constable of Birmingham, is not entitled to costs under the statute. Rex v. Wallis, 5 T. R. 375.

The returning officer in an incorporated borough sending members to parliament, is not liable to costs within the operation of 9 Anne, c. 20, in the event of judgment against him on a quo warranto information. Rex v. McKay, 8 D. & R. 393; 5 B. & C. 640.

12. Real Actions.

The 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 11, s. 3, gives costs to the plaintiff in actions of waste on judgment for him, either on plea or demurrer; and to the defendant on verdict for him, or on nonsuit or discontinuance.

Costs are allowed on an interlocutory proceeding in a writ of entry. Denman v. Bell, 2 Hag. 387; 9 Moore, 745.

The prothonotary may allow the tenant in a writ of entry the costs of setting aside interlocutory proceedings, and a judgment obtained by the demandant. Id.

A formedon may be discontinued on payment of costs. Scot v. Perry, 2 W. Black. 758; 3 Wils. 206.

The 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 11, s. 3, gives costs to the plaintiff in scire facias on judgment for him, either on plea or demurrer; and to the defendant on verdict for him, or on nonsuit or discontinuance.

By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 34, in all writs of scire facias, the plaintiff obtaining judgment, or an award of execution, shall recover his costs of suit upon a judgment by default, as well, as upon a judgment after a plea pleaded, or demurrer joined.

The 8 & 9 W. 3, giving costs in all writs of scire facias, does not extend to a scire facias to repeal a patent prosecuted in the name of the king. Rex v. Miles, 7 T. R. 367.

XVI. COSTS OF TRIAL.

1. Cause a Remanet.

Costs are allowed when a cause goes off and remains to be tried for want of jurors. Sparrow v. Turner, 2 Wils. 366.

After verdict, the party succeeding is entitled to the costs incurred at a former assize, when the cause, from press of business, was made a remanet. Standen v. Hall, 1 Ld. Ken. 338.

A cause having been made a remanet at the instance of the plaintiff, for default of view after a view by three only, by consent, and not returned by the sheriff; on an application to the court by the defendant for costs for not going to trial, they directed them to follow the event of the cause. Mountcharles (Lord) v. York, 1 Ld. Ken. 341.

The rule that costs should attend the final event of future trial, when the cause is made a remanet, was extended to other similar cases by both courts. Burchell v. Bellamy, 5 Burr. 201.

2. Bills of Exceptions.

A bill of exceptions is not to be included in the taxation of costs in the court below, being no part of the record there until after judgment. Gardner v. Baillie, 1 B. & P. 32.

Where in case the plaintiff recovered a verdict at the trial, and had judgment in C. P., and upon a bill of exceptions returned into K. B., judgment was reversed, and the plaintiff took nothing by his writ:—Held, that the defendant could not have costs. Bell v. Potts, 5 East, 49; 2 Esp. 712. And see Nowell v. Roake, 7 B. & C. 404; 1 M. & R. 170.

3. Special Cases.

Where, after a verdict for a sum of money, two questions were raised for the opinion of the court on a special case, and one of them at the time of argument was withdrawn by mutual consent:—Held, that the plaintiff, retaining his verdict for the sum of money, was entitled to the costs of the special case, though the defendant succeeded on the point which was argued. Garland v. Jekyll, 3 Bing. 330; 9 Moore, 620.

Where, instead of proceeding on a new trial, the parties agreed to state the facts specially, as if in a case reserved at the trial, on which the postea was afterwards delivered to the plaintiffs:—Held, they were entitled to the costs of the first trial. Robertson v. Liddell, 10 East, 416; 1 Chit. 19 a.

Where a case is reserved, from the insufficient state of which it is necessary to send the cause down to a second trial, and nothing is said respecting the costs, the party succeeding on such second trial is not entitled to the costs of the first. Hankey v. Smith, 3 T. R. 507; S. P. Smith v. Haile, 6 T. R. 71.

In a like case, the defendant, without going to trial again, gave the plaintiff a cognovit:—Held, that the defendant was liable to pay the costs of the former trial. Booth v. Atherton, 6 T. R. 144. And see Elvin v. Drummond, 4 Bing. 415; 1 M. & P. 88.

After a venire de novo, awarded upon an imperfect special verdict, and a new trial granted after a verdict for the plaintiff on the second trial, and the jury find again for the plaintiff on the third trial, he is only entitled to the costs of the last trial, unless it be otherwise expressed in the rule granting the new trial. Bird v. Appleton, 1 East, 111.

XVII. NEW TRIAL.

1. Costs regulated by the Rule.

A plaintiff is not entitled to an attachment for non-payment of the costs of a former trial, where the new trial was obtained on the terms of payment by the defendant, and the plaintiff has tried the cause the second time, without having entered payment previous to the last trial, because under such a rule the payment of costs by the defendant is a condition precedent to having a new trial. Doe d. Deire v. Haddon, Hull. Costs, 401: S. C. nom. Doe d. Davie v. Haddon, 2 Tidd's Prac. 946.

Where a new trial is granted to defendant on payment of costs, the plaintiff should not carry the cause down for trial until they are paid, for if he do he will have no remedy for them even if he should again obtain a verdict. Id.

Where a cause having been once tried, a new trial is granted, but a juror withdrawn, on the party who gained the verdict at the first trial undertaking generally to pay the other his costs: such an undertaking includes only the costs of the second trial. Rouse v. Bardin, 1 H. Black. 639.

There is no rule in the Exchequer against giving costs on a new trial being granted, although the verdict was against the opinion of the judge. Gossley v. Barlow, 1 Anst. 47.

Where the Exchequer, under special circumstances, granted a new trial of an ejectment, when a verdict had been found for the defendant, they imposed on him the terms of first paying the costs of the former trial and of the application. Weak d. Burge v. Callaway, 7 Price, 677.

The Exchequer will not order a party who is in prison, applying for a new trial on the ground of excessive damages having been given against him, to pay the costs of the former trial before the plaintiff's counsel proceed to show cause against the rule. Goode v. Lewes, 4 Price, 307.

A new trial after a perverse verdict of the jury is granted without costs; secus, after a mistaken or erroneous verdict. Howorth v. Samuel, 1 Chit. 633, n.; 1 B. & A. 566: S. P. Skillitoe v. Claridge, 2 Chit. 426.

Where the verdict is perverse, the court will grant a new trial without payment of costs, although the damages given for the plaintiff are less than 20*l.* Freeman v. Price, 1 Y. & J. 402.

Where a nonsuit had been set aside, and before the second trial the defendant obtained leave to amend his particulars, so as to obviate the objection taken on the former trial, on which he was nonsuited, upon payment of costs, the plaintiff is not entitled to be paid the costs of the first trial previous to, and as the terms of the amendment; and the court would not, under such circumstances, order the master to review his taxation, on the objection that he had allowed the plaintiff only 20*s.*, the costs of a common amendment. The costs of the former trial were ordered to abide the event of the cause, and the court, on discharging a rule granted to show cause, refused to give the successful party the costs of the application. Andrews v. Bond, 8 Price, 538, 213.

Where a cause was taken by mistake, the court refused to make the payment of costs the condition of a rule for a new trial. Etherington v. Kemp, 1 Chit. 634.

Where the jury find an insufficient verdict, upon which the court can give no judgment, and a new trial is granted, the party ultimately successful is not entitled to the costs of the former trial. Worcestershire Canal Comp. v. Trent and Mersey Navigation Comp., 2 Marsh. 475.

Where the plaintiff refuses to be nonsuited, the costs of the first trial. Birkis v. Willes, 1 Chit. 633.

(if granted) shall be without costs: if he submits to an erroneous nonsuit, it shall be set aside without costs. Porlein v. Pauley, 1 W. Black. 670.

Where a mistaken verdict was given in consequence of the omission of the judge to draw the attention of the jury to a material feature in the case, the court imposed the terms of the payment of costs, on the granting of a new trial, the judge not having been requested to enter into a fuller explanation. But the costs of a former trial, where the verdict was set aside for misdirection, and of an intermediate postponement, by making the cause a remanet, were to abide the event. Gibbins v. Phillips, 2 M. & R. 238; 8 B. & C. 437.

Where the rule for a new trial expresses "without costs," the costs of the former trial are in no event allowed; where nothing is said in the rule about costs, if the second verdict be the same way with the first, the costs of the first trial are allowed; where the second verdict is not the same way with the first, the party obtaining it is not allowed the costs of the first trial. Schullbred v. Nutt, Hull. Costs, 395; S. C. nom. Shoolbred v. Nutt, 2 Tidd's Prac. 923.

The defendant in an action having obtained a verdict, a new trial was granted on the following terms:—The defendant to have the costs of both trials if he succeeded on the second; if the plaintiff succeeded he was only to have the costs of the second trial. Pooley v. Millard, 1 Tyr. 260.

Where there were three verdicts, the first in favour of the plaintiff, the second in favour of the defendant by reason of a misdirection, and the third in favour of the defendant upon the merits, and the rule for the first new trial reserved the consideration of costs, the court allowed the defendant to take the costs of the first or second at his option, and the costs of the third. Body v. Esdaile, 3 Bing. 174; 10 Moore, 569; S. C. not S. P. 1 C. & P. 62.

2. Rule silent.

If a new trial be granted, without any mention of costs in the rule, the costs of the first trial shall not be allowed to the successful party, though he succeed in the second. Reg. Gen. K. B., C. P., & Exch., H. T. 2 W. 4, 1 Dowl. P. C. 191; 8 Bing. 297; 1 M. & Scott, 424; 3 B. & Adol. 383; 2 C. & J. 185; 2 Tyr. 346; 4 Bligh, N. S. 600.

The rule is not retrospective. Carlisle v. Garland, 2 M. & Scott, 180; 9 Bing. 85.

Where a new trial has been granted, and nothing was said in the rule concerning the costs of the first, although the same party succeeded on the second trial, he shall not have the costs of the first. Mason v. Skurray, 2 Dougl. 438.

Where a new trial is granted after a verdict for the defendant, on the ground of a misdirection of the judge, and the rule for the new trial is silent as to costs, and the plaintiff succeeds on the second trial of the cause, he is not entitled to

Where a plaintiff was nonsuited in consequence of not producing formal proof of a private act of parliament, which the defendant's agents had previously agreed should be dispensed with, and the plaintiff obtained a rule nisi to set aside the nonsuit and have a new trial, which was afterwards made absolute, but was silent as to costs, and the defendant obtained a verdict on the second trial:—Held, that the costs of the application for a new trial, not having been inserted in the rule, were to be considered and taxed as costs in the cause. Truslove v. Burton, 10 Moore, 9; 9 Moore, 64.

Where the verdict was for the defendant, and a new trial awarded upon a question of law, without anything said as to costs, and instead of proceeding to a second trial the parties agreed to state the facts specially, as if in a case reserved at the trial, on which the postea was afterwards delivered: they were entitled to the costs of the first trial. Robertson v. Liddell, 10 East, 416; 1 Chit. 19.

A defendant having applied for and obtained a rule for a new trial after a verdict against him, instead of again going down to trial, gave a cognovit:—Held, that he was liable for the costs of the former trial. Jackson v. Hallam, 2 B. & A. 317; 1 Chit. 19.

The plaintiff, having been nonsuited, obtained a rule for a new trial, which was silent as to costs. The defendant, without going again to trial, gave the plaintiff a cognovit to confer judgment, "and that the plaintiff had sustained damages to the amount of one shilling, besides the costs to be taxed by the prothonotary, if he should think the plaintiff entitled." The prothonotary having refused to tax the costs of the nonsuit, the court would not interfere, saying that, as the parties by the terms of the cognovit had agreed to constitute the prothonotary their arbitrator, they must be bound by his decision. Elvin v. Drummond, 1 M. & P. 68; 4 Bing. 443.

A rule for a new trial was obtained in an action where the jury had found a verdict for the defendant, but which rule was silent as to costs. The plaintiff afterwards obtained a rule to discontinue, and upon taxation the master allowed the defendant the costs of the trial:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to them. Streeting v. Halse, 9 B. & C. 369, n.; 4 M. & R. 545.

Where a rule nisi is obtained, and is silent as to costs, and on showing cause the opposite party applies to the court for them, which are refused, and the rule is discharged without any mention of costs, and the opposite party afterwards obtains a verdict, the costs of the opposition are costs in the cause, to which the plaintiff is entitled. Johnson v. Closs, 1 Chit. 559.

One of the jury having absconded before the verdict was delivered, and the plaintiff refusing to take a verdict from the eleven, a new trial was had and the plaintiff obtained a verdict:—Held, that he was entitled to the costs of both trials. Harrison v. Bennett, 1 Dowl. P. C. 627; 1 C. & M. 203; 2 Tyr. 740.

By the practice of the court of Exchequer, where a new trial is granted, the party who succeeds upon both trials was entitled to the costs of both trials, if the rule for the new trial was silent upon the subject of costs. Loader q. t. v. Thomas, 1 C. & J. 55.

In an action upon a statute which gives double costs, if a new trial was granted, nothing being said upon the subject of costs, the party who succeeded upon both trials was entitled to double costs of both trials. Id.

3. Costs to abide the Event.

Where the court orders a new trial, the costs to abide the event, such event means the ultimate event of the cause: therefore, if the verdict on the second trial be set aside, and, on a third the ultimate event is the same as at the first trial, the party succeeding in the last will be entitled to the costs of the first trial. Meule v. Goddard, 5 B. & A. 766.

When the costs of the former trial are to abide the event of a new trial, if the same party succeeds on the new trial, he has costs of both trials; if his opponent, he has only the costs of the new trial. Sherlock v. Barned, 8 Bing. 21; 1 M. & Scott, 58.

If costs are directed to abide the event, neither party has the costs of the first trial, if the event of the second is different from that of the first. Canham v. Fisk, 2 Tyr. 155; 2 C. & J. 126; 1 Price's P. C. 148.

Plaintiff having obtained a verdict, the court of C. P. granted a new trial, directing that the "costs of the former trial should abide the event of the new trial." On the second trial the verdict was for the defendant:—Held, that the defendant was only entitled to the costs of the second trial. Chapman v. Partridge, 2 N. R. 382; 5 C. not S. P. 5 Esp. 256.

So, where the defendant on the first trial obtained a verdict, and the court, in granting a new trial, directed the costs of the former trial to abide the event of the second, and on that trial the plaintiff obtained a verdict:—Held, that he was only entitled to the costs of such second trial. Brown v. Boyn, 5 Moore, 309.

When, upon setting aside a nonsuit, the costs are directed to abide the event, though the plaintiff succeeded on the second trial, he is not entitled to the costs of the first; neither is the defendant entitled to the costs of the first trial in such case; but when the same party succeeds on both trials, he is entitled to the costs of both. Austen v. Hibbs, 8 T. R. 619.

When, upon setting aside a verdict for plaintiff, the costs are directed to abide the event, and when the plaintiff discontinues the action, the defendant is not entitled to the costs of the trial. Loworth v. Samuel, 1 B. & A. 566; 1 Chit. 633, n.

Where the plaintiffs in an action on a policy of insurance recovered for an average loss, and a new trial was granted, on the terms of the costs the first being to abide the event, and at the second trial the plaintiffs again recovered for an average loss only:—Held, that they were only entitled to the costs of the second trial, and the defendant to the costs of neither. Hudson v. Marjoribanks, 8 Moore, 440; 1 Bing. 393.

4. Cause referred.

If a cause standing for trial be referred, and the arbitrator's award in favour of the plaintiff should be afterwards set aside, and the cause be in consequence subsequently tried, the plaintiff, if he should afterwards succeed on that occasion, will be allowed the costs of the former trial. Poole v. Selwood, 1 Price, 310.

Where the plaintiff obtained a verdict subject to an award, and the arbitrator made a material mistake in his award, and the defendant refused to refer matters back to him, the court of C. P. set aside the verdict, and discharged the rule for the reference; and the plaintiff, having taken the cause down to a second trial, and again obtained a verdict:—Held, that he was entitled to the costs of both trials. Payne v. Bailey, 7 Moore, 147; 3 B. & B. 304.

Where a rule for a new trial is silent as to the costs of the first, and the cause is afterwards referred at Nisi Prius, and determined in favour of the plaintiff, he is not entitled to the costs of the first trial. Summers v. Formby, 1 B. & C. 100.

After plaintiff had obtained a rule to set aside a nonsuit, defendant gave a cognovit for 1s. damages, and such costs as the prothonotary should think fit. The prothonotary disallowed plaintiff the costs of the trial, and the court would not interfere. Elvin v. Drummond, 4 Bing. 415; 1 M. & P. 88.

5. Other matters.

Where a cause is twice tried, and the verdict is found on each trial for the same party, he is entitled to the costs of both; but where the verdicts are found for different parties, the costs of the first trial are not allowed. Trelawney v. Thomas, 1 H. Black. 641.

Where a venire de novo is awarded, the party succeeding is only entitled to the costs of the second trial. Lickbarrow v. Mason, 6 T. R. 131.

If a venire de novo issues, the court of Exchequer has no power over the costs of the application for that writ. Edwards v. Brown, 1 Dowl. P. C. 282; 1 C. & J. 354; 1 Tyr. 281.

Although a defendant succeeded upon the first trial by a forgery, the court of C. P. cannot give the plaintiff, succeeding on the second trial, the costs of both. Goodtill v. Walter, 4 Taunt. 671.

Where a defendant had been prevented from going into a particular line of defence upon the trial, and having obtained a rule for a new trial, instead of proceeding gave a cognovit:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the costs of the trial, as the cognovit admitted a want of merits. Jackson v. Hallam, 2 B. & A. 317; 1 Chit. 19. And see Elvin v. Drummond, 4 Bing. 415; 1 M. & P. 88.

A rule nisi for a new trial was obtained after a verdict for defendant, and the cause was then referred to arbitration, and the costs left in the discretion of the arbitrator. He awarded in favour of plaintiff, and directed defendant to pay the costs of the cause:—Held, that it meant such costs as the defendant would have been liable to pay, if, on a new trial, there had been a verdict for plaintiff. Rigby v. Okell, 7 B. & C. 57.

Where there have been two trials, and the successful party is entitled to the costs of the second trial only, the master, in taxing costs, may allow fees on the second trial, with reference to those given on the first. Wilkinson v. Malin, 2 Dowl. P. C. 65.

If the plaintiff recover a verdict for a loss on a policy, and endeavour, on a rule nisi being obtained for a nonsuit, to support his verdict to that extent, although he be held entitled to a return of premium, he is not entitled to the costs of the rule, nor to any costs except of the count for money had and received, and of such parts of the brief and evidence as apply thereto. Spitta v. Woodman, 3 Taunt. 406.

Where the court granted a rule for a new trial on the application of the defendant, in a case where the plaintiff succeeded, and the latter applied to amend his declaration, but discontinued the action, not choosing to pay the costs of the former trial, as the condition of the amendment:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to the costs of that trial, notwithstanding the plaintiff's discontinuance. Gray v. Cox, 8 D. & R. 220; 5 B. & C. 458. And see S. C. 6 D. & R. 200; 4 B. & C. 108; 1 C. & P. 148.

After a verdict for the defendant, and a rule absolute for a new trial, the plaintiff discontinues the action; the defendant is entitled to the costs of the trial. Sweeting v. Halse, 4 M. & R. 545; 9 B. & C. 369.

XVIII. ARREST OF JUDGMENT.

Upon arrest of judgment, each party pays his own costs. Cameron v. Reynolds, Cowp. 407.

If an avowant in replevin, after trial and verdict for the plaintiff, obtain judgment non obstante veredicto, in consequence of the plaintiff's plea in bar being bad, he is not entitled to any costs upon the pleadings subsequent to the pleas in bar, because he should have demurred to them. Da Costa v. Clarke, 2 B. & P. 376.

Where the plaintiff obtained a verdict, and the court of Exchequer arrested the judgment, which judgment was reversed by the court of Exchequer Chamber:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the costs of the motion in arrest of judgment, and that such costs must be taxed by the officer of the court of Exchequer. Adams v. Meredith, 3 Y. & J. 419.

XIX. DOUBLE AND TREBLE COSTS.

1. When allowed.

In a declaration of trespass, containing six counts, two only were founded on the stat. 8 Hen.

6, c. 9, s. 6. Judgment having gone by default, the plaintiff obtained general damages on a writ of inquiry, and 6d. costs. Treble costs having been taxed for the plaintiff on all the counts in the declaration:—Held, that he was not entitled thereto, but could only enter his judgment on the counts at common law, and with single costs. Kemp v. Richardson, 2 Moore, 238.

In an action on the 29 Eliz. c. 4, plaintiff is entitled to treble costs as well as treble damages. Deacon v. Morris, 2 B. & A. 393; 1 Chit. 137; S. P. Tyte v. Glode, 7 T. R. 267. And see Wilkinson v. Ullott, Cowp. 368.

By the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 19, a defendant in replevin is entitled to recover treble damages, with his costs also:—Held, that parish officers suing on a distress for poor-rates under that statute are only entitled to single costs. Butler v. Furber, 4 Moore, 296; 1 B. & B. 517.

The stats. 7 Jac. 1, c. 5. and 21 Jac. 1, c. 12, s. 3, giving double costs to parish officers and &c., extend not to actions against them for a nuisance, such as the non-payment of money laid out for the support of one of their paupers by another parish into which he went, and for which an action of assumpsit was brought against them. Atkins v. Bannell, 3 East, 92.

In all cases where justices of the peace, constables, &c., do anything in execution of their office, they may, under 7 Jac. 1, plead the general issue; and in case of a verdict in their favour, or judgment by nonsuit, they may tax their double costs. Anon. Loft, 373.

Parish officers, or persons acting on their behalf, are not entitled, under stat. 7 Jac. 1, c. 5, and 21 Jac. 1, c. 12, to double costs upon judgment as in case of a nonsuit, in an action brought against them for the price of goods sold and delivered to them for the use of the poor. Blanchard v. Bramble, 3 M. & S. 131.

To entitle a constable, &c., to double costs under 7 Jac. 1, c. 5, after a verdict for him, it must be certified by the judge who tried the case that he was acting in the execution of his office. Grindley v. Holloway, 1 Dougl. 307.

Which certificate, when granted, must certify that the defendant was such an officer, and that the action was brought against him for something done by him in the execution of that office. Harper v. Carr, 7 T. R. 446.

And the certificate may be granted either at the trial or afterwards. Id.

A certificate that the defendant was churchwarden, and acted by virtue of his office, to entitle him to double costs under the stat. 7 Jac. 1, c. 5, need not be granted immediately after the trial of the cause. Norman v. Denger, 3 Y. & J. 203.

Where the plaintiff is nonsuited, the judge before whom the cause was tried may, after an interval of four years, upon an affidavit that the defendant was within the provisions of the stat. 7 Jac. 1, c. 5, grant a certificate to entitle him to double costs. Id.

The stat. 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 22, gives double costs against a plaintiff in replevin only in three cases, viz. where he is nonsuit, discontinues his action, or has judgment given against him.

Therefore, where in replevin, the cause not being then at issue, the parties agreed by bond to submit the question to arbitration, the costs to abide the event, and the arbitrator afterwards awarded in favour of defendant, it was held that he was not entitled to double costs under the statute. Gurney v. Buller, 1 B. & A. 670.

Defendants in replevin, who avowed generally under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, for rent due on a demise, under which the plaintiff held as their tenant, were held entitled to double costs upon a judgment in their favour, notwithstanding they pleaded many other avowries, in various rights, from which circumstance it was suggested that they did not distrain as landlords, but with a view merely to try a title. Johnson v. Lawson, 2 Bing. 341; 9 Moore, 642.

A seizure for a heriot custom is not within the stat. 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, in respect to double costs. Lloyd v. Winton, 2 Wils. 28.

Where the master having taxed single costs, a motion was made that he might review his taxation and allow treble costs, the stat. 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 12, having given treble the rent as damages, the court said that the statute had not given treble damages, but only directed how the single damages should be ascertained, and refused the rule. Crocker v. Fothergill, 2 B. & A. 662, n.

Where a defendant in replevin avows as landlord for rent in arrear, and obtains a verdict, he is entitled to double costs, although the action be really and bona fide brought to try the title to the land. Stanniland v. Ludlam, 7 D. & R. 484; 4 B. & C. 889.

By a canal act, the company were authorized to take certain lands for the purposes of the act, on making certain payments either by annual rents or sums in gross, and the persons from whom the land was to be taken were empowered to distrain the goods of the company, even off the premises, in case of non-payment of such sums. An avowant, stating a distress under this act of parliament, is not entitled, on obtaining a verdict, to double costs under the stat. 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 22. Leominster Canal Company v. Norris, 7 T. R. 500; S. P. Same v. Cowell, 1 B. & P. 213.

Neither a certificate from the judge, nor a suggestion on the roll, is necessary to entitle a defendant to double costs, under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 22. Finlay v. Seaton, 1 Taunt. 210.

A surveyor of highways is not entitled to treble costs under the 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 81, upon a verdict found for him. Ward v. Bateman, 1 C. & M. 185; 1 Dowl. P. C. 620; 3 Tyr. 221.

Where, in an action against officers of the exchequer for seizing goods, they do not tender amends before action brought, but pay money into court and afterwards gain a verdict, they are entitled only to single costs under stat. 23 Geo. 3, c. 70, s. 1. Collins v. Morgan, 1 H. Black. 244.

Under the 25 Geo. 3, c. 50, treble costs are not given to persons sued for penalties under the act, as they are to persons prosecuted for using guns. Smith v. Wallis, 1 T. R. 252.

Commissioners of a court of requests, who have power to commit for contempt, are not within the 42 Geo. 3, c. 85, s. 6, which extends the 21 Jac. 1, (giving double costs), to all persons empowered to commit to safe custody; and therefore, where trespass for false imprisonment is brought against them for an act done in the execution of their office, and the plaintiff is nonsuited, they are not entitled to double costs. Mackey v. Goodden, 1 Dowl. P. C. 463.

Upon avowry for rates made on plaintiffs' lands, under 56 Geo. 3, c. 47, (local and personal), where plaintiffs were nonsuited, it was held that defendant was not entitled to a writ of inquiry of damages, the act only giving treble costs. Gotobed v. Wool, 6 M. & S. 128.

Where a verdict was found for some of several defendants, under the Birmingham Paving Act, (52 Geo. 3, c. 113), but against others who had been joined with them:—Held, that the former were nevertheless entitled to treble costs. Hall v. Smith, 2 Bing. 267; 9 Moore, 226.

2. How computed.

How double and treble costs are computed, see 1 Chit. 137 a, 139, 140, 141 a.

The true mode of estimating the amount of double costs is, first, to allow the defendant the single costs, including the expenses of witnesses, counsels' fees, &c., and then to allow him one-half of the amount of the single costs, without making any deduction on account of counsels' or court fees, &c. Stanniland v. Ludlam, 7 D. & R. 484; 4 B. & C. 889.

A rule for a suggestion to entitle a defendant to double or treble costs, &c., after nonsuit or verdict, is a rule to show cause in the first instance. Prichard v. Peacock, 1 Tidd's Prac. 496.

XX. SECURITY FOR COSTS.

1. Infancy.

There are only three instances in which the court will interfere on behalf of a defendant to oblige the plaintiff to give security for costs: first, when an infant sues, the court will oblige the prochein ami, or guardian, or attorney, to give security for the costs; secondly, when the plaintiff resides abroad; and, thirdly, where there has been a former ejectment. Doe d. Selby v. Alston, 1 T. R. 493.

This applies to other actions, as well as ejectment. Weston v. Withers, 2 T. R. 511.

An infant lessor in ejectment must get some person to enter into security for costs. Anon. 1 Wils. 130.

The court of C. P. will not oblige an infant plaintiff to give security for costs. Anon. 1 Marsh. 4.

Quere, whether the court will grant a rule for an efficient prochein ami to be appointed, and security to be given for costs? at all events, the application is too late after moving to put off the trial. Anon. 2 Chit. 359.

But an infant who sues by his prochein ami need not give security for costs, even though the latter is sworn to be insolvent. Yarworth v. Mitchell, 2 D. & R. 423.

Where an infant sues by guardian who is sworn to be in insolvent circumstances, the court will require him to give security for costs. Mann v. Berthen, 4 M. & P. 215.

The court refused to compel an infant plaintiff to give security for costs, upon its being shown that the guardian had undertaken for them. Anon. Cowp. 128.

So, they will refuse, if the plaintiff be a real person. Knotting v. Miles, Lofft, 594.

Where the lessor of the plaintiff is an infant resident abroad, or dead, the court will stay the proceedings until a real and substantial plaintiff be named, or some responsible person undertake for the payment of costs. Smith d. Jordan v. Roe, 1 Tidd's Prac. 578.

2. Residence abroad.

When required at Law.—If the plaintiff reside permanently abroad, the court will stay proceedings till he give security for the costs. Pray v. Edie, 1 T. R. 267. Elan v. Rees, 3 Dougl. 382. But see Lamii v. Sewell, 1 Wils. 266, and Boswell v. Irish, 4 Burr. 2105.

So, in C. P. Ganesford v. Levy, 2 H. Black. 118. But see Parquat v. Eling, 1 H. Black. 106.

So, in the Exchequer. Demanroffs v. Jackson, 13 Price, 603.

It is not contrary to practice in the Exchequer to compel a plaintiff residing out of the jurisdiction to give security for costs. On the contrary the court would make such an order at discretion as a mere matter of justice. Drury v. Johnson, 13 Price, 489. But see Beckman v. Le Grange, 2 Anst. 359, and Adams v. Coulthurst, 2 Anst. 552.

So, if the plaintiff reside in Ireland. Fitzgerald v. Whitmore, 1 T. R. 362.

Or Scotland. M'Lean v. Austin, Sheriff v. Farquharson, Still v. M'Iver, 1 Tidd's Prac. 579. But see Maxwell v. Mayer, 2 Burr. 1026; 1 W. Black. 271.

A plaintiff resident in Ireland is bound to give security for costs, although he may sometimes come over and sojourn in this country. Mahon v. Martinez, 4 Moore, 356.

A plaintiff was compelled to give security for costs on affidavit of his residing in Ireland, the cause not having been at issue, and the venue laid in Middlesex, and proceedings stayed in the meantime. Maloney v. Smith, M'Clel. & Y. 213.

But security for costs is not required of an English subject, though abroad. Tullock v. Crowley, 1 Taunt. 18.

The court refused to require security on the ground that the plaintiff's residence was at Calcutta. Nuncomar v. Burdett, Cowp. 158.

Security for costs will not be required from an English officer serving in South America. O'Laghla v. Macdonald, 3 Moore, 77.

Nor from a foreigner during the time he is resident in this country. Anon. 3 Moore, 78.

Security is not required from a person whilst in this country, although usually residing abroad. Anon. 8 Taunt. 737.

And although it be sworn he is about to leave the country. Ciragno v. Hassan, 6 Taunt. 20; 1 Marsh. 421.

If the plaintiff is a native of England, and departs for France for a mere temporary absence, the court will not compel him to give security for costs. Anon. 2 Chit. 152.

If a plaintiff be resident abroad, the court of C. P. will require him to give security for costs, although he sue in the capacity of executor. Cavalier v. Finnis, 3 Moore, 602; 1 B. & B. 27.

So, a defendant in replevin residing abroad must give security for costs. Selby v. Crutcher, 4 Moore, 280; 1 B. & B. 505.

Where a plaintiff (a native of this country) quits it for a mere temporary residence abroad, the court will not require him to give security for costs; and an application for such a purpose cannot be supported on a mere affidavit of belief that it was the intention of the plaintiff to reside permanently abroad. Cole v. Beale, 7 Moore, 61.

A plaintiff, a Scotchman, not actually domiciled in this country, but only occasionally residing here, is bound to give security for costs. Naylor v. Joseph, 10 Moore, 522.

For such a plaintiff is within the meaning of the general rule applicable to persons who are not amenable to the courts here sitting in this country. Id.

It seems that security for costs cannot be required from a foreigner, a master of a vessel trading to this country, but having no fixed residence here. Kasten v. Plaw, 1 M. & P. 30; & P. Nelson v. Ogle, 2 Taunt. 253.

A public company carrying on all their business in Ireland were compelled to give security for costs, although they had 3000*l.* in a bank in London, and most of the members resided in England. Limerick and Waterford Railway Company v. Fraser, 4 Bing. 394; 1 M. & P. 23.

A party residing abroad may, upon being admitted to defend an ejectment as landlord, be required to give security for costs. Dee v. Jackson, 4 M. & R. 570.

If one of two plaintiffs be resident abroad, and the other in this country, the court will not compel the absent plaintiff to give security for costs. Anon. 1 Dowl. P. C. 300; 2 C. & J. 88; & P. Minchin v. Minchin, 1 Price's P. C. 159; & C. nom. Wilson v. Minchin, 1 Dowl. P. C. 299; 1 C. & J. 87; 2 Tyr. 166; Anon. 7 Taunt. 307.

If one of the plaintiffs reside within reach of the process of the court, security will not be required for the costs, though the other plaintiff a foreigner residing abroad, and although the first mentioned plaintiff be a bankrupt in execution for debt. McCormell v. Johnston, 1 East, 431.

A plaintiff will not be required to give security for costs, or disclose his place of residence, where there is no doubt whether he sues in his own right, and it does not appear that he is out of the kingdom. Lloyd v. Davis, 1 Tyr. 533; 1 Price's P. C. 11.

The court will compel a plaintiff, executrix, who is out of the jurisdiction, to give security for costs: but such security will be confined to those costs only for which she would be liable. Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 1 Dowl. P. C. 366.

The court will not compel a foreign ambassador to give security for costs. De Montellano (Duke) v. Christina, 5 M. & S. 503.

Nor a prisoner of war who sues for wages earned on board an English ship. Maria v. Hall, 2 B. & P. 236.

Security for costs is not required from a foreigner during his absence from this country, on board his own ship, if he reside here part of the year. Durell v. Mattheson, 3 Moore, 33; 8 Taunt. 711.

A foreign seaman having brought an action for his wages against a foreigner, the court of C. P. refused to compel him to give security for costs, on account of his being on a voyage on board an English ship. Henshen v. Garves, 2 H. Black. 383.

So, they refused to stay proceedings till security is given for the costs in an action by a foreign seaman serving on board an English ship. Jacobs v. Stevenson, 1 B. & P. 96.

If an action be brought without the knowledge of the plaintiff, who is out of the realm, the court will require security for the costs to be given on the part of the plaintiff. Ball v. Adrian, 1 Taunt. 64.

Where the plaintiff carried on business abroad, and had no permanent residence in England, but was here at the time of bringing an action to try the validity of a commission of bankruptcy, with the permission of the Vice-Chancellor, and it was sworn that he had no intention of leaving the country, the court required him to give security for the costs of the action; but it seems that such security would not have been required if the action had been brought by the order of the Vice-Chancellor. Oliver v. Johnson, 1 D. & R. 560: 1 C. nom. Oliva v. Johnson, 5 B. & A. 908.

If a plaintiff, after leaving this country, commences an action, he will be compelled to find security for costs. Wells v. Barton, 2 Dowl. P. 160.

When required in Equity.—The simple fact that the plaintiff is gone abroad is not a sufficient reason to compel him to give security for costs. Loby v. Hitchcock, 5 Ves. jun. 699.

No order that a plaintiff residing abroad shall give security for costs will be made when there are co-plaintiffs residing in England. Walker v. Waterby, 6 Ves. jun. 612.

A plaintiff is not compellable to give security for costs, unless he state himself, or it be sworn that he is resident abroad, or going to reside abroad. Green v. Charnock, 2 Cox, 284; 3 Bro. C. C. 371; 1 Ves. jun. 396.

It is not sufficient that the plaintiff appears by the bill to be out of the jurisdiction; he must appear to be resident abroad. Id.

On a decree, liberty was given to the plaintiff to bring an action in K. B., and an action was brought. The defendant applied to a judge of K. B. for the usual order for security for costs, the plaintiff being resident at Paris, and so stated in his bill. The judge referred the application to the court of Chancery, and the court ordered such security to be given. Desprez v. Mitchell, 5 Madd. 87.

Cestuis que trust, bringing actions in the names of the trustees, were ordered to give security for costs. Annesley v. Simeon, 4 Madd. 390.

Where a plaintiff is bound to give security for costs, each defendant employing a separate clerk in court is entitled to a separate bond for 40l.; but the plaintiff is only bound to pay one 40l. Lowndes v. Robertson, 4 Madd. 465.

A plaintiff resident abroad, who had been ordered to give security for costs, but had not complied, was ordered to give the security, and on default his bill to be dismissed. Camac v. Grant, 1 Sim. 348.

A plaintiff residing out of the jurisdiction was allowed to pay 120l. into court, in lieu of giving security for costs in the usual manner. Cliffe v. Wilkinson, 4 Sim. 123.

The mere circumstance of the plaintiff being imprisoned does not entitle the defendant to call for a security for costs. Baddeley v. Harding, 6 Madd. 214.

3. Bankruptcy.

Security for costs will not be required of a bankrupt plaintiff residing abroad, especially if such residence is only of a temporary nature. Roper v. Phillips, 3 M. & R. 84.

A commission of bankruptcy having issued against the plaintiff who had gone with his family to New York, upon the petition of the defendant, who was the only creditor, and had chosen himself sole assignee, and the plaintiff having brought an action against the defendant to try the commission, the court refused to stay the proceedings till he should give security for costs. McCulloch v. Robinson, 2 N. R. 352.

A plaintiff having become bankrupt before plea pleaded, the defendant obtained an order for giving security for costs, and afterwards pleaded bankruptcy:—Held, that such plea could not be set aside, but that the order for giving security for costs should be rescinded, the plaintiff paying the costs of that application, and the defendant's rule being discharged. Minchin v. Hart, 1 Chit. 215. And see Kinnear v. Tarrant, 15 East, 622.

An uncertificated bankrupt suing for the benefit of his assignees may be compelled to give security for costs. Sed quare, 1 Chit. 267, n.

An uncertificated bankrupt, bringing an action of trover for goods, is required to give security for the costs in case he should fail in his suit. Webb v. Ward, 7 T. R. 296.

The court will not compel security for costs on the ground that the plaintiff is a bankrupt, or in Newgate. Anon. 2 Taunt. 61; 1 Rose, 111.

An uncertificated bankrupt suing for his own benefit, as for the produce of his earnings since the bankruptcy, cannot be compelled to give security for costs. Cohen v. Bell, 1 Tidd's Prac. 580.

Otherwise, where the action is brought or proceeded in by a bankrupt, whether certificated or not so, for the benefit of his assignees. Sanders v. Purse, and Robertson v. Arnold, 1 Tidd's Prac. 581.

Where a bankrupt brought trespass against the messengers to the commission, in which action he was nonsuited, without the validity of the commission being fully tried, and afterwards brought trover against the assignees to try the same question:—Held, that he should not be put to give security for costs. Semle aliter, if the question had been once fully tried. Kennett v. Duff, 2 Smith, 423.

Where a defendant obtains security for costs, on the ground that the plaintiff is become bankrupt, and that the action is continued by his assignees, he must undertake not to plead the bankruptcy. Manley v. Mayne, 3 M. & R. 381.

Where a plaintiff becomes bankrupt in the middle of a cause, the assignees, if they proceed with the action, must give security for all the costs. The defendant may apply for this security at any time before a fresh step in the cause is taken. Mason v. Polhill, 2 Dowl. P. C. 61.

The court of Bankruptcy will not, under any circumstances, before hearing, order a bankrupt to give security for costs. Ex parte Munk, 2 Deac. & Chit. 120.

A motion for it was refused with costs, to be set off against those due from the bankrupt. Id.

4. Insolvency.

The court of K. B. required security for costs from a plaintiff who had taken the benefit of an insolvent act after issue joined, but before notice of trial given, and they ordered the proceedings to be stayed until the assignee or some one of the plaintiff's creditors should give such security. Heaford v. McKnight, 4 D. & R. 81; 2 B. & C. 579.

But the court of C. P. refused to require the plaintiff to give security for costs, although it was sworn that he was insolvent, and that the action was brought in his name for the benefit of J. S., who was alone beneficially interested in the result. Morgan v. Evans, 7 Moore, 344.

The court of C. P. will neither set aside the proceedings, nor require an insolvent to give security for costs in an action where the assignees have refused to sue. Townsend v. Snow, 1 Marsh. 477; S. C. nom. Snow v. Townsend, 6 Taunt. 123.

An insolvent brought an action to recover property acquired by him after his assignment; no order had been made by the Insolvent Court to enable the assignees to issue execution against the property, and the court refused to require security for costs. Clapworthy v. Collier, 2 C. & J. 631.

5. Other Circumstances.

If a plaintiff in error resides out of the jurisdiction of the court, they may require him to give security for costs; and unless he does so, the defendant in error may proceed on his judgment. Lewis v. Owens, 5 B. & A. 265.

The court of C. P. will not compel security for costs in error on the ground of the plaintiff in error being a lunatic. Steel v. Allan, 2 B. & P. 437.

A security for costs may not be required from a wife, who brings an action in her husband's name, he being abroad, on a promise expressly made to her. Mingotti v. Drummond, 1 Ld. Rep. 469.

Quære, if an informer in a qui tam action shall be obliged to give security for costs? Geddy q. t. v. Barlow, Cowp. 24.

The court of C. P. will not require the plaintiff, in a qui tam action, to give security for costs, though it appeared by affidavit that he is insolvent. Field q. t. v. Carron, 2 H. Black. 27.

In such a case, the proper mode for the defendant to pursue is, to move the court that the issue money should be paid into the hands of the prothonotary. Id.

Where the plaintiff, after issue joined, has been convicted of felony, and received sentence of transportation, the court will compel him, or his attorney, to give security for costs retrospective and prospective. Harvey v. Jacob, 1 B. & A. 159.

Where, in trespass against parish officers for distraining for poor-rates, it appeared that the plaintiff refused to pay the rates by the desire of his landlord, who was also the attorney in the cause, the court stayed the proceedings until he gave security for costs. Tenant v. Brown, and Jones v. Brown, 5 B. & C. 208.

Where the whole interest of a party in an award is assigned to another, the court will not compel the latter to give security for costs in an action brought by the former upon the award. Day v. Smith, 1 Dowl. P. C. 460.

But where property has been assigned by a debtor for the benefit of his creditors, the trustees have been compelled to give security. Id.

Where an order was made pendente lite, admitting the plaintiff to prosecute his action in forma pauperis, and an application by the defendant for security for, and taxation of, the costs previously incurred, was not made for nearly two years afterwards, the court refused the application, and allowed a retrospective operation to the order. Jones v. Peers, M'Clell. & Y. 282.

6. Time and Manner of Application.

When Application to be made.—An application to compel the plaintiff to give security for costs must, in ordinary cases, be made before issue joined. Reg. Gen. K. B., C. P., and Exchequer, H. T. 2 W. 4, 1 Dowl. P. C. 196; 8 Bing. 303; 1 M. & Scott, 429; 3 B. & Adol. 389; 2 C. & J. 196; 2 Tyr. 350; 4 Bligh, N. S. 604.

Before the rule the application to the court of Exchequer must have been made before issue joined, although the issue was joined in the preceding vacation. Anon. 5 Price, 610.

But, in K. B., a rule, calling on the plaintiff to give security for costs, might be made after issue joined. Barker v. Hargreaves, 6 T. R. 597.

But not after verdict. Anon. 1 Marsh. 4.

A plaintiff residing abroad, with the knowledge of the defendant, at the time of action brought, would not be required to give security for costs, after issue joined, unless some special reason was assigned to induce the court to impose such terms on the plaintiff. Du Belloix v. Waterpark (Lord), 1 D. & R. 348, n.

In C. P. the motion requiring a plaintiff to give security for costs, on the ground of his being resident abroad, must have been made before plea pleaded. Kasten v. Plaw, 1 M. & P. 30. But see Anon. 2 Chit. 157.

Security for costs may be applied for after an order for time to plead, but before plea. Wilson v. Minchin, 1 Dowl. P. C. 299; 2 C. & J. 87; 2 Tyr. 166; S. C. nom. Minchin v. Minchin, 1 Price's P. C. 159.

Where a defendant pleads after it has come to his knowledge that the plaintiff is abroad, the court will not oblige the latter to give security for costs. Brown v. Wright, 1 Dowl. P. C. 95.

After a defendant has undertaken to accept short notice of trial, he cannot require security for costs from the plaintiff, a foreigner, residing abroad. De Montellano (Duke) v. Garcias, 7 Moore, 361; 1 Bing. 67; S. P. Michel v. Pariski, 2 H. Black. 593; Muller v. Gernon, and Steel v. Lacy, 3 Taunt. 272, 273.

An application to make the plaintiff, who resided abroad, give security for the costs, refused, after notice of trial given; as the defendant might have applied earlier, after knowledge of the fact of the plaintiff's residence, and before so much of the costs incurred. Walters v. Frythall, 5 East, 338.

An application for security for costs, on the ground of the plaintiff's residing abroad, must be made promptly after the defendant knows that fact. Where, therefore, after an action had been brought in November, 1820, the plaintiff went abroad in March, 1821:—Held, that the defendant applied too late in Easter Term, 1822, for security for costs, issue having been joined, and no affidavit being made when it came to the defendant's knowledge that the plaintiff had gone abroad; the affidavit in support of such motion, if made after plea, must expressly state that the defendant was not acquainted with the plaintiff's residing abroad when he pleaded. Duncan v. Stent, 1 D. & R. 348; 5 B. & A. 702.

In quo warranto informations, the court will not force an indigent relator to give security for costs, when it does not appear that the fact of indigence had not come to the defendant's knowledge before issue joined. Rex v. Day, Rex v. Patteson, 1 Dowl. P. C. 32.

Previous Application.—Application must in all cases be made to the plaintiff or his attorney before a motion for security for costs will be entertained. Adams v. Brown, 2 M. & Scott, 154; 9 Bing. 81; 1 Dowl. P. C. 273.

The court will not grant a rule that the plaintiff may give security for costs, unless application has been made to him to give security. Bass v. Clive, 3 M. & S. 283. And see 4 M. & S. 13; 4 Camp. 78.

But in one case such a rule was granted although it did not appear that application had been made to him to give such security. Hancock v. Smith, 2 Chit. 150.

The court will compel a plaintiff resident out of the jurisdiction to give security for costs, although no previous application has been made to the plaintiff's attorney, or notice of the motion given. But without such application or notice the rule nisi will not stay proceedings. Jones v. Jones, 1 Dowl. P. C. 313; 2 C. & J. 207; 2 Tyr. 216; S. P. Baille v. Bernales, 1 B. & A. 381; Anon. 2 Chit. 150.

Seemingly, a defendant is not entitled to a rule to show cause why the plaintiff should not give security for costs until he has applied to the plaintiff's attorney, and he has refused, or at least he is not entitled to make it absolute, if the plaintiff's attorney, having offered to give such security as the master should require, and to enter into a bond for the purpose, the defendant refuses to accept of this accommodation in order merely to gain time, or defeat the purposes of justice. Cheap v. Potham, 2 Smith, 661.

Other Things.—The court will not stay the proceedings, till the plaintiff, a foreigner, give security for the costs, unless the defendant have put in bail. De la Preuve v. Duc de Biron, 4 T. R. 697.

If a foreigner sue two defendants, and only one of them puts in bail, that one may require the plaintiff to give security for the costs, without putting in bail for the other defendant. Carr v. Shaw, 6 T. R. 496.

On moving for a rule nisi to compel the plaintiff to give security for costs, the defendant must state in what stage the proceedings are: the court of C. P. will not grant the rule nisi in a cause in which interlocutory judgment has been signed, until that judgment has been set aside. Luxaletti v. Powell, 1 Marsh. 376.

A defendant makes a motion at his peril, if it should be too late; therefore he need not state how far the proceedings have gone, and it is for the plaintiff to show that the motion is not in time. Jones v. Jones, 2 Tyr. 216; 2 C. & J. 207; 1 Dowl. P. C. 313.

Where a defendant moves that the plaintiffs, residing abroad, shall give security for costs, the court will not make the rule mutual on the ground that the defendant is also resident abroad. Baxter v. Morgan, 2 Marsh. 80; 6 Taunt. 379.

On a motion to compel the plaintiff to give security for costs, the court of C. P. will not enter into the merits of the case, nor grant the rule on account of the hardship of the case upon the defendant. Ciragne v. Hassan, 1 Marsh. 421; 6 Taunt. 20.

XXI. TAXATION OF COSTS.

1. Practice.

Statutes.]—By 1 Will. 4, c. 7, s. 6, no officer of the courts shall, for the purpose of taxing costs on any judgment to be signed by virtue of the act, be compelled to attend at any time between the last day of August and the 21st day of October in any year.

By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 36, the judges, or eight of them, are empowered by rule or order to make regulations for the taxation of costs by any of the officers of the courts indiscriminately.

By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 47, s. 8, power is given to the court of Review in bankruptcy to order costs to be taxed by the registrars or deputy registrars of the court of Bankruptcy.

Taxation of costs is not necessary upon a cognovit. Clothier v. Ees, 3 M. & Scott, 216.

Appointment.]—One appointment only shall be deemed necessary for proceeding in the taxation of costs, or an attorney's bill. Reg. Gen. K. B., C. P., and Exchequer, H. T. 2 W. 4, 1 Dowl. P. C. 196; 8 Bing. 303; 1 M. & Scott, 429; 3 B. & Adol. 388; 2 C. & J. 195; 2 Tyr. 349; 4 Bligh, N. S. 604.

Before this rule, in K. B., the attorney, on whom a notice of an appointment to tax had been served, must have attended without waiting for a second, or the master might proceed ex parte. Reg. Gen. K. B. H. T. 32 Geo. 3, 4 T. R. 580.

And if the defendant in an action on a foreign judgment, which ordered costs to be paid, neglected to appear to tax the costs, the plaintiff might tax the costs ex parte. Sadler v. Robins, 1 Camp. 253—Ellenborough.

Where three appointments were made by the master upon an order for the plaintiff to amend upon payment of costs, and the attorney for the plaintiff attended the master accordingly, but no one appeared for the defendant, the master in the Exchequer might indorse the order, allowing the sum of 3s. 4d. for the costs of the attendance, without requiring an affidavit of the service of the appointments, or of the attendance. Freel v. Hammond, 2 Y. & J. 32.

The court of C. P. will not require the attendance of a third person before the prothonotary on the taxation of a bill of costs, which had been referred to him, to assist a master in Chancery to whom the reference had been previously given. Protheroe v. Thomas, 3 Moore, 3; 8 Taunt. 67.

Notice of Appointment.]—If it be agreed between the respective attorneys of the parties, that a particular person shall tax the costs, it is no answer to an action for such costs, that the defendant's attorney had no notice to attend the taxation, if he did not object when he was first apprised of its having taken place in his absence. Watson v. Murrel, 1 C. & P. 307—Garrow.

Where a bill of exchange is referred to the master to compute principal and interest, the plaintiff's attorney is not bound to serve the defendant with notice of an appointment of taxing costs: the defendant, if he wishes to be present, must take out a rule for that purpose. Backford v. Kendal, 1 Chit. 693.

If a defendant pay money into court, which the plaintiff agrees to accept, he may serve the defendant with notice of an appointment before the master to tax the costs. Kabell v. Hudson, 4 T. R. 10.

Notice of Taxation.]—Before taxation of costs, one day's notice shall be given to the opposite party. Reg. Gen. T. T. 1 W. 4, K. B., C. P., and Exchequer, 2 B. & Adol. 789; 7 Bing. 78; 4 C. & P. 604; 1 C. & J. 472; 1 Dowl. P. C. 105; 1 Tyr. 523; 5 M. & P. 817; 1 Priest P. C. 110; 4 Bligh, N. S. 583.

One day's previous notice of the time of taxing costs upon rules, orders, town postcas and inquisitions, and a copy of the bill of costs and affidavit of increase (if any), shall be given and delivered by the attorney or attorneys of the party or parties whose costs are to be taxed, to the attorney of the other party or parties in the same cause, at the time of service of such notice; and in the case of postcas and inquisitions in country causes, the notice shall be given two days, and the copy and affidavit delivered two days before such taxation. Reg. Gen. M. T. 1 Will. 4, Exch. 1 Price's P. C. viii; 1 C. & J. 279; 1 Tyr. 161.

Where, by the practice of the court, costs need not be taxed, it is unnecessary to give the one day's notice. Griffiths v. Liversidge, 2 Dowl. P. C. 143.

Where, at the instance of one of several joint defendants, the taxation of the plaintiff's costs is deferred, notice of taxation on another day is not necessary. Perry v. Turner, 1 Dowl. P. C. 300; 2 C. & J. 89; 2 Tyr. 128; 1 Price's P. C. 161.

Reasonable costs of serving a notice of taxation will be allowed, and if the defendant resides in the country, and had not employed an attorney, an attorney in the country may be employed to serve him with a notice of taxation. Thorp v. Wordy, 2 C. & J. 488; 1 Dowl. P. C. 576; S. C. nom. Thorp v. Worthy, 2 Tyr. 489.

Seemingly, that a judgment signed without due notice of taxing costs may be set aside for irregularity; but where due notice has been given, and the taxation is postponed at the request of defendant, reasonable notice of re-appointment is sufficient. Perry v. Turner, 1 Price's P. C. 161; 2 C. & J. 89; 2 Tyr. 128; 1 Dowl. P. C. 300.

Irregularity in an execution in signing judgment and seizing goods, without delivering a copy of the bill of costs, or giving a day's notice before taxing it, must be complained of promptly. Where ten days intervened between the seizure of the goods, and the striking of a docket against the defendant without any step to set aside the execution, it was held that an application for that purpose after that time (the defendant's bankruptcy having intervened) was too late, and that the irregularity, if any, was waived. Rutledge v. Giles, 2 Tyr. 169.

2. Cases as to Costs allowed.

(a) Writ and Proceedings.

In the taxation of costs, held, that the master was justified in allowing the expenses of two writs issued in one action against the defendant into two counties, where it was doubtful in which county he was to be found. Morris v. Hunt, 1 Chit. 544. And see — v. Bonar, 2 Chit. 148.

Plaintiff's attorney was not entitled to charge defendant for costs of declaration on subp. ad resp. in the Exchequer unless an appearance was entered. Ex parte Arden, 1 Price's P. C. 149.

If a writ be returnable in the first return of the term, and the defendant give notice that the debt and costs will be paid before the appearance day, and accordingly tender the debt and costs of the writ before that day, the plaintiff is not entitled to the costs of a declaration delivered de bene esse. Partington v. Williams, 2 N. R. 398.

Quære, whether he would be entitled to such costs if no notice had been given? Id.

The costs of a special original were allowed as between attorney and client, where the action was brought on a bond, the penalty of which was more than 50*l.*, but the sum due was only found to be 20*l.* — v. Bonar, 2 Chit. 148.

(b) Attorney's Attendance.

The allowance to a non-resident attorney for attending a trial is two guineas a day, including all expenses; but where he attends more than one trial, one guinea per day for each. Where he attends as a witness, one guinea a day additional. Ex parte Whitehead, 1 Price's P. C. 136.

(c) Fees to Counsel.

A plaintiff may be allowed for fees to three counsel on the taxation of costs in a cause of difficulty. Morris v. Hunt, 1 Chit. 544.

Where, in actions on a policy of insurance against several, the attorney had only made out a full brief in one cause, and short statement in the others, but the master allowed for the full briefs in all, the court of K. B. made a rule for him to review his taxation. Martineau v. Barnes, 1 Tidd's Prac. 666.

(d) Jury.

The master may allow the sum of one guinea each to talesmen, on the trial of a cause by a special jury in London or Middlesex. Morris v. Hunt, 1 Chit. 544.

Where there is a certificate that a cause was proper to be tried by a special jury, it is the practice to allow only the costs actually allowed and paid to the jurors. But the court of K. B. doubted whether the proper construction of the statute was not that the party should be entitled, in such cases, to all the costs, from which, if there had been no certificate, he would have been excluded. Cursum v. Durham, 2 Chit. 154.

(e) Other Cases.

Costs of entering judgment nunc pro tunc are costs in the cause. Carlisle v. Garland, 2 M. & Scott, 180; 9 Bing. 85.

The court of C. P. will allow the costs of a rule to repay defendant money deposited with the sheriff, which had been paid into court under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 71, with the costs in the cause. Symes v. Rose, 5 Bing. 269.

Where plaintiff, on the eve of trial, accepted from defendant a cognovit for a certain sum payable at a future day, in full discharge of the action, and the master, on taxation, allowed plaintiff costs previous to the cognovit: the court refused to admit plaintiff's affidavit, stating a verbal agreement that he should have such costs in case defendant made default in payment, and that he made such default; and made the rule for the disallowance of such costs absolute. Anon. 7 D. & R. 375.

Where defendant had entered into an agreement with the plaintiff in writing, but not stamped, and the plaintiff's attorney engrossed a copy thereof; and, before action, tendered the same, properly stamped, to the defendant, which he refused to sign; the court directed the master to include the costs of stamping the agreement in the costs of the action. Bowen v. Pitman, 2 Esp. 728—Kenyon.

A plaintiff is entitled to the allowance of a sum sworn to have been paid by him for the postage of foreign letters, as being solely applicable to the cause; but he is entitled to the expenses of the production and translation of such letters only as are applicable to such parts of the counts as relate to the verdict. Lopes v. De Tasset, 7 Moore, 120; 3 B. & B. 292.

Upon a petition to the Lord Chancellor, he made an order that the costs should be paid by the defendants. In an action for the maintenance, whereby the plaintiff incurred costs in judicial proceedings, he cannot either recover the costs ordered to be paid in the shape of special damage, or the extra costs as between himself and his attorney. Hathaway v. Barrow, 1 Camp. 151—Mansfield. And see Winstanley v. Head, 4 Taunt. 192.

In taxing the costs upon a mortgage transaction, the mortgagee is not allowed the expense of a declaration of trust from him to a cestui que trust, who lends the money. Martin's case, 5 Bing. 160.

D., having given a cognovit for 357l., mortgaged certain premises as a security for the payment of that sum, and the costs of the judgment, and all other costs and charges whatsoever attending the same. The mortgagee having levied execution, her right to the goods seized was disputed in actions at the suit of certain persons who claimed to be assignees of D. under a bankruptcy. The mortgagee failed upon a first trial, but succeeded in a second, D. not proving to be a bankrupt:—Held, that the mortgagee could not claim from D. the costs of this action, as costs or charges attending the judgment confessed by D. Doe d. Holt v. Roe, 6 Bing. 447; 4 M. & P. 177.

The mortgagor, on the levy being made, gave the sheriff notice that the goods seized belonged to him jointly with another person, upon which the sheriff impanelled a jury to determine to whom the property belonged:—Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to claim of the mortgagor the costs of the inquisition, if the mortgagee had paid them to the sheriff, and the court referred it to the prothonotary to ascertain that fact. Id.

In an action brought to recover the balance of an account, the parties agreed that the amount should be referred to two arbitrators, who, in settling the balance due, were to be guided by the decision of a jury in regard of a certain cargo of cotton shipped by the plaintiffs, the costs of which formed one of the items. The jury found that the plaintiffs were not entitled to charge the defendants with the costs of the cotton; and the arbitrators, after excluding such costs pursuant to the verdict, found a certain sum to be due to the plaintiffs. The prothonotary, on taxation, refused to allow the plaintiffs the costs of the trial which applied to the cotton:—Held, that he was right in so doing. Fairlie v. Parker, 1 M. & P. 438.

3. Pleadings.

Such parts only of pleadings to which a demurrer relate are to be copied in the demurrer book; and if any other parts be copied, the costs are not to be allowed on taxation, either as between party and party, or attorney and client. Reg. Gen. C. P., H. T. 8 & 3 Geo. 4, 4 Bing. 549.

Whereas declarations in actions upon bills of exchange, promissory notes, and the counts usually called the common counts, occasion unnecessary expense to parties by reason of their length, and the same may be drawn in a more concise form; now, for the prevention of such expense, it is ordered, That if any declaration in assumpsit hereafter filed or delivered, and to which the plaintiff shall not be entitled to a plea as of this term, being for any of the demands mentioned in the schedule of forms and directions annexed to the order, or demands of a like nature, shall exceed in length such of the said forms set forth or directed in the said schedule as may be applicable to the case; or if any declaration in debt be so filed or delivered for similar causes of action, and for which the action of assumpsit would lie, shall exceed such length, as costs of the excess shall be allowed to the plaintiff, if he succeeds in the cause; and such costs of the excess as have been incurred by the defendant shall be taxed and allowed to the defendant, and be deducted from the costs allowed to the plaintiff. And it is further ordered, That on the taxation of costs, as between attorney and client, no costs shall be allowed to the attorney in respect of any such excess of length; and in case any costs shall be payable by the plaintiff to the defendant on account of such excess, the amount thereof to be deducted from the amount of the attorney's bill. Reg. Gen. T. T. 1 Will. 4 K. B., C. P., & Exch., 2 B. & Adol. 783; 7 Eng. 774; 4 C. & P. 607; 1 C. & J. 475; 1 Dowl. P. C. 107; 1 Tyr. 525; 5 M. & P. 819; 1 Priest P. C. 112; 4 Bligh, N. S. 585.

Where several special counts are inserted in the same agreement, the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict on one count only, and to the costs of that count. A bill of exceptions would lie, if a judge were to direct that all the counts were proved. Ward v. Bell, 2 Dowl. P. C. 76.

4. Expenses of Evidence.

In trover a verdict was taken for plaintiff to the full amount of the goods converted, the plaintiff consenting to take them back in reduction of damages, upon its being referred to an arbitrator, by order of Nisi Prius, to ascertain the amount of deterioration, which amount, with the costs of the cause, were to be paid to plaintiff:—Held, that the expense of witnesses attending the arbitrator were costs in the cause. Tregunning v. Attenborough, 7 Bing. 733; 5 M. & P. 453; 1 Dowl. P. C. 225.

In an action of slander, although there be no justification, and no special damage alleged, the plaintiff, if he recovers, is entitled to the expense of witnesses necessary to prove an imputation explanatory of the slander, and his professional reputation. Andrews v. Thornton, 8 Bing. 431; 1 M. & Scott, 670.

A charge for a document tendered, but not received in evidence, cannot be supported. Bagnall v. Underwood, 11 Price, 511.

Expenses of successful searches for pedigrees are allowed for by the prothonotary in taxing costs. Johnson v. Lawson, 2 Bing. 341.

In an action on the case to recover damages for the disturbance of a water-course, where the prothonotary had allowed the expenses attending such plans as had been used for the information of the court at the trial, such expenses were al-terwards ordered to be allowed. Holmes v. Holmes, 9 Moore, 158; 2 Bing. 75.

Expenses of a person sent to inquire after the subscribing witnesses to a bond, not allowed in the taxation of costs. Laing v. Bowes, 3 M. & S. 89.

5. Expenses of Witnesses.

(a) Remuneration for Loss of Time.

Generally.—Compensation for loss of time disallowed to two merchants coming from abroad as witnesses. Moor v. Adam, 5 M. & S. 156; S. P. Lowry v. Doubleday, 5 M. & S. 159, n.

A broker is not entitled to compensation for loss of time. Lopes v. De Tastet, 7 Moore, 120; 3 B. & B. 292.

Where the prothonotary, on the taxation of costs, allowed for various sums expended in experiments, and a compensation for loss of time to scientific and professional men employed in making them, with a view to ascertain the increased risk or advantage in a new process of boiling sugar by means of heated oil, and who were called as witnesses at the trial; the court of C. P. directed him to review his taxation, on the ground that no such allowance or compensation ought to be made. Severn v. Olive, Same v. Slade, 6 Moore, 235; 3 B. & B. 72.

A plaintiff will not be allowed his expenses in the construction of a model, nor a compensation for loss of time by scientific persons who had been sent to a distant part of the country to inspect a building there, although he could not safely have proceeded to trial without their testimony. Bayley v. Beaumont, 11 Moore, 497.

In taxing costs, the contingent losses which witnesses may have suffered by obeying the subpoena cannot be allowed. Hullusson v. Staples, 1 Dougl. 438.

If the plaintiff subpoena the defendant's attorney to produce books, the latter is not entitled to receive any thing from the plaintiff for expenses or loss of time in attending as a witness. Pritchard v. Walker, 3 C. & P. 212—Vaughan.

Foreign Witnesses.—Reasonable allowance in costs may be made for the loss of time of a necessary foreign witness, who is not accessible to subpoena, and who will not attend without compensation. Lomergan v. Royal Exchange Assurance Company, 1 Dowl. P. C. 233; 5 M. & P. 105; 7 Bing. 729.

The courts of C. P. and K. B. will allow the costs of detaining a foreigner here to give evidence upon a trial, computed from the day of the writ sued out to the day of trial. Sturdy v. Anon., 4 Taunt. 697; S. P. Anon. 1 Chit. 89, n.

The costs of bringing over a necessary witness from the continent to this country are to be allowed. Cotton v. Witt, 4 Taunt. 55.

But not the costs of his return. Id.

Although it was previously held in C. P. that the costs were only to be allowed from the time of the witness's coming within the jurisdiction of the court. Hagedorn v. Allnutt, 3 Taunt. 379.

A plaintiff, who brings over a foreign witness hither, in order to judge by his testimony whether there is ground to bring an action, and afterwards sues, and examines the foreigner at the trial, may be allowed the costs of detaining him here from the time of the writ sued out until the trial, and a reasonable sum for his sustenance here during the same time, but not the costs of his passage hither, or of his return. Schimmel v. Lousada, 4 Taunt. 695.

If a witness is bona fide sent for from a foreign country to support an intended action, though the writ is not sued out until after his arrival, the plaintiff is entitled in that case to the costs of bringing him over, his subsistence and compensation for his loss of time spent here pending the suit, for the purposes thereof, and to the costs of his return. Tremain v. Barrett, and Same v. Faith, 1 Marsh. 463, 563; 6 Taunt. 88.

But if the witness is sent for to give evidence in one action which is discontinued, and the plaintiff calls him as a witness in another action against a different defendant, but arising out of the same transaction, he is entitled in the second action to the costs only of the witness's subsistence and detention for the purpose of the second action, but not of his voyage hither or of his return. Id.

Remedy of Witness.—A witness attending a trial under a subpoena is not entitled to a compensation for his loss of time, although the party requiring his attendance expressly promises to pay him for such loss. Willis v. Peckham, 4 Moore, 300; 1 B. & B. 515.

A witness attending at the trial of a cause on subpoena cannot maintain an action for compensation for his loss of time in attendance, even though he is an attorney. Collins v. Godefroy, 1 Dowl. P. C. 326; 1 B. & Adol. 950.

A promise by an attorney, after trial, to pay a witness a compensation for his loss of time, cannot, it seems, be enforced, either by action or attachment. Bates v. Sturges, 2 M. & Scott, 172; 7 Bing. 585.

(b) Maintenance.

Where foreign witnesses appear to be domiciled in this country, they are not entitled to the expenses of their return home; and it seems that a party is not entitled to the costs of witnesses, unless they have been paid to them previously to taxation. Lopes v. De Tastet, 7 Moore, 120; 3 B. & B. 292.

Where the captain of a merchant ship, domiciled in this country, was detained by the plaintiff for a considerable time to give evidence in a cause, but before issue was joined or notice of trial given:—Held, that the master was at liberty, in taxing the costs, to allow the expenses of maintaining the witness during such detention. Anon. 2 D. & R. 424; S. C. nom. Berry v. Pratt, 1 B. & C. 276.

Subsistence allowed in costs in a policy cause, to the master of a ship insured, a material witness, from the time of subpoena to the time of trial, although the witness resided in England, was not examined, was a master in the royal navy, and did not show the permission of the Admiralty for him to engage in the merchant service. Mount v. Larkins, 8 Bing. 195; 1 M. & Scott, 357; 1 Dowl. P. C. 262.

But refused for his further detention pending a rule for a new trial, upon a point to which his evidence was not applicable. Id.

So, in another cause, the court approved the allowance, on taxation, of subsistence money for a witness, the captain of a ship, from the service of the subpoena till the time of trial. Temperly v. Scott, 1 M. & Scott, 601; 8 Bing. 392.

If a plaintiff subpoena witnesses in a cause then ready for trial, but which does not afterwards, in fact, come on to be tried, in consequence of his declining to reply and take issue on a new fact, subsequently put on the record by additional plea, the expenses of the actual attendance of those witnesses are allowable on taxation of his costs, (the plaintiff ultimately succeeding on the trial of the cause), although he do not countermand his notice of trial in time, notwithstanding there might have been time enough for him to have done so during the intermediate period, and even to have replied and taken issue on the additional plea; on the ground that a plaintiff shall in such case be considered entitled to a reasonable time to give instructions for advice, and otherwise prepare himself. But it should seem that in such cases there must appear to have been some unnecessary delay, or other suspicious conduct, on the part of the defendant. Allison v. Neverre, 1 Price, 381.

The court will not allow the expenses of the plaintiff's witnesses, brought too early to the assizes to attend on a trial there. Anon. 2 Chit. 200.

A witness who is subpoenaed in London in August, to attend a trial at the adjourned sittings in October, and who is at the time of service on the eve of departure for the continent, is entitled to the expenses of coming from the continent to attend the trial. Vice v. Anson (Viscountess), 3 C. & P. 19; M. & M. 76—Tenterden: S. C. not S. P. 7 B. & C. 409; 1 M. & R. 114.

The plaintiff is also entitled to the expense of detaining such witness in this country, to await the trial of the cause, although opportunity is afforded of examination upon interrogatory. Loneragan v. Royal Exchange Assurance, 7 Bing. 725; 5 M. & P. 447, 806; 1 Dowl. P. C. 223.

(c) Application for Admission.

The expense of a witness called only to prove the copy of any judgment, writ, or other public document, shall not be allowed in costs, unless the party calling him shall, within a reasonable time before the trial, have required the adverse party, by notice in writing, and production of such copy, to admit such copy, and unless such adverse party shall have refused or neglected to make such admission. Reg. Gen. K. B., C. P., and Exch., 2 Will. 4, 1 Dowl. P. C. 199; 8 Bing. 307; 1 M. & Scott, 433; 3 B. & Adol. 392; 2 C. & J. 201; 2 Tyr. 352; 4 Bligh, N. S. 607.

The expense of a witness called only to prove the handwriting to, or the execution of, any written instrument stated upon the pleadings, shall not be allowed, unless the adverse party shall, upon summons before a judge, a reasonable time before the trial, (such summons stating therein the name, description, and place of abode of the intended witness), have neglected or refused to admit such handwriting or execution, or unless the judge, upon attendance before him, shall endorse upon such summons, that he does not think it reasonable to require such admission. Reg. Gen. K. B., C. P., & Exch., H. T. 2 Will. 4, 1 Dowl. P. C. 199; 8 Bing. 307; 1 M. & Scott, 433; 3 B. & Adol. 392; 2 C. & J. 201; 2 Tyr. 352; 4 Bligh, N. S. 607.

(d) Examination on Interrogatories.

By 1 Will. 4, c. 22, the courts may examine witnesses on interrogatories where they shall deem it necessary.

By s. 3, the costs of the writ or commission are to be in the discretion of the court.

By s. 9, the costs of the rule or order for the examination of witnesses under any commission or otherwise, and of the proceedings thereon, are to be costs in the cause unless otherwise directed either by the judge making such rule or order, or by the judge before whom the cause may be tried, or by the court.

Before the statute, the costs of examining witnesses, whether at home or abroad, upon interrogatories, were always borne by the party obtaining the rule for that purpose, and did not abide the event of the cause, unless so ordered by the court. Anon. Hull Costs, 539; 2 Tidd's Prac. 863.

If the rule of court for the examination of witnesses by commission expressed that the depositions of witnesses at Hamburg and Lubeck were to be taken, and the commission was directed to persons at Hamburg, the expenses of bringing witnesses from Lubeck to Hamburg were allowed upon taxation. Muller v. Borthorne, 3 B. & P. 556.

Where the defendant put off a trial on the terms that a witness going abroad should be examined on interrogatories:—Held, that the plaintiff having detained the witness until the trial after he had been examined on interrogatories, and cross-examined by the defendant, was entitled to the costs of the detention, but that the defendant was entitled to deduct his costs of cross-examining on interrogatories. Patterson v. Bann, 1 Chit. 89.

Where a party obtained leave, by consent, to examine witnesses abroad on depositions, he was not entitled to be allowed the expense of taking the depositions in the taxation of costs, though he succeeded. Taylor v. Royal Exchange Assurance Company, 8 East, 393.

The party succeeding was not entitled to the costs of examining witnesses on interrogatories, or taking office copies of depositions; but each party applying paid his own expense, unless it was otherwise expressed in the rule. Stephens v. Crichton, 2 East, 259.

Plaintiffs had obtained a mandamus under stat. 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 44, for the examination of witnesses in India, and the writ and depositions were returned to this country; but the defendants did not join in the application for the writ, nor examine nor cross-examine witnesses under it, and the plaintiffs obtained a verdict:—Held, that they were not entitled to the costs attending the writ, or of the office copies of the depositions. Fairlie v. Parker, 1 M. & P. 438.

Where a defendant obtained a mandamus under 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 44, to examine witnesses in India, the plaintiff, having recovered a verdict, was entitled to his costs of cross-examining such witnesses. Whytt v. Macintosh, 2 M. & R. 133; 8 B. & C. 317.

(e) Question of Admissibility.

Where there is a reasonable ground to believe that the testimony of a witness will be admissible, his expenses may be allowed on taxation of costs against the adverse party. Rushworth v. Wilson, 1 B. & C. 267.

Where the master, on the taxation of costs for not proceeding to trial pursuant to notice, disallowed the expenses of a witness brought from Newcastle-upon-Tyne to London, to give evidence by comparison of hand-writing in a cause where the defence was forgery, the court ordered the master to review his taxation; and held, that upon a question whether the evidence were or were not admissible, the expenses of the witness ought not to have been disallowed. Mutchinson v. Allcock, 1 D. & R. 165.

The master is in general sole judge of what witnesses shall be allowed on taxation, and, therefore, when he had, in an action of libel, disallowed all witnesses to prove innuendoes, the court refused to interfere to make him review his taxation. Skelton v. Seward, 1 Dowl. P. C. 411.

(f) Witness not called.

The charges allowed for the attendance and expenses of witnesses must depend on the circumstances of the case. It is not because some of those who have been subpoenaed are not examined that they are not to be allowed for in taxing costs. Bagnall v. Underwood, 11 Price, 511.

The court will not direct the master to review his taxation, because he has allowed expenses for witnesses who were not called. Adamson v. Noel, 1 Chit. 200.

It seems that where many witnesses are unnecessarily called by the successful party, the judge will inform the prothonotary of the circumstance, in order to guide him in his taxation of costs. Zerk v. Webster, 1 C. & P. 105, 106, n.—Park.

Where, upon application to the attorney for the defendant to admit certain facts in proof, and he refused, and afterwards, upon going to trial, it appeared that, by having pleaded a tender, it became unnecessary to prove them, but the plaintiff took witnesses to the assizes for that purpose, and was allowed their expenses in the taxed costs, notwithstanding they were not called upon the trial, the court refused to revise the taxation. Hanhorn v. Thomas, 3 Smith, 361.

If the plaintiff subpoena witnesses, and remunerate them accordingly, who have been previously subpoenaed by and received their expenses from the defendant, which circumstances they conceal from the plaintiff; the court of C. P. will allow the latter the expenses he has paid those witnesses for their attendance, although they were not called for him at the trial, on the ground that such payment was obtained by fraud. Benson v. Schneider, 1 Moore, 76; 7 Taunt. 272, 337; Holt, 416.

6. Reviewing Taxation.

Where the plaintiff's attorney had been guilty of gross misconduct towards the defendant, in consequence of which the prothonotary refused to allow the plaintiff any costs, the court of C. P. refused a rule for him to review his taxation, although the defendant had taken out a summons to stay proceedings in the action, on payment of debt and costs. Adams v. Staton, 7 Moore, 365; 1 Bing. 69.

The court of Exchequer will not interfere with the province of the master in the taxation of costs of increase, by ordering a new taxation in favour of the defendant, on the ground that the plaintiff himself has been the cause of increasing the amount of the costs, by unnecessarily and wantonly proceeding to trial after an offer to sign a cognovit, unless in a very strong and clear case; but it seems otherwise, where there has been no previous delaying the plaintiff by the proceedings of the defendant, and the conduct of the former has been palpably vexatious; or the defendant has made the offer in good time, and a cognovit executed has been actually tendered; and a rule, calling on the plaintiff to show cause why the master should not review his taxation of costs under such circumstances, having been discharged on affidavits filed in answer, stating facts which furnished a sufficient reason for what the master had done, it was discharged with costs. Williams v. Wynne, 2 Price, 344.

Costs of a rule for reviewing a taxation are not given where the mistake is with the master. Ward v. Bell, 2 Dowl. P. C. 76.

Where a submission to arbitration in a cause in the court of Exchequer is made a rule of the court of K. B., and by the award the costs are to be taxed by the master of the Exchequer, the court have no jurisdiction to direct a review of the taxation. Chapman v. Lansdown, 1 Anst. 273.

It is not necessary that a party applying for an order upon the master to review his taxation of costs, should first pay into court the amount of the items in the bill of costs, to which no objection has been made. Bagnall v. Underwood, 11 Price, 511.

The affidavit, on a motion in the Exchequer for the master to review his taxation of costs, must specify the charges objected to. Daniel v. Bishop, M'Clel. 61; 13 Price, 129.

And it must be confined to the objections alleged against the taxation, and not enter into the merits. Williams v. Hunt, 1 Chit. 321.

No objections to the master's taxation can be taken, unless they are specified in the affidavit or rule. Aliven v. Furnival, 2 Dowl. P. C. 49.

Affidavits used before the master on taxation of costs, cannot be read on showing cause against a rule for reviewing the taxation, unless they are referred to in the rule; a notice that they will be used is not sufficient. Cliffe v. Prosser, 2 Dowl. P. C. 21.

XXII. MEANS OF RECOVERING COSTS.

1. Application to the Court.

Where there are several defendants, each is liable for the whole costs; and if after satisfaction from any one the plaintiff takes it against another, such defendant may apply to the court. Wilson v. Foote, Bull. N. P. 335.

One defendant, who had given a general release to the plaintiff after the costs of nonsuit had been taxed, was ordered to pay to the other defendants their shares. Darlow v. Collinson, Bull. N. P. 335.

The court refused a rule relative to the payment of costs to the amount of only a few shillings, when every other point was settled. Anon. Lofft, 193.

A rule was refused to compel the attorney of a defendant, who was a member of parliament, to pay costs, as the proper remedy was by sequestration. Anon. Lofft, 156.

Trespass for breaking and entering plaintiff's close and cutting heath, &c.; plea not guilty, and verdict for the plaintiff. On the trial it appeared that the trespasses were committed by the direction of A. B., and the heath taken to his premises. On a motion being made that A. B. should pay the plaintiff the damages and taxed costs, the court refused the application, as the plaintiff ought before he brought the action to have ascertained who was the substantial defendant. Berkeley v. Dimery, 10 B. & C. 113.

2. Levy in Execution.

By 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, s. 5, in cases of executions against the goods of the defendant, the plaintiff may also levy the poundage fees and expenses of the execution, over and above the sum recovered by the judgment.

A plaintiff who levies costs and expenses of an execution, in addition to the sum recovered by the judgment, under 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, s. 5, must at his peril take care to keep them within such a reasonable sum as will be afterwards allowed in taxation by the prothonotary, otherwise the court of C. P. on motion will order the excess to be restored, with costs to be paid by the plaintiff. Benwell v. Oakley, 2 Taunt. 174.

In order to discharge a plaintiff out of custody who is in execution for costs, it must appear that such costs were paid on his account: where, therefore, a plaintiff was in execution for costs arising to a magistrate, from a verdict in an action for false imprisonment, an affidavit, stating that they had been paid to the latter by the treasury, was held insufficient. Butt v. Co-nant, 6 Moore, 65; 3 B. & B. 3.

3. Staying Proceedings in Second Action.

In what Cases generally.—The costs of a first action on the case must be paid before a second will be allowed to proceed on the same account, when the merits have been fully tried. Milchert v. Halsey, 3 Wils. 149; 2 W. Black. 741.

The court of C. P. will not stay proceedings against a defendant till the debt and costs, recovered by him in a former action against the plaintiff, be paid. Cooke v. Dobree, 1 H. Black. 10.

In an action of trespass for false imprisonment, brought by an uncertificated bankrupt in C. P., after nonsuit in K. B. for the same cause, on the ground that he was not then prepared with evidence to prove the validity of a former commission; the former court will stay the proceedings, until the plaintiff pay the costs of the former action, as he then ought to have been prepared with evidence to substantiate the first commission. Crawley v. Impey, 2 Moore, 460.

After a nonsuit in trespass, the court will stay proceedings in a second action between the same parties for the same cause, until the costs of the nonsuit are paid, notwithstanding the plaintiff be a prisoner at the time of bringing the second action, and sue in forma pauperis. Weston v. Withers, 2 T. R. 511.

The court will not stay proceedings in a second action, by a pauper, until the costs are paid of a nonsuit in a prior one for the same cause, unless his conduct appear vexatious. Hutton & Colboys, 1 Tidd's Prac. 94.

The defendant was arrested at the suit of the plaintiff, who becoming bankrupt, the proceedings were discontinued; and the assignees having again arrested the defendant, the proceedings were set aside, the Chancellor having superseded the commission; but a fresh commission having issued, and another set of assignees being chosen, they arrested the defendant again, and were proceeding in their action:—Held, that these proceedings could not be stayed until the costs of the proceedings at the suit of the first set of assignees were paid. Dunson v. Sampson, 1 Chit. 146.

A rule to stay proceedings in a second action on the statute of bribery, where the plaintiff's attorney would not pay the costs of a former nonsuit, nor discover the plaintiff's residence, was ordered to be discharged, if the costs were paid within a week, otherwise to be made absolute. Moulton q. t. v. Bingham, 2 T. R. 511, n.

So, a rule was made absolute for non-payment of costs of a judgment as in case of a nonsuit, and of a rule to show cause why judgment as in case of nonsuit should not be entered. Baldwyn v. Richards, 2 T. R. 511, n.

A plaintiff, being nonsuited, was taken in execution by the defendant for the costs; and whilst in execution brought another action for the same cause: the court refused to stay further proceedings in the second action until the costs of the first had been paid. Beavan v. Robins, 8 D. & R. 42.

Where there were six actions against owners, and six against the captain of a ship, for wages, the court of K. B. stayed the proceedings in one of the latter, until payment of costs in one by the same plaintiff against the owners, which had been tried, and in which there had been a verdict for the defendants. Bond v. Gooch, Hull. Costs, 465.

The court of K. B. refused to stay proceedings in a qui tam action, till the costs of a nonpros in a former action, by a different plaintiff, were paid. English q. t. v. Cox, Cowp. 322.

So, where the plaintiff, having declared against the defendants as trustees, was nonprossed, and afterwards commenced another action against them by name, the court refused to compel him to pay the costs of the former action before he was allowed to go on with the second. Pashley v. Peole, 3 D. & R. 531.

Proceedings cannot be stayed in a court of equity, till the payment of the costs of a suit at law. Anon. 1 Chit. 195.

The court stayed proceedings in an action by husband and wife, until payment of costs in a former action for the same demand, at the suit of the husband only. Lampley v. Sands, 1 Tidd's Prac. 584.

In Ejectment.—The court will stay the proceedings in a second ejectment until the costs are paid of a prior one, even though it be brought by a third person, or for different premises, if the title be the same. Doe v. Law, and Fairclaim v. Thrustout, 1 Tidd's Prac. 583; 4 Dougl. 250; 3 Dougl. 405.

Proceedings in ejectment stayed till the costs of a nonsuit in a former ejectment, brought to try the same title, were paid. Keene d. Angel v. Angel, 6 T. R. 740; S. P. Doe d. Correll v. Roe, 1 Chit. 195.

Proceedings in ejectment stayed until the costs of a former ejectment, and also of an action for mesne profits, were paid. Doe d. Pinchard v. Roe, 4 East, 585.

Yet the court will not extend the rule to include the damages in the action for the mesne profits, however vexatious the proceedings of the present lessors of the plaintiff may have been. Doe d. Church v. Barclay, 15 East, 233.

Proceedings stayed till the costs of a former ejectment, brought by the father of the lessor of the plaintiff against the defendant's father on the same title, were paid. Doe d. Feldon v. Roe, 8 F. R. 645.

But refused where the ejectment was by the heir-at-law for part of devised premises, after he had failed in a previous action for other parts. Doe v. Harris, 4 M. & R. 569.

Ejectment in C. P. and verdict for the plaintiff, and costs paid by the defendant, who then brought an ejectment in K. B. for the same premises, and recovered, but was not paid his costs; and now a third ejectment being commenced in C. P. by the plaintiff in the first ejectment, that court stayed proceedings till payment of the costs of the second ejectment in K. B. Doe d. Walker v. Stevenson, 3 B. & P. 22.

If the defendant in a former ejectment, who was then evicted, bring another ejectment for the same premises, the court will stay the proceedings until he pay the costs of the former cause. Thrustout d. Williams v. Holdfast, 6 T. R. 223.

A rule to stay proceedings in a second ejectment until the costs of a prior one were paid, in which the plaintiff had sued in forma pauperis, was granted. Goodtitle v. Mayo, 1 Tidd's Prac. 94.

So, where the lessor of the plaintiff never entered into the consent rule. Smith d. Ginger v. Barnardiston, 2 W. Black. 904.

It seems that the court will not stay proceedings, if the verdict in the first ejectment was obtained by fraud and perjury. Doe d. Rees v. Thomas, 4 D. & R. 145; 2 B. & C. 622.

Proceedings in ejectment were stayed the day before trial, till the costs of a former ejectment in K. B. were paid, after a long delay. Doe d. Chadwick v. Law, 2 W. Black. 1158.

So, proceedings in an ejectment by a fraudulent assignee of an insolvent debtor were stayed, till costs of former ejectments, brought by the debtor himself, were paid. Doe d. Chambers v. Law, 2 W. Black. 1180.

The court will not stay proceedings in a writ of right, until the costs of a prior ejectment are paid. Chatfield v. Souter, 3 Bing. 167; 10 Moore, 572; S. P. contra Bowyear v. Bowyear, 2 Dowl. P. C. 207.

Proceedings in an ejectment cannot be stayed until the taxed costs of a bill in equity, filed by the same party for the recovery of the same premises, are paid. Doe d. Williams v. Winch, 3 B. & A. 602.

Where in ejectment a rule has been obtained for staying proceedings until the costs of a former ejectment have been paid, the court will not permit the defendant, in case those costs are not paid before a given day, to nonpros the pending ejectment. Doe d. Sutton v. Ridgway, 5 B. & A. 523. And see Doe d. Irwin v. Roe, 1 D. & R. 562.

I. FORM OF COVENANTS.

It seems, that, under the word "demise," the lessee may maintain an action of covenant against the lessor, for not having sufficient power to demise for the whole term, whereby the plaintiff was put to the expense of procuring a better title for the whole term. Fraser v. Skey, 2 Chit. 646.

Where a lease of an undivided third part of certain mines, contained a recital of an agreement made by the lessee with the lessor and the owners of the other two-thirds, for pulling down an old smelting mill, and building another of larger dimensions upon a waste near the mine, and also a covenant to keep such new mill in repair, and so leave it at the expiration of the term, but did not contain a covenant to build it:—Held, that such a covenant was to be implied; and that the lessor of the one-third might sue upon it in respect to his interest. Sampson v. Easterby, 4 M. & R. 422; 9 B. & C. 505; 8 C. nom. Easterby v. Sampson, 6 Bing. 644; 4 M. & P. 601; 1 C. & J. 105.

Where a lessee covenanted that he would, at all times and seasons of burning lime, supply the lessor and his tenants with lime at a stipulated price, for the improvement of their land and repair of their houses:—Held, that this was an implied covenant, also, that he would burn lime at all such seasons; and that it was not a good defence to plead that there was no lime burned on the premises out of which the lessor could be supplied. Shrewsbury (Earl) v. Gould, 2 B. & A. 487.

A proviso in a lease for twenty-one years, that if either of the parties should be desirous to determine it in seven or fourteen years, it should be lawful for either of them, his executors or administrators, so to do, upon twelve months' notice to the other of them, his heirs, executors, or administrators, extends, by reasonable intendment, to the devisee of the lessor, who is entitled to the rent and reversion. Roe d. Bamford v. Hayley, 12 East, 464.

Covenant by lessee, that he will at all times during the term plough, sow, manure, and cultivate the demised premises (except the rabbit-warren and sheep-walk) in a due course of husbandry; if lessee plough the rabbit-warren and sheep-walk, covenant lies against him. S. Alaban's (Duke of) v. Ellis, 16 East, 352.

The plaintiff declared in covenant, and set out first an indenture, whereby the defendant, the original proprietor of a medicine, assigned all his interest in it to a third person, subject to a covenant by the assignee to pay him one-third of the profits during his and his wife's lives; and also covenanted with the assignee, that he would not thereafter, by himself or jointly with any other, prepare or sell, or engage with any other person in preparing or selling the said medicine, &c.: and then a second indenture, whereby the first assignee assigned all his interest in the medicine to the plaintiff, subject to the covenant of reservation: and then a third indenture between him and the defendant, (reciting the two former), and that he had agreed with the defendant for the absolute purchase of all his interest, as well in the said medicine, as in the one-third share so reserved to the defendant: by which indenture the defendant assigned to the plaintiff all that third share, and all other shares or proportions, right, title, interest, claim, or demand whatsoever of the defendant to the said medicine, or to the profits, &c., habendum to the plaintiff in like manner as the defendant might have done if those presents had not been made: with a covenant that the plaintiff might at all times thereafter prepare and sell the medicine in the name of the defendant, and receive the profits thereof to his own use: and another covenant for further assurance: and then the plaintiff proceeded to assign breaches in the words of the first indenture between the defendant and the first assignee; that the defendant prepared and sold the medicine, and also engaged with others in preparing and selling it for his own profit, &c., and charged some of these breaches to be contrary to the first indenture, and to the defendant's covenants therein with the first assignee; but the second breach was charged to be contrary to the last indenture, and to his covenant with the plaintiff:—Held, that the last indenture alone (without the confirmation, which, however, the construction of it received from the two former recited therein) showed an intention in the defendant, and the words of it were large enough to assign to the plaintiff, not only the one-third share of the profits reserved by the first indenture, but all the defendant's right, title, and interest in the medicine, and all the future profits arising from the sale thereof, and that such assignment of all his interest and property in the medicine, raised an implied covenant that he would not prepare or sell the medicine, or engage with others in so doing for his own profit; such preparation and sale being a retention and exercise of the right of preparing and vending the medicine of which he was once a proprietor, in derogation of his deed, whereby he had conveyed such right to the plaintiff: and held, that the second breach was well assigned, which was charged to be against his covenant in the last deed with the plaintiff. Seddon v. Senate, 13 East, 63.

There is a distinction between express covenants and implied agreements, as to being enforced by injunction: in the former instance, but not in the latter, an injunction will be granted against tenants removing articles contrary to the custom of the country. Kimpton v. Eve, 2 Ves. & B. 379.

II. CONSTRUCTION OF COVENANTS.

1. Generally.

The construction of covenants is the same in equity as at law; but equity will relieve against a strict performance upon equitable circumstances, and no wilful default. Eaton v. Lyon, 3 Ves. jun. 692.

A., being seised of certain real estates, limited part of them to the uses of his marriage settlement, and also covenanted with the trustees, that, in case of there being issue of such marriage, he would, by will or otherwise, devise all his real estates, and also all his personal estate and effects whatsoever, amongst the children of that and a former marriage, share and share alike:—Held, that this covenant applied only to such real and personal estate which A. might die seised or possessed of, and that it did not prevent him from disposing, during his life, of such part of his real estate as was not settled, or which he might acquire subsequently to the date of the settlement. Feedham v. Kirkman, 3 B. & A. 581.

A., being possessed of a lease for years, covenanted in an indenture for making a family provision, that, if he should die during the continuance of the term of the lease, his executors or administrators should assign the residue to B.; A. afterwards purchased the reversion in fee, and died:—Held, that A. did not, by the terms of the covenant, intend to preclude himself from purchasing the fee, and therefore his executors were not liable upon that covenant. Williamson v. Butterfield, 2 B. & P. 63.

A covenant by a party, that, so long as the defendant should continue and be in the actual receipt of the profits of a rectory, he would pay a yearly sum during the life of the rector, by two half-yearly payments, must be construed as a covenant for the payment of such yearly sum whilst the covenantor is in receipt of the profits during the life of the rector, and not whilst he is merely in receipt of the profits. Combe v. Jones, 2 Chit. 700.

Lessee of tithes covenanted for certain considerations for himself, his executors, and assigns, not to take tithes in kind from the tenants for twelve years, but to accept a reasonable composition, not exceeding three shillings and sixpence per acre:—Held, that his under-lessee of the tithes was not an assignee within the meaning of the covenant, nor bound by such a covenant of the lessee. Brewer v. Hill, 2 Anst. 413.

Nor could the tenant of the lands take advantage of such a covenant entered into with his landlord, to which he himself was no party. Id.

By an indenture reciting that A. has agreed to pay a debt owing from B. to C., A. covenants with B. to indemnify B. in respect of such debt. A. omits to pay C., who sues and obtains judgment against B. B. may recover the amount of the debt from A. before he has paid C. Carr v. Roberts, 2 Nev. & M. 42.

A message, consisting of two parts, separated by intervening reserved land, subjected only to a specific right of way for the lessee to a third building for a specific purpose, was demised by lease: the reservation, strictly interpreted, would preclude him from all access to the one part, which was accessible only by crossing the reserved land in one of two directions, the one by entering it from the residue of the demised premises; the other, and far the more convenient, by entering it from a public street:—Held, that the lessee was entitled to a way across the reserved land from the public street to that part. Morris v. Edgington, 3 Taunt. 24.

A covenant for "the free use of the newly-intended road whenever the same may be made," will not apply to a road which, when the parties contracted, was newly intended to be made, but was executed and complete before the sealing of the deed. Crisp v. Price, 5 Taunt. 548.

If a vendor retains the title deeds, and covenants for further assurance only, the purchaser may, under that covenant, compel him to enter into a covenant for production of the deeds. Fain v. Ayers, 2 Sim. & Stu. 533.

A covenant to do all lawful and reasonable acts for further assurance, includes the levying, the latter. Horsfall v. Tester, 1 Moore, 89; 1 Taunt. 385.

a fine, though not particularly named. King v. Jones, 5 Taunt. 418; 1 Marsh. 107.

So the satisfying of a judgment. Id.

By deed, B., for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, covenanted that for and notwithstanding any act done by him (B.), it should be lawful for A. to receive certain money, debts, and premises thereby assigned, without any let, suit, interruption, or denial of B., his executors or administrators, or any person claiming under him or them:—Held, that the words, “for and notwithstanding any act done by B.,” being inconsistent with the subsequent part of the covenant, ought to be rejected, and, therefore, that it was a sufficient breach of that covenant to allege a receipt of the money by the executor of B., in respect of the contracts mentioned in the indenture. Belcher v. Sikes, 8 B. & C. 185.

2. What usual or customary.

The reasonableness of a covenant by a lessee, in a lease of land renewable for ever, that he and his heirs shall always live upon the lands, or pay an additional rent, with the usual remedies by distress and entry, is properly triable at law; and a court of equity ought not to interpose or give relief against it. Ponsonby v. Adams, 2 Bro. P. C. 431.

A party contracted for an assignment of the lease of a public-house, which in the agreement was described as holden at a certain net annual rent under usual and common covenants. And the lease contained a covenant by the tenant to pay land tax, sewers' rate, and all other taxes, and a proviso for re-entry if any business but that of a victualler should be carried on in the house; and it was proved that a considerable majority of public-house leases contained such a proviso:—Held, that the covenant to pay land tax, &c., was a common covenant in a lease, reserving a net rent; and that the proviso for re-entry must, with reference to a lease of a public-house, also be considered usual and common. Bennett v. Womack, 7 B. & C. 627; 1 M. & R. 644; 3 C. & P. 96.

A covenant not to assign without the leave of the landlord, is a fair and usual covenant. Morgan v. Slaughter, 1 Esp. 8—Kenyon.

Under a power to a tenant for life to lease for years, reserving the usual covenants, &c., a lease made by him, containing a proviso, that in case the premises were blown down or burned, the lessor should rebuild, otherwise the rent should cease, is void; the jury finding that such covenant is unusual. Doe d. Ellis v. Sandham, 1 T. R. 705.

3. Qualified Covenants.

A lease, containing a covenant by the lessee to repair the premises at all times, (as often as need or occasion should require), and “at farthest within three months after notice,” is one entire covenant, the former part of which is qualified by the latter. Horsfall v. Tester, 1 Moore, 89; 1 Taunt. 385.

The lessor, after a demise of certain premises, with a portion of an adjoining yard, covenanted that the lessee should have “the use of the pump in the yard jointly with himself whilst the same should remain there, paying half the expenses of the repairs.” The words “whilst,” &c., reserve to the lessor a power of removing the pump at his pleasure; and it is no breach of the covenant, though he remove it without reasonable cause, and in order to injure the lessee. But without those words, it would have been a breach of covenant to have removed the pump. Rhodes v. Bullard, 7 East, 116; 3 Smith, 173.

The lessee of a coal-mine, who covenants to pay a certain share of all such sums of money as the coal should sell for at the pit's mouth, is not liable under that covenant to pay to the lessor any part of the money produced by sale of the coals elsewhere than at the pit's mouth. Clifton v. Walmesley, 5 T. R. 564; S. P. Gerrard v. Clifton (in error), 7 T. R. 676; 1 B. & P. 534.

A. conveyed to B. in fee, a messuage, buildings, yard, gardens, and homestead, with the appurtenances, and certain closes of land, excepting all mines of coal under the said lands and hereditaments; with liberty to enter and sink pits for getting all such coal, and to erect engines and make drains, &c., necessary for working the coal; except as to such lands as lie within 150 yards of the messuage and buildings, and except the homestead:—Held, that the seller thereby reserved to himself the right to dig coals under the messuage, buildings, and homestead, and within 150 yards of the same respectively; but was not entitled to sink pits, erect engines, or make drains, within 150 yards of the messuage or buildings, or within the homestead. Bowler v. Waller, 15 East, 444.

Lease by plaintiff to J. T., for years, of a messuage and farm, at a yearly rent, payable quarterly, and J. T. covenants to pay the rent at the days and in manner therein mentioned, and also to pay interest in case the rent should be behind three quarters; and defendant covenants that J. T. shall, at all times during the term, well and truly pay to plaintiff the said rent at the respective days, and also interest, and shall duly observe all the covenants, and that in case J. T. should neglect to pay the rent for forty days, defendant shall pay on demand:—Held, that the defendant was not chargeable until after forty days and demand made; and plaintiff having declared generally, assigning for breach rent in arrear, and it appearing upon oyer that the lease contained the qualification above stated, that the breach was ill assigned; and there being general damages upon the whole declaration, which contained other breaches which were well assigned, that judgment nevertheless was arrested. Saltmore v. Thissleton, 6 M. & S. 9.

Lease to A., for a term of years, at a yearly rent, and under and subject to the payment at stipulated periods, during the term, of certain sums of money in the nature of fines, with a covenant on the part of the lessor, at the end of the term, on due and punctual payment being made of the rent, and gross sums or fines at the time appointed for payment thereof, to grant a further or renewed lease. A. assigned to B. a part of the premises for the same term and interest as A. himself took under the lease, subject to the payment of a proportional part of the rent and gross sums or fines, (the amount of the proportion was not specified). C., afterwards, purchased of the lessor the reversion of the premises expectant on the lease to A., and, subsequently to acquiring the reversion, purchased A.'s interest in all the premises demised to A. by the lease, and not assigned by him to B. After this purchase by C., one of the gross sums or fines became due, but was not paid, and no proportion of it was demanded by C. from or was paid by B.:—Held, that the double character filled by A. relieved B. from the strict performance of the covenant, and that the non-payment by B. of a proportion of the gross sum or fine was not, under the circumstances, a refusal to pay, or such a breach of the covenant as to deprive B. of his claim to a renewed lease of the property assigned to him, and a demurrer for want of equity was overruled. Statham v. Liverpool Dock Company, 3 Y. & J. 565.

Covenants in an indenture of sale, that the covenantors were seised of a good estate in fee simple, and had good right, &c., to convey:—Held, to be qualified and restricted by a subsequent covenant for quiet enjoyment, without let, &c., by them, their heirs, or other persons claiming under them. Milner v. Horton, M'Clel. 647.

Releasors covenanted that, for and notwithstanding any act, &c., by them, or any or either of them done to the contrary, they had good title to convey certain lands in fee; and also, that they or some or one of them, for and notwithstanding any such matter or thing as aforesaid, had good right and full power to grant, &c.; and likewise that the releasee should peaceably and quietly enter, hold, and enjoy the premises granted, without the lawful let or disturbance of the releasors or their heirs or assigns, or for or by any other person or persons whomsoever; and that the releasee should be kept harmless and indemnified by the releasors and their heirs, against all other titles, charges, &c., save and except the chief rent issuing and payable out of the premises to the lord of the fee:—Held, that the generality of the covenant for quiet enjoyment against the releasors and their heirs, and by other person or persons whomsoever, was not restrained by the qualified covenants for good title and right to convey for and notwithstanding any act done by the releasors to the contrary. Lowell v. Richards, 11 East, 633.

The assignor of a lease covenanted that he had at any time done or suffered any act or thing, whereby the premises intended to be assigned could be impeached or affected in title or estate: and that for and notwithstanding any such act, &c., the lease was a good, valid, and subsisting lease, and not forfeited, surrendered, or become void; and that he had in himself good right, full power and authority, to grant, assign, transfer, and set over the same to the assignee in manner aforesaid; then followed a covenant for further assurance by the assignor, and all persons claiming under him:—Held, that the general words, that the assignor had full power to grant, assign, and set over, were restrained by the preceding part of the covenant, and therefore that such covenant was confined to the act of the assignor alone. Foord v. Wilson, 2 Moore, 592.

So, where the assignor covenanted that for and notwithstanding any act or thing by him done, the lease was valid; and further, that it should be lawful for the assignee at all times, during the term, quietly to enjoy, without the lawful let or interruption of the assignor, his executors, administrators, or assigns, or any of them, or any other person or persons whomsoever, claiming any estate or right in the premises, and that clearly discharged by the assignor, his heirs, executors, or administrators, from all former incumbrances made or suffered by him, or by their or either of their acts or privity; and then followed a covenant for further assurance by the assignor, his executors and administrators, and all persons whomsoever claiming under him:—Held, that the general words in the covenant for quiet enjoyment, were restrained by the restrictive words in the covenant for title and further assurance, which preceded and followed it, and therefore that such covenant was confined to the acts of the covenantor, and those claiming under him. Nind v. Marshall, 3 Moore, 703; 1 B. & B. 319.

The assignor, in the deed of assignment of a lease, after reciting the original lease granted to another for the term of ten years, which by means assignments had vested in him, and that the plaintiff had contracted for the absolute purchase of the premises, bargained, sold, assigned, transferred, and set over the same to the plaintiff, for and during all the rest, &c., of the said term of ten years, in as ample manner as the assignor might have held the same; subject to the payment of rent and performance of covenants; and then covenanted that it was a good and subsisting lease, valid in law,* in and for the said premises thereby assigned, and not forfeited, &c., or otherwise determined, or become void or voidable:—Held, that the generality of this covenant for title, which was supported by the recital of the bargain for an absolute term of ten years, was not restrained by other covenants which went only to provide for or against the acts of the assignor himself, or of those who claimed under him; such as, 1st, a covenant against incumbrances, except an under-lease of part by the assignor for three years: 2ndly, for quiet enjoyment: 3rdly, for further assurance, and therefore where it appeared that the original lease was for ten years, determinable on a life in being, which dropped before the ten years expired, though not till after the covenant of the assignor:—Held, that the assignee might assign a breach upon the absolute covenant for title. Barton v. Fitzgerald, 15 East, 530.

By indenture reciting a power vested in A. B. to dispose of certain premises, and that C. D. had contracted to purchase them, A. B. appointed and conveyed them to the use of C. D., and his heirs, &c., and covenanted that the power in A. B. was then in force and not executed; and also that he, A. B., then had in himself good right, title, power, and authority to limit and appoint, and to grant, bargain, sell, &c., the premises to the said uses; and further, that the premises should be held and enjoyed to the said uses, without the let or interruption of A. B., or any claiming under or in trust for him; and also for further assurance by A. B. and all so claiming:—Held, that the second covenant was absolute, for good title against all persons, and not to be qualified by reference to the other covenants, inasmuch as there were no words, either in the second covenant itself, or in preceding or subsequent ones, to connect it with them. Smith v. Compton, 3 B. & Adol. 189.

Covenant by the assignor of certain shares in a patent right, that he had good right, full power and lawful authority to assign and convey the said shares, and that he had not by any means, directly or indirectly, forfeited any right or authority he ever had or might have over the same:—Held, that the generality of the former words of the covenant was not restrained by the latter. Hesse v. Stevenson, 3 B. & P. 565.

A., after granting certain premises in fee to B., and after warranting the same against himself and his heirs, covenanted that notwithstanding any act by him done to the contrary, he was seised of the premises in fee, and that he had full power, &c., to convey the same; he then covenanted for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to make a cart-way, and that B. should quietly enjoy without interruption from himself or any person claiming under him; and lastly, that he, his heirs and assigns, and all persons claiming under him, should make further assurance:—Held, that the intervening general words "full power, &c., to convey," were either part of the preceding special covenant, or, if not, that they were qualified by all the other special covenants against the acts of himself and his heirs. Browning v. Wright, 2 B. & P. 13.

4. What a Breach.

Whether a party has broken any of his covenants or not is a matter properly triable at law, as the damages (supposing a breach) cannot be settled without such trial. Stafford v. London, 4 Bro. P. C. 635.

A. grants a lease to B. of certain tenements, and covenants that if he, his heirs or assigns, should, during the said term, have any offer made for the disposal of certain land adjoining the demised premises, he or they should not dispose of the same without previously offering it to B., his executors, administrators, or assigns, at 5*l.* per cent. less than such offer. Before the expiration of the lease, A. sells to C. upon one entire contract, and for one entire sum, the whole of his estate, comprising, amongst other property, the demised premises, and the ground which was the subject of the covenant, without making any offer of the latter to B.:—Held, that this was no breach of the covenant, either absolute or implied, on the part of A. Collison v. Lettson, 2 Marsh. 1; 6 Taunt. 224.

A covenant that defendant has not permitted or suffered to be done any act whereby an estate was incumbered, is not broken by his consenting to an act which he could not prevent. Hobson v. Middleton, 9 D. & R. 247; S. C. nom. Hodson v. Middleton, 6 B. & C. 295.

By a deed of separation, after reciting an agreement by the husband to allow the wife 250*l.* out of his salary as a searcher of his Majesty's customs, the husband covenants generally to pay her 250*l.* per annum during her life; the covenant is controlled by the recital, and dismissal from the office of searcher justifies non-payment of the annuity. Hesse v. Albert, 3 M. & R. 406.

Plaintiffs enfeoffed defendant with a piece of land, bounded on the west by a street, and on the east partly by buildings belonging to defendant, and partly by buildings belonging to W. G. Defendant covenanted "that he would not, at any time after the feoffment, permit or suffer any warehouse door to be opened or put out to the front of the street." A warehouse door was put out in the buildings belonging to W. G. at the eastern extremity of defendant's land, about eight feet distance from, but giving access to, the street:—Held, that this was a breach of the covenant by defendant, though the premises in which the door was put out did not stand upon his land, were not in his occupation, and were not level with the front of the street. Liverpool (Mayor, &c.) v. Tomlinson, 7 D. & R. 556.

A covenant not to sue, arrest, implead, or prosecute a debtor, or his goods or chattels, lands or tenements, on account of a debt, extends to the issuing of a commission, which is a species of suit and proceeding against the goods of the bankrupt. Small v. Marwood, 9 B. & C. 300; 4 M. & R. 181.

A new breach of a covenant not to use rooms in a particular manner is committed every day the rooms are so used. Doe d. Ambler v. Warbridge, 4 M. & R. 302; 9 B. & C. 376.

Where lessees of land and of coal-mines covenanted forthwith to proceed to sink for coal as far as could and ought to be accomplished, &c., or in default thereof to pay so much to the lessor as arbitrators should award, and the lessees gave bond to the lessor, conditioned to perform the award, which was made:—Held, that to an action on the bond it was a sufficient answer, that they had proceeded to sink for coal as far, &c. (in the words of the covenant), but that none could be found. Hanson v. Boothman, 13 East, 22.

Covenant on a coal lease to pay a certain proportion of the value of 9 cwt. of the coals to be raised, unless prevented by unavoidable accident from working the pit. Plea, that the defendant was prevented by unavoidable accident. It appeared in evidence that the accident might have been remedied at a greater expense than the value of the coals to be raised:—Held, that plaintiff was entitled to recover. Morris v. Smith, 1 Dougl. 279.

If a lease contain a covenant for quiet enjoyment against the lessor, and those who claim under him, the lessee cannot, upon an eviction by a paramount title, recover under the implied cov-nant for general title implied in the word "demise." Merrill v. Frame, 4 Taunt. 329.

Tenant for life, and his eldest son, the remainder-man in tail, leased to E. S. for ninety-nine years, and gave E. S., who was acquainted with their title, a bond conditioned for the due observance of their covenant for quiet enjoyment. E. S. underlet to W. for sixty years, and covenanted with W. against eviction by any one claiming under E. S., or by his acts, means, consent, neglect, default, privity, or concealment. Tenant for life and his eldest son being dead without issue, W. was evicted by the next remainder-man in tail:—Held, that E. S. was not liable on his covenant to W., the eviction being by title paramount, which E. S. had no means of defeating. Woodhouse v. Jenkins, 9 Bing. 431.

5. Extent of Liability.

One who covenants for himself, his heirs, &c., and under his own hand and seal, for the act of another, shall be personally bound by his covenant, though he describe himself in the deed as covenanting for and on the part and behalf of such other person. Appleton v. Binks, 5 East, 148; 1 Smith, 361.

The defendants, as directors of a mining company, agreed by deed to purchase a mine of the plaintiffs, the purchase money to be paid within twelve months by certain instalments "out of the moneys to be raised by the company," with a proviso, that in case they should not have received the deposits from the shareholders, so as to enable them to pay the money by the time stipulated for, the directors should be allowed a further time of six months; and the defendants covenanted that they would, "out of the said payments so to be made by the subscribers or shareholders in the said company," pay the purchase money, according to the terms and at the times before specified, subject to the aforesaid proviso:—Held, that this was a personal undertaking on the part of the defendants to pay at the expiration of the additional six months. Hancock v. Hudson, 12 Moore, 504; 1 C. nom. Hancock v. Hodgson, 4 Bing. 269.

Defendant, by a settlement made on his marriage, conveyed estates upon certain trusts, and covenanted with the trustees to pay off incumbrances on the estates, to the amount of 19,000*l.*, within a year:—Held, that, on his failing to do so, the trustees were entitled to recover the whole 19,000*l.* in an action of covenant, though no special damage was laid or proved; and an inquiry, on which nominal damages had been given, was set aside, and a new writ of inquiry awarded. Elthbridge v. Mytton, 2 B. & Adol. 773.

An action of covenant lies against the assignee of a lessee of an estate for a part of the rent, as in such case the action is brought on a real contract in respect of the land, and not on a personal contract; and in case of eviction the rent may be apportioned, as in debt or replevin. Aliter in covenant against the lessee himself, who is liable on his personal contract. Stevenson v. Lambard, 5 East, 575.

III. WHAT COVENANTS RUN WITH THE LAND.

A lessee of tithes covenanted for him and his assigns, that he would not let any of the farmers in the parish have any part of the tithes; this covenant runs with the tithes, and binds the assignee, against whom an action was brought for breach of covenant. Bally v. Wells, 3 Wils. 25.

A covenant in a lease, that the lessee, his executors and administrators, shall constantly reside upon the demised premises, during the demise, is binding on the assignee of the lessee, though he be not named. Tatem v. Chaplin, 2 H. Black. 133.

A covenant to insure premises against fire, which are situated within the weekly bills of mortality, as specified in the statute 14 Geo. 3, c. 78, runs with the land. Vernon v. Smith, 5 B. & A. 1.

A covenant in a lease, by the lessor, to supply two houses with good water at a rate therein mentioned for each house, runs with the land; for the breach of which the assignee of the lessee may maintain an action against the reversioner. Jourdain v. Wilson, 4 B. & A. 266.

A covenant that the lessor, his executors, or administrators, will not assign, does not bind the assignees. Doe d. Cheere v. Smith, 5 Taunt. 795; 1 Marsh. 359.

In a lease of ground, with liberty to make a water-course and erect a mill, the lessee covenanted for himself, his executors, &c., and assigns, not to hire persons to work in the mill who were settled in other parishes, without a parish certificate:—Held, that this covenant did not run with the land, nor bind the assignee of the lessee. Congleton (Mayor, &c.) v. Pattison, 10 East, 130.

A covenant by the lessee with the lessor, his heirs and assigns, to indemnify the overseers for the time being of the parish in which the premises demised were situated, from all costs and charges, by reason of the lessee's taking an apprentice or servant, who should thereby gain a settlement within, or become chargeable to the parish, was held to be an express covenant with the lessor, which did not run with the land; and that an action on it was well brought by his executors. Walsh v. Fussell, 3 M. & P. 455; 6 Bing. 163.

A mortgagee died seised of the residue of a mortgage term, subject to a proviso, that in case the mortgagor should pay him, his executors, administrators, or assigns, a certain sum on a given day, the term should determine; the mortgagee bequeathed this sum to the plaintiff by will, whom he appointed one of his executors:—Held, that he could not maintain an action of covenant in his own name, as assignee, although his co-executor had assented to the bequest, as the covenant with the mortgagee was collateral, and did not run with the land, and because it was broken in his lifetime. Cankam v. Rust, 2 Moore, 164.

Where J. B., being seised in fee, conveyed to the defendant and T. J., their heirs and assigns, to the use that J. B., his heirs and assigns, might take to his use a rent certain, to be issuing out of the premises, and subject to the said rent, to the use of the defendant, his heirs and assigns; and the defendant covenanted with J. B., his heirs and assigns, to pay to him, his heirs and assigns, the said rent; and to build within one year, one or more messuages on the premises, for better securing the said rent; and J. B., within one year, demised the said rent to the plaintiffs for 1000 years:—Held, that covenant would not lie by the plaintiffs for non-payment of the rent, or for not building the messuages, for that the covenant was in gross, and only personal to J. B. Milnes v. Branch, 5 M. & S. 411.

A testator, being seised in fee of certain lands, and also of a corn-mill, demised the former to a tenant for three lives, covenanting for a money-rent, and in addition thereto, that the lessee should perform certain suits and services; and amongst others, that he, his heirs and assigns, should do suit to the lessor's mill by grinding therein all such corn as grew upon the demised land: the testator afterwards devised the mill, and also the reversion of the land to the same person, who became seised upon the death of the devisor; during the demise of the land, the lessee died intestate, and his wife took out administration of his estate and effects. An action of covenant being brought, assigning for a breach, a neglect to grind corn at the mill during the life-time of the lessee, and also since his death:—Held, that the reservation of the suit to the mill was in the nature of a rent, and that the covenant to render it ran with the land, whilst the ownership of the land and the mill remained in the same person, and entitled the latter to maintain an action at common law upon it against the personal representative of the lessee. Vyryan v. Arthur, 2 D. & R. 670; 1 B. & C. 410.

Where a declaration in covenant by the reversioner against A., the assignee of a lease for years, (granting license to B. to continue a certain channel open through the bank of a navigable river, upon certain conditions,) imported that the grantors had absolute possession of the channel, and full power to grant the use of it to B.; and it appeared by the indenture that they were described merely as the persons "who had the greatest proportion or share in the profits of the said river; and that they, by virtue of all or any powers and authorities vesting in or enabling them, granted the license to B., his executors, administrators, and assigns:"—Held, that the grantors had no authority to grant such an hereditament, within the meaning of the statute 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, as would bind the assignee of the grantee. Portmore (Earl) v. Bunn, 3 D. & R. 145; 1 B. & C. 694.

If the whole of a term is made over by the lessee, although in the deed he reserves the rent and a power of entry for non-payment to himself, and not to the original lessor, and although he introduce new covenants, the person to whom it is made over may sue the original lessor or his assignees of the reversion, or be sued by them, as assignee of the term, on the respective covenants in the original lease. Palmer v. Edwards, 1 Dougl. 187, n.

The assignee of a lease is not liable to the original lessor, for a breach of a covenant not running with the land, unless he be expressly named in the lease as a covenantor. Gray v. Cuthbertson, 2 Chit. 482; 1 Selw. N. P. 498; 4 Dougl. 351.

Covenant by lessor against assignee of lease, on a covenant by the lessee, for himself, his executors, and administrators, to pay to the lessor the amount of fruit-trees, &c., to be planted by the lessee, according to an appraisement to be made by two persons, one to be chosen by each of the parties. Breach that the defendant refused to name a person to make the appraisement. Demurrer:—Held, that this covenant did not run with the land, and that the assignee was not bound. Id.

And a covenant by lessor to pay for all trees planted by lessee, does not run with the land. Id.

Quære, whether a covenant by the lessee of a public-house, that he and his assigns will buy all their beer of the plaintiff, is binding on the assignee? Hartley v. Pehall, Peake, 131—Keny.

Quære, whether a covenant in a conveyance in fee with the grantors (lessees of waterworks) not to sell or dispose of water from a well to the injury of the proprietors of the said waterworks, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, runs with the land, so as to bind, and be enforced by assignees? Collins v. Plumb, 16 Ves. jun. 454.

The parties were left to law, and a demurrer was allowed from the inconvenience of enforcing such a covenant by injunction. Id.

In a lease from B. to A. of an undivided third part of a mine, A. covenanted with B. and C. and D., the other owners of the mine, to erect a smelting mill on a waste not demised, and not shown to belong to B., or to B., C., and D.:—Held, that such covenant ran with the land, inasmuch as it affected the mode of enjoying the demised premises; and passed to the assignee of the reversion of B.'s share of the mine. Sampson v. Easterby, 4 M. & R. 422; 9 B. & C. 365; S. C. nom. Easterby v. Sampson, 6 Bing. 644; 4 M. & P. 601; 1 C. & J. 105.

IV. DEPENDENT OR INDEPENDENT COVENANTS

Where a covenant is part only of the consideration on one side, it is an independent covenant, and not a condition precedent. Carpenter v. Cresswell, 4 Bing. 409; 1 M. & P. 66.

Therefore, where plaintiff assigned to defendant a fish business, and also his interest in a salmon fishery, and agreed not to interfere with the business, and defendant agreed to grant plaintiff an annuity; in an action for the annuity, a plea that plaintiff had interfered in the business was held bad. Id.

Where, in articles of agreement under a penalty, there are mutual covenants between A. and B. to do certain acts, and also a covenant which goes to the whole consideration on each side; in an action of debt for the penalty brought by A.

against B., on account of the non-performance of his part, B. may plead in bar a breach by A. of the covenant, which goes to the whole consideration. St. Alban's (Duke) v. Shore, 1 H. Black. 270.

Therefore, where in articles of agreement for the sale of lands, it was agreed that A., the seller, should take, in part of payment, a conveyance of other lands belonging to B., the buyer; and it was also agreed, that all timber trees, then upon any of the estates, should be valued by appraisers, and paid for by the respective purchasers at a given time: to an action of debt by A. against B. for the penalty, on his refusal to complete the purchase, B. may plead that A., before the time, cut down a certain number of trees, and thereby rendered himself unable to perform, and it was impossible for him to perform the agreement. Id.

In an agreement to demise certain pieces of land for a term of years, at a certain annual rent, in which there was no clause of re-entry; and "it was thereby further agreed and clearly understood, that in case the said lessor, or his heirs, executors, and assigns, should want any part of the said land to build or otherwise, or cause to be built, then the lessee, or his heirs, executors, or assigns, should and would give up such part or parts of the said land as should be requested by the lessor, by his making an abatement in proportion to the rent charged; and also to pay for so much of the fence, at a fair valuation, as he should have occasion from time to time to take away, by his giving or leaving six months' notice of what he intended to do."—Held, that this was merely a covenant, and not in the nature of a condition, operating in defeasance of the estate. Doe d. Willson v. Phillips, 2 Bing. 13; 9 Moore, 46. And see Doe v. Willson d. Abel, 2 M. & S. 541.

In an agreement enuring as a lease, "it was stipulated and conditioned that the lessee shall not underlet."—Held, that these words created a condition, upon a breach of which the lessor might maintain ejectment, without an express clause of re-entry. Doe d. Henniker v. Watt, 1 M. & R. 694; 8 B. & C. 308.

A., being possessed of a term for years, conveys it by way of mortgage, and then joins with the mortgagee in a lease for a shorter term, according to their respective estates and interests, and the lessee covenants with the mortgagor and his assigns to pay rent and keep premises in repair. During the lease, the term, with all the estate and interest of mortgagor and mortgagee, becomes vested in the assignee of the reversion. Yet the mortgagor may afterwards maintain an action of covenant against the lessee, the covenants being in gross. Russel v. Stokes, 1 H. Black. 562; 3 T. R. 678.

And the assignee of the mortgagee cannot maintain an action for the breach of these covenants, because they are collateral to his grantor's interest in the land, and therefore do not run with it. Webb v. Russell, 3 T. R. 393.

In a lease for seven years, containing the usual covenants that the lessee should pay the rent, keep the premises in repair, &c., there was a proviso that the lessee might determine the term at the end of the first three or five years, giving six months' previous notice, and that then, and from and after the expiration of such notice, and payment of all rents and duties to be paid by the lessee, and performance of all his covenants until the end of the three or five years, the indenture should cease and be utterly void:—Held, that the payment of rent and performance of the other covenants were conditions precedent to the lessee's determining the term at the end of the first three years, and that his merely giving six months' notice, expiring with the first three years, was not sufficient for that purpose. Porter v. Shephard (in error), 6 T. R. 665.

A covenant by a lessee to leave at the end of his term, compost, &c., he having the yard, barn, and a room to lodge in and dress diet, is a mutual, and not a conditional covenant. Dodd v. Innes, Loft, 56.

A covenant to be a hired servant for one year and a quarter, and to pay, at the expiration, 200*l.*, when defendant should surrender his trade to plaintiff's nephew, or such other person as he should appoint. Upon demurrer:—Held, a condition precedent that plaintiff should have a sufficient security for the payment of the sum. Anon. Loft, 194.

A. agreed to sell B. his estate for a certain sum before a particular day, in consideration whereof B. agreed to pay that sum on the day, and on failure to pay 2*l.*:—Held, that they were dependent covenants, and that A. could not recover the 2*l.* without showing a conveyance on his part, or a tender of one. Goodisson v. Nunn, 4 T. R. 761.

Plaintiff covenanted to sell to the defendant a school-house, &c., and to convey the same to him on or before the 1st of August, 1797, and to deliver up the possession to him on the 24th of June, 1796; and in consideration thereof, defendant covenanted to pay the plaintiff 120*l.* on or before the said 1st of August, 1797:—Held, that the covenant to convey, and that for the payment of the money, were dependent covenants; and that the plaintiff could not maintain an action for the 120*l.*, without averring that he had conveyed, or tendered a conveyance to the defendant. Glazebrook v. Woodrow, 8 T. R. 366.

Covenant to repair generally, and to repair within three months after notice in writing, are independent covenants. Doe d. Morecraft v. Meux, 7 D. & R. 98; 4 B. & C. 606; 1 C. & P. 346.

Where a lessee covenanted to leave premises in repair at the expiration of the term, and also that the lessors might direct the lessee to complete the repair, by giving six months' notice in writing:—Held, that these were two distinct and separate covenants, the former of which was not qualified by the latter. Wood v. Day, 1 Moore, 389; 7 Taunt. 646.

A. covenants to build a house for B., and finish it on or before a certain day, in consideration of a sum of money, which B. covenants to pay A. by instalments, as the building shall proceed. The finishing the house is not a condition precedent to the payment of the money, but the covenants are independent: A. therefore may maintain an action of debt against B. for the whole sum, though the building be not finished at the time appointed. Terry v. Duntze, 2 H. Black. 389.

Where anything is to be done by a plaintiff before his right of action accrues on the defendant's covenant, it should be averred in the declaration that that thing was done. Campbell v. Jones, 6 T. R. 571.

But it is otherwise where the covenants are independent of each other; therefore where A. in consideration of 250*l.* paid by B., and of the further sum of 250*l.* to be paid, &c., covenanted that he would, with all possible expedition, instruct B. in a certain mode of bleaching linen, (for which he had obtained a patent), and B. covenanted that he would, on or before the 25th of February, 1794, or sooner if A. should before that time have instructed him, &c., pay the further sum of 250*l.*:—Held, that the covenants of A. and B. were independent covenants, and that A. might sue B. for the 250*l.* without averring that he had taught B. the mode of bleaching, &c. Id.

Where something is covenanted or agreed to be performed by each of two parties at the same time, he who was ready and offered to perform his part, but was discharged by the other, may maintain an action against the other for not performing his part. Jones v. Barkley, 2 Dougl. 684.

If one covenant with another to do a certain act in consideration of a reward, and the other prevent the stipulated thing from being literally performed, and accept of an equivalent, he may be sued for the reward, and the reason of the non-compliance with the literal terms may be averred. Hotham v. E. I. Comp., 1 Dougl. 272.

And where the payment of money by the plaintiff is to be concurrent with the act to be done by the defendant, an averment that he was ready and willing to pay is sufficient, without an actual offer. Levy v. Herbert, 1 Moore, 56; 7 Taunt. 314.

If one party covenants to do one thing, the other party doing another, it is not a condition precedent, but a mutual covenant. Bone v. Eyre, 2 W. Black. 1312; S. C. nom. Boone v. Eyre, 1 H. Black. 273, n.

But where there are mutual covenants which do not go to the whole consideration, the breach of one cannot be pleaded in bar to an action for the breach of the other. Id.

By an indenture between A., and B. and his wife, and C. of one part, and D. and E. and the same C. of another part, it was recited, that F., also a party to the deed, had requested to have a certain farm given up to him, in which B.'s wife was interested, he, F. giving sureties, namely, the said D., E., and C., for payment of an annuity to B.'s wife; and it was thereupon witnessed, that, in consideration of the covenants thereafter entered into by A., B. and his wife, and C., and of 10*s.*, the said D., E., and C., and each and every of them, covenanted with A., B. and his wife, and C., to pay the annuity. There followed covenants by A., B. for himself and his wife, and C., severally, for quiet enjoyment, and for executing an assignment to F. when required. The deed was signed and sealed by D., E., and C., and by F., but not by A. or B. In an action brought by A. and B., after the death of C., for breach of the covenant to pay the annuity:—Held, first, that the omission of A. and B. to execute the deed did not disable them from suing upon it; that such omission did not amount to a total failure of consideration for the covenant sued upon, (supposing such total failure to be an answer to the action), and that the covenant to pay the annuity, and those for quiet enjoyment, and for assigning, were not mutual and dependent. Secondly, that at least after C.'s death, A. and B. might sue D.'s executors (D. and E. being also dead) for non-payment of the annuity, though the covenant for such payment was entered into both by and to C. Rose v. Poulton, 2 B. and Adol. 822.

V. HOW DISCHARGED.

Covenant by defendant, that he was lawfully seized of a good estate of inheritance in fee simple in certain premises conveyed to the plaintiff. Breach, that he was not seized, &c., and was thereon. Previously to the conveyance, the premises had been confiscated by an act of the state of New York:—Held, that there was no breach of the covenant. Watkeys v. De Lancy, 4 Dougl. 354.

If tenant for a term of years lease for a less term, and assign his reversion, and the assignor take a conveyance of the fee, by which his former reversionary interest is merged, the covenants incident to that reversionary interest are thereby extinguished. Webb v. Russell, 3 T. R. 393.

The plaintiff, as tenant of a farm, covenanted with the defendant as landlord, to fetch and bring all such timber, stone, and other materials, as should, at any time during the continuance of the term, be wanted, about the erecting of a threshing-mill; and the latter covenanted to build and erect the same. The defendant pleaded, first, that he began to provide the necessary materials for erecting the mill, and that whilst he was so doing, the plaintiff desired him not to build the same, but refrain from so doing until he should be requested by the plaintiff; and, secondly, a plea of license:—Held, that both these pleas were bad on special demurrer; assigning for causes, that the covenant of the defendant was an absolute and executory covenant under seal, and that the defendant had pleaded only a parol request, alleged to have been made to him by the plaintiff to discharge and release him from his covenant before any breach thereof; and that it did not appear that such covenant was suspended, released, or discharged by any deed under seal; on the ground, that such pleas neither amounted to a release nor accord and satisfaction. Cordwain v. Hunt, 2 Moore, 682.

G. having by marriage articles covenanted, that if he died in the lifetime of his wife, his estate tors should, within three months after his decease, pay to her 3000*l.*; and having by his will given all his property to his executors in trust, after payment of his debts at the expiration of three years from his decease, to divide it "in such ways, shares, and proportions as should to them appear right, on his death" during the life of his wife; the executors having died or renounced, his property is divisible according to the statute of distribution, and the widow's distributive share, exceeding 3000*l.*, is a performance of the covenant in the marriage articles. Goldsmid v. Goldsmid, 1 Swans. 211.

There is a distinction between satisfaction and performance. Id.

VI. ACTION OF COVENANT.

1. Between Contracting Parties.

Generally.]—By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, c. 3, all actions of covenant must be brought within ten years after the end of the session of 1833, or within twenty years after the cause of action accrued.]

A deed inter partes is only available between those who are parties to it. Barford v. Stuckey, 3 Moore, 88; 1 Bing. 225. And see 5 Moore, 23; 2 B. & B. 333; 5 D. & R. 118.

Therefore, where two persons by deed agreed with N. P., his executors and administrators, to pay him an annuity for twenty-one years, if they, or the survivor of them, should so long live; and, in case N. P. should die within the term, to his child or children, if any, in such proportions as they should appoint; or, in default of appointment, to all of them equally; and, if there should be no child, to his wife, if she should remain a widow; and N. P. having died within the term, as well as his only child and widow:—Held, that his administrator could not claim payment of the annuity after their respective deaths. Id.

Held, also, that the administrator of the daughter could not maintain an action against the defendant on the deed for non-payment of the annuity, on the ground that she was no party to the deed, although she took a beneficial interest under it. Id.

Covenant only lies upon a deed inter partes between the parties thereto; therefore where in covenant upon an indenture of lease, it appeared that the landlord by writing, not under seal, authorized his attorney to execute a lease for and in his (landlord's) behalf, and the attorney signed and sealed the lease in his own name:—Held, that the landlord could not maintain covenant against the tenant upon the indenture, although the covenants were expressly stated to have been made by the tenant to and with the landlord. Berkeley v. Hardy, 8 D. & R. 102; 5 B. & C. 355.

Where rent was reserved by a lease to a person who was not a party to the lease, and the lessees covenanted with him and the lessors to pay rent, &c.:—Held, that covenant would not lie at the suit of him and the lessors. Southampton (Lord) v. Brown, 6 B. & C. 718.

Nor will a covenant lie by a person for whose benefit a covenant was entered into with a third person. Ex parte Richardson, 14 Ves. jun. 187.

In a lease, the lessor reserved a right to enter and cut timber, making reasonable satisfaction to the lessee for any damage occasioned thereby; covenant does not lie by such lessee for any wrongful act of cutting down by a third person, if without the consent or authority of the lessor, however he may countenance the act afterwards. Griffiths v. Brome, 6 T. R. 66.

And where it only appeared that the lessor had promised to make compensation afterwards for such wrongful act, if the wrong-doer himself did not; this was not considered as an adoption of the act, nor as evidence of a prior consent to it whereon to found an action on the covenant. Id.

Tenants in common may sue a lessee of a house in covenant for negligence of repairs, who after the demise, but before the breach alleged, became a co-tenant of the plaintiffs in the same house. Yates v. Cole, 2 B. & B. 660: S. C. nom. Gates v. Cole, 5 Moore, 554.

Joint or several Covenants.]—Though a covenant be joint in its terms, yet if the interests of the covenantees be several, each may sue separately for a breach. Withers v. Birchman, 5 D. & R. 106; 3 B. & C. 254.

In covenant, where the interest of the covenantees is several, although the covenant be joint, yet it shall be taken to be several, and the action is maintainable by one alone: therefore, where A., B., and C., for themselves severally, and not jointly, and for their several, respective, and not joint heirs, executors, &c., covenanted with D. and E., and each of them, their and each of their executors, &c., to deliver an abstract of title of their respective interests in certain premises: in consideration whereof, D. and E., for themselves and their respective heirs, covenanted with A., B., and C., and each of them, their and each of their heirs, &c., to pay in the proportions of one moiety to A., his executors, &c., and the other to B. and C., their executors, &c., by instalments, and to execute to A., B., and C., their heirs, &c., a security by way of mortgage, for payment of such instalments, and, as a collateral security, to give their joint and separate bond:—Held, that on non-payment of the first instalment by D. and E., A. might maintain a separate action against them. James v. Emery, 2 Moore, 195; 5 Price, 529.

A covenant with two and every of them is joint, though the two are several parties to the deed. Southcote v. Hoare, 3 Taunt. 87.

In a lease of a colliery, the two lessees covenanted "jointly and severally," with the lessor, in manner following, viz. &c.; then followed several other covenants, after which was a covenant that moneys due should be accounted for and paid by the lessees, their executors, &c., not saying, and each of them:—Held, that this, and the former covenants, were several as well as joint. Northumberland (Duke) v. Errington, 5 T. R. 522.

If the obligee of a bond covenant not to sue one of two joint and several obligors, and, if he do, that the deed of covenant may be pleaded in bar, he may still sue the other obligor. Dean v. Newhall, 8 T. R. 168.

A covenant to and with A., his executors, administrators, and assigns, and to and with B. and her assigns, to pay an annuity to A., his executors, &c., during B.'s life, is a joint covenant to A. and B., in which they have a joint legal interest, although the benefit be for A. only; and therefore, on the death of A., the right of action survives to B., and A.'s administrator cannot sue on the covenant. Anderson v. Martindale, 1 East, 497.

One of three joint covenantees for the payment of an annuity to A., cannot sue the executors of B., the covenantor, upon a simple averment that the covenantees did not, at any time, seal or deliver the indenture: for non constat but they may still execute the deed, and joint covenantees who may sue, must sue jointly, unless they have expressly disclaimed the covenant, which it lies upon the party suing to show. Petrie v. Bury, 5 D. & R. 152; 3 B. & C. 353.

Quere, whether the declaration would have been sufficient if it had averred that the two covenantees not joined had refused to assent to the deed? Id.

Covenant by the master of a vessel with the several part-owners, and their several and respective executors, administrators, and assigns, to pay certain moneys to them, and to their and every of their several and respective executors, administrators, and assigns, at a certain banker's, and in such parts and proportions as were set against their several and respective names:—Held, a several covenant, upon which each covenantor must sue severally in respect of his several interest, and that they could not maintain a joint action. Servante v. James, 10 B. & C. 410.

Covenant against A. and B., on a covenant supposed to be implied as incident to a demise by lease: on production of the lease, it appeared that, in point of law, A. only demised, and that B., who had an equitable interest, merely confirmed:—Held, that the action was not maintainable against A. and B. Smith v. Pocklington, 1 C. & J. 445; 1 Tyr. 309.

The representative of a deceased partner, the account between him and the partnership being at the time unsettled, agrees with the surviving partners to assign to them all his interest in the concern, upon being paid a certain sum of money, and having an indemnity against all claims upon the partnership; the assignment is executed, the money paid, and a joint covenant of indemnity given by the surviving partners:—Held, that the covenant is not to be considered in equity as a joint and several covenant. Sumner v. Powell, 1 Turn. & Russ. 423.

2. Personal Representatives.

Where the plaintiff, as executrix, declared that the defendant, by deed, conveying to the plain-tiff's testator certain lands in fee, subject to redemption on payment of a sum certain, covenanted with the testator, that he was, at the time of the execution of the deed, seised in fee, and had a right to convey, &c.; and assigned for breach that the defendant was not seised, &c., and had not a right to convey, &c.: this was held ill upon special demurrer, and that the executrix could not maintain an action for such breaches of covenant, without showing some special damage to the testator in his lifetime, or that the plaintiff claimed some interest in the premises. Covenant upon request of the testator, his heirs or assigns, to make further assurance to the testator, his heirs or assigns, and breach assigned that the plaintiff, as executrix, requested the defendant to execute a release between the defendant, the plaintiff, and S. A., for further assuring the premises to the uses mentioned in the deed, which the defendant refused, without showing that the plaintiff claimed an interest, or to whom use the lease was to enure, or why S. A. was party to it, was considered ill on special demurrer. Kingdon v. Nettle, 1 M. & S. 355.

In an action against executors, in their own right, on a covenant for good title and quiet enjoyment against any person or persons whatever, contained in an assignment of a lease of the testator, (by way of mortgage), the declaration must show a breach by some act of the covenantor. Noble v. King, 1 H. Black. 34.

An executor of a lessor, tenant from year to year, may declare for a breach of covenant in a lease, for twenty-one years, granted by the lessor, though the breach was committed after the lessor's death. Mackay v. Mackreth, 2 Chit. 451; 4 Dougl. 213.

But such a declaration should state the tenant's interest and title in the premises, and where it was merely stated that A. B. demised premises to the testator of the plaintiff, (viz. the tenant, without stating that A. B. was seised in fee, or of any other estate,) and that the plaintiff's testator demised them to C. D., and stated a breach of covenant after the plaintiff's testator's death: it was held bad. Id.

If tenant in tail male demise for a term of ninety-nine years, and his lessee assign over to another, but, before such assignment, tenant in tail male dies without issue male, no action of covenant upon the lease can be maintained against the representatives of the grantor by and assignee, the lease being void at the time of the assignment, and no interest passing under it. Andrew v. Pearce, 1 N. R. 158.

A covenant by two joint lessees, if it be joint and several, shall bind the executors of the deceased lessee. Enys v. Donathorne, 2 Buz. 1190.

By indenture tripartite between A. 1, B. 2, and C. 3, A., tenant for life, demised to C., and C. covenanted with B. (a receiver) and other the receiver or receivers for the time being, and with such other person, who, for the time being, should be entitled to the freehold, and with every of them. A. died:—Held, that his executrix could not maintain covenant for:

breach in her testator's lifetime, but that the action was joint, and survived to B. Southcote v. Hoare, 3 Taunt. 87.

3. Heirs and Devisees.

On a covenant for further assurance, where the breach happened in the time of the covenantee, but the damage accrued to the heir, the heir has a preferable title to the executor to bring the action of covenant. King v. Jones, 1 Marsh. 107; 5 Taunt. 418. And see Kingdon v. Nottle, 1 M. & S. 355.

But the ancestor might, if he had pleased, also have sued. Id.—Mansfield.

Covenant lies by the heir, upon a covenant made to the ancestor and his heirs, to whom lands are conveyed in fee by husband and wife, that he and his wife will make further assurance upon request of the ancestor and his heirs; and the heir may well assign for breach, that his ancestor requested the husband, that he and his wife would levy a fine to pass the estate of the wife legally to him and his heirs, which they refused to do before their decease, per quod after the death of the ancestor, the devisee of the wife ejected the heir. Jones v. King, 4 M. & S. 188.

Where a plaintiff declares as heir-at-law upon a lease granted by his ancestor, he must show how he is heir-at-law; a general averment that the demised premises descended to him as cousin and heir-at-law is not sufficient. Lidgbird v. Judd, 7 D. & R. 517.

The devisee of the equity of redemption (the legal fee being in a mortgagee) is not liable in covenant as assignee of all the estate, right, title, and interest of the original covenantor. Carlisle Mayor, &c. v. Blamire, 8 East, 487.

An action of covenant does not lie upon the stat. 3 W. & M., c. 14, against the devisee of land, to recover damages for a breach of covenant made by the devisor; but the remedy thereby given is confined to cases where debt lies. Wilson v. Knubley, 7 East, 127; 3 Smith, 128.

Covenant lies by devisee of lands in fee, upon a covenant made by defendant to the testator, to whom defendant conveyed the lands in fee, that defendant was lawfully seised, &c., and had a good right to convey, &c.; for such covenant runs with the land, and though broken in the lifetime of testator, it is a continuing breach in the time of the devisee, and it is sufficient to allege for damage, that thereby the lands are of less value to the devisee, and that he is prevented from selling them so advantageously. Kingdon v. Nottle, 4 M. & S. 53.

Where there was a devise to trustees and their heirs during the life of A., in trust for A., and, after his decease, to B. in fee; and the trustees recovered, in A.'s lifetime, damages for breach of covenants in a lease granted by the testatrix, and still subsisting. Upon A.'s death, it was held that the damages belonged to her estate. Noble v. Pass, 2 Sim. 343.

4. Assignees.

Devise to the use of H. I. for life, without impeachment of waste, &c., remainder to the use of plaintiff for life:—Held, that the plaintiff, after the death of H. I., was an assignee within stat. 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, and might maintain covenant against lessee, for rent in arrear after the death of H. I., and during the continuance of the term. Isherwood v. Oldknow, 3 M. & S. 382.

Covenant will lie by the assignee of the reversion of part of the demised premises against the lessee for not repairing. Twynam v. Pickard, 2 B. & A. 105.

And under an absolute assignment of a term, the assignee may be sued on the covenants, before he has taken actual possession. Walker v. Reeves, 2 Dougl. 461, n.

The assignee of a term declared against as such, is not liable for rent accruing after he has assigned over, though it be stated that the lessor was a party executing the assignment, and agreed thereby that the term, which was determinable at his option, should be absolute. Chancellor v. Poole, 2 Dougl. 764.

A trustee, to whom two leases were assigned in trust for securing an annuity, having said to the occupier of one of the demised houses, "You must pay the rent to me; I am become landlord for my client who has the annuity, and you must pay the ground rents for me:"—Held, that the trustee was liable in covenant to the lessor, as assignee of both leases, for non-payment of rent and not repairing. Gretton v. Diggles, 4 Taunt. 766.

Where the assignee of the reversion, who sued the defendant in covenant, alleged that the lessor was seised, (without stating of what estate,) and being so seised, devised to plaintiff in fee:—Held, a sufficient allegation of title after verdict. Harris v. Beavan, 4 Bing. 646; 1 M. & P. 633.

Covenant for non-payment of rent lies against an assignee of a lease, to whom an assignment is made by way of mortgage security, although he has never entered, or taken actual possession. Williams v. Bosanquet, 3 Moore, 500; 1 B. & B. 238.

L., being seised in fee, demised to B. for twenty-one years, from June, 1814: B. demised to M. for twenty-one years, from June, 1814, wanting twenty-one days; and then by deed pool granted to L. the indenture of lease to M., the premises thereby granted, and the rent reserved, to hold to L., his executors, &c., for the term mentioned in the demise to M.; L. by lease and release conveyed the premises, the reversion and reversions, rents, issues, and profits, and all his interest, in fee to the plaintiff, by way of mortgage; M. assigned his term to defendants by way of mortgage, but defendants never entered:—Held, that plaintiff might sue defendants on the covenants in M.'s lease. Burton v. Barclay, 7 Bing. 745; 5 M. & P. 785.

Covenant against the assignee of the lessee for the non-payment of rent; plea, that before the rent became due, the defendants assigned all their estate and interest in the demised premises to A. and B.; replication, that in and by the indenture, the lessee, for himself, his executors, administrators and assigns, covenanted that he, his executors or administrators, should not assign the premises thereby demised without the consent of the lessor, and that no consent was given:—Held, upon demurrer, first, that the replication was bad, inasmuch as the covenant of the lessee not to assign did not estop the assignee from the setting up the assignment; and secondly, that the action being founded on privity of estate, the liability of the defendant ceased as soon as the privity of estate was destroyed. Paul v. Nurse, 8 B. & C. 486.

An assignee who takes from a lessee leasehold premises by indenture indorsed on the lease, "subject to the rent reserved in the lease," is liable in covenant to the lessee for rent which the lessee has been called on by the lessor to pay after the assignee has assigned over. Steward v. Wolveridge, 9 Bing. 60; 2 M. & Scott, 75.

5. Pleadings.

(a) Venue.

Where there are several facts material to the plaintiff's action arising in different counties, an action of covenant may be brought in either. London (Mayor) v. Cole, 7 T. R. 583.

In covenant by the assignee of the lessee of a term, the action is local, and the venue must be laid in the county where the lands are situated. Berwick (Mayor) v. Shanks, 11 Moore, 372.

(b) Statement of Deed.

Generally.—In covenant on a lease, it is sufficient if the declaration sets out the legal operation and effect of the demise. Wilson v. Bramhall, 1 Y. & J. 2.

A declaration alleging, that by indenture purporting to be made between plaintiff and defendant, it was witnessed that defendant covenanted:—Held, after plea, sufficiently certain. Baynon v. Batley, 8 Bing. 256; 1 M. & Scott, 339.

In covenant by lessor against lessee, on an indenture of demise, it is no variance if the plaintiff in his declaration makes profert of the "said indenture," and at the trial produces the counterpart executed by the lessee. Pearse v. Morris, 3 B. & Adol. 396.

In an action of covenant against a surety in an annuity bond, who had become bound to pay in twenty-eight days from the time specified for payment by the grantor, in case of failure by the latter, the declaration by mistake stated that the payment had become due from the surety on the day on which it had become due only from the principal:—Held, that as the bond and covenant were upon the whole set forth with sufficient certainty to prevent any reasonable mistake as to the ground of action, the inconsistent allegation might be rejected as surplusage. Hearn v. Cole, 1 Dow, 459, 463.

In covenant, if, after a plea of non est factum, the defendant at the trial admits the due execution of the specialty mentioned in the declaration, he may still take advantage of a variance. Gedde v. Shuttleworth, 1 Camp. 70—Ellenborough.

Omitting a word, where the context supplies it, or inserting a wrong word, where the context corrects the mistake, is no variance. Loxland v. Knight, 1 M. & R. 597; 3 C. & P. 106.

Therefore, if on oyer of a bond, the obligors are described as commissioners acting under an act of parliament for the regulation of the duties on assessed taxes, and in the bond the duties are stated to be the duties of assessed taxes, this is no variance. Id.

Time and Consideration.—One may declare in covenant that the deed was indented, made, and concluded on a day subsequent to the day on which the deed itself is stated on the face of it to have been indented, made and concluded. Hill v. Cazenove, 4 East, 477; 1 Smith, 272. And see Maylston v. Palmerston (Viscount), M. & R. 6; 2 C. & P. 474.

Semble, that it is not a misdescription of a lease to state it as commencing on a particular day, when the habendum is from that day. Wald v. Fisher, 2 Moore, 378.

The omitting to state the consideration of a bargain and sale cannot be taken advantage of as a general demurrer. Bolton v. Carlisle (Bishop), 2 H. Black. 259.

A declaration alleged a deed to have been made for considerations therein mentioned; the deed itself contained only one (a pecuniary) consideration:—Held, no variance. Gully v. Bester (Esq.), 12 Moore, 591; 4 Bing. 290.

In covenant, where in setting out the deed the declaration stated that "it was witnessed, among other things, that as well in consideration of, &c., and there was no word in the declaration to answer to the phrase "as well," and only part of the consideration was stated:—Held, that this was a fatal variance. Swallow v. Beaumont, 2 B. & A. 765; 1 Chit. 518.

In an action of covenant, the declaration stated that by a certain indenture it was witnessed that as well in consideration of certain furnaces to be erected by the plaintiff, T. R. B. did demise, &c. The defendant pleaded non est factum. On producing the deed in evidence, it appeared to be that as well in consideration of the erection of the furnaces, "as also for building certain houses and payment of rent, T. R. B. did demise," &c.:—Held, that this was a fatal variance. Id.

Parties.—In covenant on a lease for not repairing, the instrument was described in the declaration to be made by the plaintiff of the one part, and the defendant of the other. On the production of the lease in evidence, it appeared to have been made by the plaintiff and his wife of the one part, and the defendant of the other:—Held, that this was no variance, although the premises demised were the property of the wife before marriage. Arnold v. Revault, 4 Moore, 66; 1 B. & B. 433.

A declaration on a lease which stated that the plaintiffs derived their titles from two lessors only, and that two other lessors, who were also parties to the demise, had no interest therein, was supported by the production of the lease, which appeared to be a demise by the four. Wood v. Day, 1 Moore, 389; 7 Taunt. 646.

If, on an action of covenant, the declaration states that the deed was made between the plaintiff of the one part, J. C. of the second part, and A. B. of the third; and the deed, when produced, appear on the face of it to be by the plaintiff as trustee of J. C. of the first part, G. C. of the second, and A. B. of the third part, and the deed be executed by G. C., this is a fatal variance, although the breaches assigned do not in any way affect the party who is intended to be described as of the second part. Mayelston v. Palmerston (Viscount), 2 C. & P. 474; M. & M. 6—Abbott.

Premises.]—Where plaintiff declared in covenant on a demise of lands, and the demise was of all that piece or parcel of ground and premises, containing by estimation one acre:—Held, that this was not a variance, for one piece will satisfy the term lands. Birch v. Gibbs, 6 M. & S. 115.

Where plaintiff declared in covenant, that defendant demised to him a wharf and storehouses, &c., the word in the deed being storehouse, it was held to be a fatal variance, although no breach was assigned upon the demise of the storehouse, but only upon a covenant by defendant, not to suffer a wharf to be erected on his estate to the injury of the said wharf, per quod plaintiff was deprived of certain gains which would otherwise have arisen from wharfage dues, storeroom, &c. Floor v. Mill, 4 M. & S. 470.

Where a declaration in covenant by the reversioner against A., the assignee of a lease for years, (granting license to B. to continue a certain channel open through the bank of a navigable river, upon certain conditions), imported that the grantors had the entire right and absolute possession of the channel, and full power to grant the use of it to B., and it appeared from the indenture that they were described merely as the persons who had the greatest proportion or share in the profits of the navigation, and that they, by virtue of all or any powers and authorities vesting in or enabling them, granted the license to B., his executors, administrators and assigns:—Held, that this was a variance, as the grantors had not the privilege which the deed as set out in the declaration purported to grant. Portmore Earl v. Bunn, 3 D. & R. 145; 1 B. & C. 694.

In covenant on a lease, a mistake in the name of a person stated in the demise as the late tenant of the premises is a fatal variance. Bowditch v. Mawley, 1 Camp. 195—Ellenborough.

A variance in setting out one of several covenants in a lease, on which breaches were assigned, z. the cellar-beer field, instead of the Aller-beer field, being considered as part of the description in the deed declared on, though the plaintiff waived going for damages on the breach of that covenant, is fatal. Pitt v. Green, 9 East, 188.

Declaration against the defendant as assignee of "all the estate," &c., in certain premises; evidence that he is assignee of "part," is a fatal variance. Hare v. Cator, Cowp. 766.

In an action of covenant on a lease, "of the veins of coals under certain farms and lands therein described, situate in the parishes of B. and M., then in the several occupations of A., B., and C., with liberty to dig any pits, shafts, levels, soughs," &c., the declaration varied from the deed; 1st, in stating that the land was set out by admeasurement, instead of by reputation; 2ndly, in changing the word "soughs" to "sloughs;" 3dly, in stating the lands to be situate in the parish of B. and M., instead of the parishes of B. and M.; and 4thly, in stating them to be in the occupation of A., B., and C., instead of in the several occupations of A., B., and C.:—Held, that the 1st and 3d variances were fatal; but that the 2nd and 4th were immaterial. Morgan v. Edwards, 2 Marsh. 96; 6 Taunt. 695.

Other Matters.]—In an action of covenant it is no objection under the plea of non est factum that the deed contains material qualifications of the covenants set out, which qualifications are not noticed in the declaration. Gordon v. Gordon, 1 Stark. 294—Ellenborough.

In debt for rent, if the reservation is set out, it is a variance to omit the words "except as hereafter mentioned," referring to a subsequent proviso, by which a deduction is to be made on a certain event, but which does not happen. Vassour v. Ormrod, 6 B. & C. 430; 9 D. & R. 597.

And in covenant for not repairing, if the covenant to repair contain an exception of "casualties by fire," it is fatal on non est factum to state it in the declaration as a general covenant to repair, omitting the exception. Brown v. Knill, 5 Moore, 164; 2 B. & C. 395.

In covenant, in setting out a deed, if the word "an" is written instead of "one;" and the name "Burl" written instead of "Burt;" it is no variance. Hill v. Saunders, 1 C. & P. 80—Gifford. And see 7 D. & R. 17; 4 B. & C. 529; 9 Moore, 238; 2 Bing. 112.

Nor is the stating a lease to be for twenty-one years, and proving it to have been granted for that term, determinable, at the option of either party, at the end of seven or fourteen years. Id.

A declaration in covenant for the assignment of a share in certain stock, professed to set out the covenant, and described it as a covenant to assign a certain sum of 2000*l.* The defendant, on oyer, set out the deed, and demurred as for a variance, that the covenant was to assign stock, not money:—Held, to be no variance: and even if it were, that the defendant should have pleaded non est factum and not have demurred; on the ground, that where a defendant sets out a deed on oyer, on which the declaration is framed, he cannot on demurrer take advantage of a variance, in an immaterial part, between the deed as stated in the declaration and as set out on oyer. Ross v. Parker, 2 D. & R. 662; 1 B. & C. 358.

Held, that in an action of covenant against a mortgagor, a statement that the defendant bound himself, his heirs, executors, &c., was no variance, though the word "heirs" was not mentioned in the covenant. Hamborough v. Wilkie, 1 Chit. 518; 4 M. & S. 474, n.

Where a declaration stated the consideration to be that the plaintiff would assign to the defendant a bill of exchange, and that he did assign it to the defendant, and a promise by the latter accordingly, and it was proved that the parties had agreed that the plaintiff should give up the bill to the defendant, the latter, however, paying over the proceeds to the plaintiff; and in pursuance of the agreement, the plaintiff by deed assigned to the defendant the bill, and all sums of money due thereon, for the defendant's own use; and the defendant covenanted to pay the plaintiff a sum equal to any money he should receive on account of the bill:—Held, that as the declaration imported that the plaintiff had made an absolute assignment of the bill, and as the assignment in evidence was conditional only, it was a fatal variance. Van Sandau v. Burt, 5 B. & A. 42: S. C. not S. P. 1 D. & R. 168.

The reversion of lands demised to the defendant for years is conveyed to A. and B., and the heirs of B., in trust for A. and his heirs: A. declares singly on a covenant contained in the lease, and after setting out the above title, without averring the death of B., states himself to be "thereby seised of the reversion in his demesne as of fee." This is bad on general demurrer. Scott v. Godwin, 1 B. & P. 67.

An assignment of a breach of covenant in general words, although in the words of the covenant, was held ill upon a demurrer to the defendant's plea, because the assignment did not show any particular act of the plaintiff, nor in what particular respect he had refused to act, which amounted to a breach of his covenant. And such bad assignment is not cured by pleading over a set-off of a demand (claimed in a different right from that in which the plaintiff, who was an administratrix, sued) to a declaration in covenant for unliquidated damages. Warn v. Bickford, 7 Price, 550. And see 9 Price, 43.

In an action for a breach of covenant on the defendant's demise, for not having a good title to demise for the whole of the term demised, whereby the plaintiff's assignee of the lease was evicted, and the plaintiff put to costs in an action against him by such assignee, for such eviction; the plaintiff must show who evicted the assignee, and merely stating that a third person was seised in fee of the premises, and that the assignee was evicted generally, is not sufficient. Fraser v. Skey, 2 Chit. 646.

In a declaration of covenant to "save harmless and keep indemnified W., his heirs, &c., and also certain closes, &c., from and against all actions, suits, claims, and demands whatsoever, both in law and equity, which should or might be had, made, commenced, or prosecuted by any person or persons claiming any right, title, or demand, in, to, or upon the said closes, &c., as heir at law of H. P. and others, of and from all costs, charges, and expenses which the said W., &c., should sustain or be put to, for or by reason or means of such actions, suits, claims, or demands, or otherwise howsoever:" to which the breaches assigned were, first, that on, &c., H. W. P. "made claim and demand, and claimed to have right and title of, in, to, and upon the said closes, &c., and entered into and upon the same, and cut down grass, and felled trees there growing, and converted them to his own use;" and secondly, that he "caused and procured, and suffered and permitted, one H. B., who then held and enjoyed the said closes, to attorn to him, and to withhold the payment of the rents, issues, and profits;" and thirdly, that "certain title deeds relating to the said closes, &c., were kept, detained, and withheld by one A. W., at the instance, and through the means, and by and through the claim and demand of T. B., W. P., &c.:"—Held, after the defendant had pleaded over, that these breaches were well assigned on the covenant declared upon. Ford v. Welch, 1 D. & R. 133; 1 B. & C. 29. And see Nash v. Palmer, 5 M. & S. 374.

The defendant by indenture assigned a bond to the plaintiff, executed to the former by J. R., and covenanted that he would maintain, ratify, and confirm all actions brought on the bond by the plaintiff, without releasing the same. A declaration on this covenant averred that the plaintiff had brought an action on the bond against J. R.; but in breach of covenant the defendant did not maintain, ratify, and confirm the said action, "although he was afterwards, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, requested;" but, on the contrary thereof, by deed did release J. R. from all actions, &c., whereby the plaintiff was hindered in his action, and sustained the costs thereof: and also of the rule of court to set aside the release: on demurrer to this breach held first, that it was not necessary to allege the venue to the request stated in the declaration, the request itself being unnecessary; and secondly, that the allegation of special damage, if objectionable, ought to have been demurred to specially, and could not be taken advantage of upon general demurrer to the breach assigned. Amory v. Brodrick, 1 D. & R. 361; 5 B. & A. 712; 1 Chit. 329.

The defendant purchased an estate charged with an annuity to M. S., and, as part of the bargain, covenanted to pay the annuity, and to indemnify the vendor against any charge in respect of it. Breach, in a declaration on this covenant, non-payment of the annuity; without adding that the vendor had been thereby damaged:—Held, sufficient on demurrer. Seward v. Anson, 2 Bing. 519; 10 Moore, 55.

The defendant covenanted not to stock a bank otherwise than with sheep: the plaintiff, in a declaration for the breach of such covenant, averred under a videlicet that he stocked it with other cattle, on the 1st of October, 1816; and on nineteen other days, between that day and the 28th of September, 1817; the defendant pleaded that he did not stock otherwise than with sheep on the several days in the declaration mentioned:—Held, that such plea was bad on special demurrer, as it tendered an immaterial issue; and that, if the plaintiffs went to trial, they would be obliged to prove a feeding otherwise than with sheep, on all the days mentioned in the declaration, although by the terms of such declaration they were not bound to prove such feeding on any particular day between the two periods mentioned. Arundel (Corp.) v. Bowman, 2 Moore, 91; 8 Taunt. 190.

However informally a breach of covenant may be assigned in a declaration, yet, after judgment by default, the court will pronounce such judgment as will meet the justice of the case, notwithstanding the informality. Brookes v. Heberd, 8 D. & R. 69.

(d) Pleas, &c.

Where in covenant a defendant craves oyer of the deed, sets it out, and pleads non est factum, the deed so set out becomes part of the declaration, and the only question at the trial upon that issue is, whether the deed set out was executed by the defendant. Snell v. Snell, 7 D. & R. 294; 4 B. & C. 741.

In covenant issue cannot be taken on a general averment of performance. Sayre v. Minus, Cowp. 578.

Performance pleaded otherwise than in the terms of the covenant itself is bad, even on general demurrer. Scudamore v. Stratton, 1 B. & P. 455.

Non infregit conventionem cannot be pleaded where the plaintiff assigns a breach without setting forth the particulars of the title of a third person, adding, "and so the defendant did not keep his covenant," &c. Hodgson v. E. I. Comp. 3 T. R. 278.

Non infregit conventionem is not an issuable plea to a breach of covenant assigned in the negative. Bone v. Eyre, 2 W. Black. 1312; S. C. nom. Boone v. Eyre, 1 H. Black. 273, n.

Where there are mutual covenants, one cannot be pleaded in bar of the other. Id.

If the plaintiff in covenant assigns as a breach that the defendant did not repair, a plea that the defendant did not break his covenant is bad, on special demurrer, although the declaration concludes by averring that so the defendant hath broken his covenant; but it would be good after verdict. Taylor v. Needham, 2 Taunt. 278.

If an estate be created by deed-poll, no lessa, ne granta, ne chargea, ne enfeoffa, ne dona, &c., are good pleas for a stranger to the deed. Id.

In covenant, the plaintiff in his declaration (after proferet) averred that the defendants, for the considerations in the deed contained, covenanted that they would not do certain acts. The defendants pleaded, that, as the performance of the covenants in the indenture mentioned would, for term, prevent them from carrying on their trade, they were in restraint of trade and illegal:—Held, that as the defendants had not craved oyer of the deed, nor demurred to the declaration on account of any supposed insufficiency of consideration in the deed, as set out therein, the court of C. P. (the covenants being reasonable) would presume that the deed disclosed a sufficient legal consideration. Horner v. Ashford, 11 Moore, 91; 3 Bing. 322.

Upon a bare covenant for the payment of money, the defendant may plead a tender. Jackson v. Clay, 7 Taunt. 486; 1 Moore, 200.

Quære, whether on a plea of tender the defendant's perpetual readiness to pay be traversable? Id.

Where two or three joint covenantors suffer judgment by default on counts on several deeds, and the third defends and succeeds on some counts, the plaintiff cannot hold his judgment on those counts against the other two. Morgan v. Edwards, 6 Taunt. 398; 2 Marsh. 201.

6. Evidence.

If a lease describe the demised land as meadow land, no other evidence is necessary to prove that it was meadow land at the commencement of the term. Birch v. Stevenson, 3 Taunt. 469.

A lessee, by executing a lease, is stopped from disputing a title of either of his lessors. Wood v. Day, 1 Moore, 389; 7 Taunt. 646.

Therefore in an action of covenant, for not repairing, against the assignee of the original lessee, where such assignee was bound to the same covenants as those contained in the original lease:—Held, that a declaration which stated that the plaintiffs derived their titles from two lessors only, and that two other lessors, who were also parties to the demise, had no interest therein, was supported by the production of the lease, which appeared to be a demise by the four. Id.

Upon non est factum pleaded in covenant, the lessee in possession shall not controvert the title of the plaintiff, his lessor, to demise. Friend v. Eastabrook, 2 W. Black. 1152.

If the breach of a covenant be assigned thus, "that the defendant has not used a farm in a husband-like manner, but on the contrary has committed waste," the plaintiff cannot give evidence of the defendant's using the farm in an unhusband-like manner, if it do not amount to waste. Harris v. Mantle, 3 T. R. 307.

Plaintiff covenanted to build two houses for 500*l.* by a certain day, and averred, in an action of covenant for the money, that the houses were built in the time: evidence that the time had been enlarged by parol agreement, and the houses finished within the enlarged time, did not support the declaration. Littler v. Holland, 3 T. R. 590.

A fraudulent misrepresentation of the legal effect of a deed by which a party is induced to execute, cannot be given in evidence on the plea of non est factum. Edwards v. Brown, 1 Tyr. 182.

In an action of covenant, under the general issue, the defendant shall not be allowed to give in evidence what amounts to a license. Ratcliff v. Pemberton, 1 Esp. 35—Kenyon.

If a plaintiff produce an original lease for a long term, and prove possession for 70 years, the means assignments shall be presumed. Earl v. Goodwin v. Baxter, 2 W. Black. 1228.

In covenant to indemnify plaintiff from all debts due from the late partnership of plaintiff, defendant, and D. B., and from all suits, &c.: proof of a copy of the proceedings in a foreign court in a suit there, instituted against the late partners for the recovery of a partnership debt, in which a decree passed against them for want of answer, per quod a sequestration issued against the plaintiff's estate, and he was obliged to pay the debt, &c., was held to be conclusive against defendant, and that defendant was not at liberty to show that the proceedings were erroneous. Tarleton v. Tarleton, 4 M. & S. 20.

If a plaintiff only set out a part of a deed, he cannot use the remainder without proving it in the usual way. Williams v. Sills, 2 Camp. 519—Ellenborough.

Even though a plea of non est factum be not pleaded. Id.

In covenant which runs with the land, evidence that the defendant is in as heir will support a declaration charging him as assignee. Derisley v. Custance, 4 T. R. 75.

If a person is found on the premises, appearing as the tenant, it is prima facie evidence of an underletting sufficient to maintain a breach of covenant not to assign or underlet. Doe d. Hindley v. Rikarby, 5 Esp. 4—Alvanley.

Parol evidence is not admissible to show that a deed, which on the face of it is absolute, is merely conditional. Anon. Loft, 457.

But a party may show under a plea of non est factum that it was fraudulent, and so avoid it. Id.

Proof that the deed was delivered as an escrow is admissible in evidence, under a plea of non est factum. Stoytes v. Pearson, 4 Esp. 255—Ellenborough. And see B. N. P. 172.

So, is evidence of lunacy. Faulder v. Silk, 3 Camp. 126—Ellenborough.

So, is evidence of coverture. Lambert v. Atkins, 2 Camp. 272—Ellenborough.

Even though the defendant on other occasions has acted as a feme sole. Davenport v. Nelson, 4 Camp. 26—Ellenborough.

In covenant, the plaintiffs declared that A., B., C., and D., by indenture, demised to defendant, and made profert of the counterpart.—Plea, non est factum. After proof of the execution of the counterpart by defendant, it is competent to him to produce the demising part to show that only two of the four lessors executed it; and defendant having so done, and thereupon a nonsuit having been directed:—Held, that the nonsuit was well. Wilson v. Woolfryes, 6 M. & S. 341.

Under this title, there are a great number of cases decided on statutes now repealed, but which appear to be equally applicable to the enactments which have been substituted for those contained in such repealed statutes. There are also other cases, which, though not equally applicable to the new enactments, may still be of some use; and there are also many cases which cannot in any way apply to the present state of the law. These last are merely enumerated, without the points decided in them being stated at length.

I. PERSONS CAPABLE OF COMMITTING CRIMES.

1. Infants.

If a child more than seven and under fourteen years of age, is indicted for felony, it will be left to the jury to say whether the offence was committed by the prisoner, and, if so, whether, at the time of the offence, the prisoner had a guilty knowledge that he or she was doing wrong. The presumption of law is, that a child of that age has not such guilty knowledge, unless the contrary be proved by the evidence. Rex v. Owen, 4 C. & P. 236—Littledale.

2. Insane Persons.

[39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 94; 56 Geo. 3, c. 117.]

The question of insanity in a prisoner is a question for the jury, and ought to be clearly made out, in order to exempt the party from punishment. Rex v. Arnold, and other cases, 1 Russ. C. & M. 9, et seq.

To justify the acquittal of a prisoner indicted for murder, on the ground of insanity, the jury must be satisfied that he was incapable of judging between right and wrong; and that, at the time of committing the act, he did not consider that it was an offence against the laws of God and nature. Rex v. Offord, 5 C. & P. 168—Lyndhurst.

If on a trial the defence is insanity, a witness of medical skill may be asked whether such and such appearances, proved by other witnesses, are in his judgment symptoms of insanity. Rex v. Wright, R. & R. C. C. 456.

But quære, whether he can be asked whether, from other testimony given, the act with which the prisoner is charged is, in his opinion, an act of insanity; which is the very point to be decided by the jury. Id.

Where a prisoner's defence is insanity, a medical man who has heard the trial may be asked whether the facts proved show symptoms of insanity. Rex v. Searle, 2 M. & M. 75—Park.

The 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 94, s. 1, is confined to cases of treason, and murder, and felony; and the second section extends to all offences: therefore, if, on a trial for a misdemeanour, the prisoner appear to be insane, and the jury find him so, the court may order him to be confined until his majesty's pleasure be known. Rex v. Little, R. & L. C. C. 430; 1 Russ. C. & M. 15.

A commitment of an insane person, under 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 94, s. 3, is not a commitment in execution, and is not to be construed with the same strictness; and therefore a warrant stating that A. B. had been discovered and apprehended, under circumstances that denoted a derangement of mind and a purpose of committing some crime, for which, if committed, he would be liable to be indicted, to wit, an assault, and that the said A. B., being brought before the justice, he committed him, was held sufficient, although it did not appear to be the name of the person whom the prisoner intended to assault, and it did not appear that the committing magistrate received any evidence on oath. Rex v. Gourlay, 7 B. & C. 669; 1 M. & R. 619.

3. Presumed Coercion of Wife.

A wife cannot commit larceny in the company of her husband; for it is deemed his coercion, and not her voluntary act: yet, if she do it in his absence, and by his mere command, she is then punishable as if she were sole, and the husband, it is said, may be accessory to the wife. Anon. 2 East, P. C. 559.

A wife, by her husband's order and procuration, but in his absence, knowingly uttered a forged order and certificate for the payment of prize-money:—Held, that the presumption of coercion at the time of uttering did not arise, as the husband was absent, and that the wife might be convicted of the uttering, and the husband of procuring. Rex v. Morris, R. & R. C. C. 270; 1 Russ. C. & M. 18.

The husband might, under the 43 Geo. 3, c. 113, have been tried in the same county where the principal felony was committed. Id. But that stat. is repealed, and this is now regulated by the stat. 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 9.

On an indictment against a married woman for falsely swearing herself to be next of kin, and procuring administration:—Held, that she might be guilty, although her husband was with her when she took the oath. Rex v. Dicks, 1 Russ. C. & M. 16.

But held, that she could not be guilty of any breach of duty, in neglecting to provide an apprentice of her husband's with sufficient food and necessaries, whereby he died, as she was only the servant of her husband. Rex v. Squire, 1 Russ. C. & M. 16.

When the crime has been completed in his absence, no subsequent act of his can be referred to what was then done. Rex v. Hughes, 1 Russ. C. & M. 18.

In the case of Rex v. Archer, R. & M. C. C. R. 143, husband and wife were jointly indicted for receiving stolen goods, and both convicted:—Held, that as the charge against the husband and wife was joint, and it had not been left to the jury to say whether she received the goods in the absence of the husband, the conviction of the wife was wrong, though she had been more active than her husband.

If a wife by the incitement of her husband knowingly utters in his absence a forged order and certificate for the reception of prize-money, under 43 Geo. 3, c. 123, they may be indicted together, she as principal on the statute, he as accessory before the fact at common law. Rex v. Morris, 2 Leach, C. C. 1096.

Strict evidence of the marriage need not be given, as cohabitation and reputation are sufficient. Rex v. Atkinson, 1 Russ. C. & M. 20—Bayley.

If a man and woman be jointly indicted for a larceny, the latter as a single woman, it is not sufficient to entitle her to an acquittal, on the ground of coercion, to prove that both jointly committed the offence, and that she had lived with the man two years, and was reputed his wife; but such evidence must be given as to satisfy the jury that the prisoners are in fact married persons, although it is not absolutely necessary to prove the actual marriage of the parties. Rex v. Hassall, 2 C. & P. 434—Garrow.

4. Compulsion.

An apprehension, though ever so well grounded, of having property wasted or destroyed, or of suffering any other mischief not endangering the person, will afford no excuse for joining or continuing with rebels. Rex v. McGrother, 1 East, P. C. 71.

But it is otherwise if the party join from fear of death or by compulsion. Rex v. Gordon, 1 East, P. C. 71.

On an indictment on the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 4, for breaking a threshing machine, the judge allowed a witness to be asked whether the mob, by whom the machine was broken, did not compel persons to go with them, and then compel each person to give one blow to the machine; and also, at the time when the prisoner and himself were forced to join the mob, they did not agree together to run away from the mob the first opportunity. Rex v. Crutchley, 5 C. & P. 133.

5. Drunkenness.

Although voluntary drunkenness cannot excuse from the commission of crime, yet when, as upon a charge of murder, the material question is, whether an act was premeditated or done only with sudden heat and impulse, the fact of the party being intoxicated has been held to be a circumstance proper to be taken into consideration. Rex v. Grindley, 1 Russ. C. & M. 8—Holroyd. Rex v. Barrow, Law, C. C. 75; Rex v. Rennie, Law, C. C. 76—Holroyd.

II. PRINCIPAL AND ACCESSORY.

7 Geo. 4, c. 64, ss. 9, 10, 11; 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 61; 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 26; 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 31; 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 25; 2 Will. 4, c. 34, s. 18.]—The stat. 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, repeals 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 24; and partially repeals 1 Anne, st. 2, c. 9, and 5 Anne, c. 31; and the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, repeals 43 Geo. 3, c. 113, and 3 Geo. 4, c. 38.

All present at the time of committing an offence are principals, although only one act, if they are confederated and engaged in a common design, of which the offence is part. Rex v. Tattersall, 1 Russ. C. & M. 22—Bayley. See Rex v. Dyson, post, p. 738.

If several are out for the purpose of committing a felony, and upon an alarm run different ways, and one of them maim a pursuer to avoid being taken, the others are not to be considered principals in such act. Rex v. White, R. & L. C. C. 99.

If several act in concert to steal a man's goods, and he is induced by fraud to trust one of them in the presence of the others with the possession of the goods, and then another of the party entices the owner away, in order that the party who has obtained possession of the goods may carry them off, all will be guilty of the felony; the receipt by one, under such circumstances, being a felonious taking by all. Rex v. Standley, 1 Russ. C. & M. 24; R. & R. C. C. 36; 2 Russ. C. & M. 127—Bayley.

Going towards a place where a felony is to be committed, in order to assist in carrying off the property, and assisting accordingly, will not make a man a principal, if he was at such a distance at the time of the felonious taking as not to be able to assist in it. Rex v. Kelly, R. & R. C. C. 41; 1 Russ. C. & M. 23; 2 Russ. C. & M. 257.

A person waiting outside of a house to receive goods, which a confederate is stealing in the house, is a principal in the theft. Rex v. Ous, 1 R. & M. C. C. 96.

H. and S. broke open a warehouse, and stole thereout thirteen firkins of butter, &c., which they carried along the street thirty yards; they then fetched the prisoner, who was apprised of the robbery, and he assisted in carrying away the property; he was indicted for theft:—Held, that he was only an accessory, and not a principal. Rex v. King, R. & R. C. C. 332.

Where the prosecutor left his goods in a cart standing in the street, and one M. came and hid the cart away, and, having taken it a short distance, delivered it to another man, with directions to take it to his, M.'s house. Upon the cart arriving at the house, one S., who was at work in the cellar, having directed a companion to blow out the light, came up and assisted in removing the goods from the cart:—Held, that S. could not be indicted as a principal. Rex v. McMakin, R. & R. C. C. 333, n.—Lawson. And see Rex v. Dyer, 2 East, P. C. 767.

It is not sufficient to make a man a principal in uttering a forged note, that he came with the utterer to the town where it was uttered, went out with him from the inn where they put up, joined him again in the street after the uttering at a little distance, and ran away when the utterer was apprehended. Rex v. Davis, 1 Russ. C. & M. 22; R. & R. C. C. 113—Bayley.

For circumstances that will amount to a constructive presence at common law will not be sufficient for the same purpose upon an indictment under a statute. Id.

Where three persons agreed to utter a forged note, and one uttered it at Gosport, and the other two, by previous concert, waited at Portsmouth, they were held to be accessories. Rex v. Seares, 1 Russ. C. & M. 32; 2 East, P. C. 974; R. & R. C. C. 25. And see Rex v. Else, R. & R. C. C. 142; 1 Russ. C. & M. 86.

If two persons be indicted for murder, the one as a principal in the first degree, and the other as being present, aiding and assisting to commit it, the jury may find the principal in the first degree not guilty, and convict the principal in the second degree. Rex v. Taylor, 1 Leach, C. C. 360. S. C. nom. Shaw's case, 1 East, P. C. 351.

A person indicted as an accessory before the fact cannot be convicted of that charge upon evidence proving him to have been present, aiding and abetting. Rex v. Gordon, 1 Leach, C. C. 515; 1 East, P. C. 352.

An accessory may controvert the guilt of the principal, notwithstanding the record of his conviction. Rex v. Smith, 1 Leach, C. C. 288.

Although a statute which creates a new felony will attach to that felony all the common-law incidents to felony, so that accessories thereto will be included, yet it will go no further; and a receiver of stolen goods, not being a common-law accessory, is not included. Rex v. Sadi, 1 Leach, C. C. 468; 2 East, P. C. 748.

Therefore, where A. G. was convicted of stealing promissory notes on 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, s. 3, and her husband of receiving them on 3 W. & M. c. 9, s. 4:—Held, that the conviction of the husband was wrong, he not being a common-law accessory. Rex v. Gaze, R. & R. C. C. 384. This is now regulated by the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 54.

Persons present, aiding and abetting, are principals in the second degree, and are within the Riot Act, and ousted of clergy. Rex v. Royce, Burr. 2073.

If a charge against an accessory is, that the principal felony was committed by persons unknown, it is no objection that the same grand jury have found a bill imputing the principal felony to J. S. Rex v. Bush, R. & R. C. C. 372.

An indictment against an accessory to a felony, committed by a person unknown, cannot be supported, if it appears that the principal felon acknowledged his guilt before the grand jury. Rex v. Walker, 3 Camp. 264—Le Blanc.

On an indictment for murder, if the jury find special verdict, it is necessary, in order to convict principals in the second degree, to state, 1st, that they were actually present; or, 2dly, some acts done by them at the very time, which unavoidably show that they were present; 3dly, that they were of the same party, on the same pursuit, and under the same engagements and expectation of mutual defence and support, with the person who did the fact. Rex v. Northwick, 1 Dougl. 207.

It is not essential that there should have been direct communication between an accessory before the fact and the principal felon. It is enough if the accessory direct an intermediate agent to procure another to commit the felony; and it will be sufficient even if the accessory does not name the person to be procured, but merely directs the agent to employ some person. Rex v. Cooper, 5 C. & P. 535—Parke. See Rex v. Morris, Rex v. Giles, Rex v. Badcock, and Rex v. Stewart, div. Forgemay, LXVII., div. 5.

An averment of the conviction of the principal is supported by the production of the record, however erroneous the judgment may be. Rex v. Baldwin, 3 Camp. 265—Thompson.

On an indictment against an accessory, a confession by the principal is not admissible in evidence to prove the guilt of the principal. Rex v. Turner, M. C. C. R. 347.

It must be proved aliunde, especially if the principal be alive. Id.

Semble, that a conviction on a plea of guilty will not be evidence against the accessory to prove the principal guilty. Id.

Nor, semble, will a conviction on a plea of not guilty. Id.

A. and B. were indicted for larceny as principals; A. had been sent by his master to deliver goods to C. He only delivered part, and the rest was stolen, and found in the possession of B.:—Held, that it was a question for the jury whether B. was present at the time when A. separated the stolen portion from the bulk; for that, if he was, both were rightly charged as principals. Rex v. Grove, 6 C. & P.—Gurney.

III. TREASON.

1. Offence.

[25 Edw. 3 st. 5, c. 2; 1 M. sess. 1, c. 1; 36 Geo. 3, c. 7 (made perpetual by 57 Geo. 3, c. 6). As to Papists, 23 Eliz. c. 1; 3 Jac. 1, c. 4, s. 22; 5 Eliz. 1; 1 Ann. st. 2, c. 17, s. 3; 6 Ann. c. 7.]

It will be treason in a foreigner resident here, or who is himself abroad, if his family reside here, to aid even his own countrymen in acts or purposes, of hostility, whether his own sovereign be at enmity or peace with ours, for it is a breach of the local allegiance due from him. Rex v. Delamotte, 1 East, P. C. 53.

An apprehension, though ever so well grounded, of having property wasted or destroyed, or of suffering any other mischief not endangering the person, will afford no excuse for joining or continuing with rebels. Rex v. McGrowther, 1 East, P. C. 71.

But it is otherwise if the party join from fear of death, or by compulsion. Rex v. Gordon, 1 East, P. C. 71.

And there is no distinction between serving as an officer or private man. Id.

An overt act of piracy only may show a traitorous intent against the king, in treason for adhering to the king's enemies, if the indictment allege the intent to be to seize the ships of the king as well as his subjects. Rex v. Evans, 1 East, P. C. 80; 2 East, P. C. 798.

Indictment for high treason in compassing the king's death, and adhering to his enemies. Overt act, conspiring with others to send intelligence to the enemy concerning the disposition of the king's subjects in case of an invasion. Rex v. Stone, 6 T. R. 527.

Any intelligence sent to the enemy in order to serve them in shaping their attack or defence, though the purport of it may be to dissuade them from an invasion, is high treason. Id.

Though the intelligence be intercepted. Rex v. Henscy, 2 Ld. Ken. 366; 1 Burr. 642.

It is high treason to attempt, by intimidation and violence, to compel the repeal of a law. Rex v. Lord George Gordon, 2 Dougl. 590.

2. Indictment, Trial, and Judgment.

[35 Hen. 8, c. 2; 1 Edw. 6, c. 12, s. 22; 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 11, s. 12; 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 10. ss. 7 & 8; 7 & 8 Will. 3, c. 3; 7 Ann. c. 21, s. 5; 6 Geo. 3, c. 53, s. 3; 30 Geo. 3, c. 48; 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 93; 54 Geo. 3, c. 146; 6 Geo. 4, c. 50, s. 21.]

A letter sent by one of the conspirators in pursuance of the common design with a view of reaching the enemy, is evidence against all engaged in the same conspiracy. Rex v. Stone, 6 T. R. 527.

A person indicted for high treason is entitled, under stat. 7 Ann. c. 21, s. 14, to a copy of the indictment, and a list of the witnesses for the crown, and of the jurymen who are to be returned on the panel, ten days before his arraignment. Rex v. Lord George Gordon, 2 Dougl. 591.

Such list may properly describe a party as lately of such a place. Rex v. Watson, 2 Stark. 116—Ellenborough.

A paper found in the possession of one of the conspirators, containing intelligence proved to have been collected by the prisoner, which paper was in the hand-writing of the prisoner's clerk, is evidence against the prisoner. Aliter, of a paper in the same hand-writing not appearing to have any connexion with the prisoner. Rex v. Stone, 6 T. R. 529.

If one overt act be proved by one witness in the county in which the trial is had, which gives the grand jury jurisdiction to inquire, another overt act of the same species of treason proved by another witness in a different county will make two witnesses within stat. 7 Will. 3, c. 3. Rex v. Jellias, 1 East, P. C. 130.

A conviction of high treason may be upon the evidence of one witness only, in all cases where there is no corruption of blood. Rex v. Gahagan, 1 Leach, C. C. 42; 1 East, P. C. 129.

As to evidence of treason, see Rex v. Horn Tooke, 1 East, P. C. 60, 99; 2 Leach. 823, c.

If a true bill be found against a person for high treason, the judge will, on the application of the counsel for the crown, order the sheriff to furnish the solicitor to the treasury with a list of the persons to be summoned on the jury, that a copy of it may be delivered to the prisoner. Rex v. Collins, 5 C. & P. 305—Bosanquet and Gurney.

Seemle, that counts charging a party with high treason in "compassing, &c., the main and wounding" of his majesty, and with "compassing, &c., the wounding" of his majesty, are bad. Id.

The prisoner, in a case of high treason, has a right to address the jury in addition to the speeches of his counsel; and, semble, that both the prisoner's counsel have a right to address the jury, although there be no evidence on the part of the defence. Id.

IV. OFFENCES RELATING TO THE COIN.

1. Coining.

[2 Will. 4, c. 34, s. 3.]

By the stat. 2 Will. 4, c. 34, the following statutes relating to the coin are either wholly or partially repealed, as under-mentioned, viz.

Statutes totally repealed.—Stat. de moneta rego, 21 Edw. 1, stats. 4, 5 & 6; 27 Edw. 1, stat. 1; 9 Edw. 3, stat. 2; 17 Edw. 3; 25 Edw. 3, stat. 1, c. 12 & 13; 3 Hen. 5, stat. 2, c. 6 & 7; 19 Hen. 7, c. 5; 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 19; 1 M. stat. 2, c. 6; 1 & 2 Ph. & M. c. 11; 5 Eliz. c. 11; 14 Eliz. c. 3; 18 Eliz. c. 1; 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 26; 9 & 10 Will. 3, c. 21; 1 Ann. stat. 1, c. 9; 15 Geo. 2, c. 28; 11 Geo. 3, c. 40; 13 Geo. 3, c. 71; 7 Geo. 4, c. 9.

Statutes partially repealed.—18 Edw. 3, stat. 1; 25 Edw. 3, stat. 5, c. 2, (the statute of treasons), only repealed as to the coin; 27 Edw. 3, stat. 2, c. 14; 6 & 7 Will. 3, c. 17; 7 Ann. c. 25; 37 Geo. 3, c. 126; 56 Geo. 3, c. 68, 3 Geo. 4, c. 114, (hard labour act.) only repealed as to uttering counterfeit coin.

By the stat. 2 Will. 4, c. 34, acts relating to the coin passed in the under-mentioned Scotch parliaments are repealed.—6 Parl. Jac. 2; 5 Parl. Jac. 3; 8 Parl. Jac. 3; 7 Parl. Jac. 6; 7 Parl. Jac. 5; 9 Parl. Mary; 9 Parl. Mary; 1 Parl. Jac. 6; 1 Parl. Jac. 6; 1 Parl. Will. (8.)

And by the stat. 2 Will. 4, c. 34, the under-mentioned Irish statutes are totally repealed.—1 Edw. 4, c. 3; 28 Eliz. c. 6; 8 Ann. c. 6; 24 Geo. 3, c. 50; 26 Geo. 3, c. 39.

And by the same stat. the Irish statute 4 Geo. 1, c. 9, is partially repealed.

It is not necessary, to constitute the offence of coining, that there should be an impression on the counterfeit, if it resemble the common coin. Rex v. Welch, 1 East, P. C. 87, 164; 1 Leach, C. C. 364.

A counterfeit shilling produced in evidence, although it is quite smooth, and there is no impression of any sort discernible on it, will support an indictment for counterfeiting to the similitude of the legal coin. Id.

To make a round blank like the smooth shillings in circulation, the original impression of which has been effaced by wear, is counterfeiting to the likeness and similitude of the good legal and current coin of the realm called a shilling. Rex v. Wilson, 1 Leach, C. C. 285.

Forging the impression of the current coin on a piece of metal so irregular that it will not pass is not high treason, for the crime is incomplete. Rex v. Varley, 1 Leach, C. C. 76; 1 East, P. C. 164; 2 W. Black. 682. This is now regulated by the stat. 1 Will. 4, c. 34, s. 3.

Forging the impression of money on an irregular piece of metal, without finishing it, so as to make it current, is an incomplete crime, and not high treason. Rex v. Varley, 2 W. Black. 682.

It is a question of fact whether or not counterfeit coin was made to resemble the real coin. Rex v. Welch, 1 East, P. C. 87, 164; 1 Leach, C. C. 364.

Proof that a man occasionally visited coiners; that the rattling of money was occasionally heard with them; that he was seen counting something, as if it was money, when he left them; that on coming to their lodgings just after the apprehension he endeavoured to escape, and was found to have bad money about him; is not sufficient evidence to implicate him as counselling, procuring, aiding, and abetting the coining. Rex v. Isaacs, 1 Russ. C. & M. 62—Bayley.

2. Colouring.

1 Will. c. 34, s. 3.]—By this statute the stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 26, and 15 Geo. 2, c. 28, are wholly repealed.

Preparing blanks with such materials, as when rubbed will make them resemble the real coin, was a colouring within the stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 26, before the resemblance has been produced by much friction. Rex v. Case, 1 East, P. C. 165; 1 Leach, C. C. 154, n.

So, bringing to the surface the latent silver in a blank of mixed metal, by dipping it in aqua-fortis, which corrodes the base metal, was a colouring within that statute. Rex v. Lavey, 1 East, P. C. 166; 1 Leach, C. C. 153. And see Rex v. Harris, 1 Leach, C. C. 135.

3. Implements.

1 Will. 4, c. 34, s. 10.]—By this stat. the stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 26, is wholly repealed.

A press for coinage was a tool or instrument within that branch of stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 26, which made it treason to have the same knowingly in the party's custody. Rex v. Bell, 1 East, P. C. 169.

Semle, that having such in possession for the purpose of coining foreign gold coin not current here, would be a sufficient excuse to take the case out of the statute. Id.

Having knowingly in possession a puncheon for the purpose of coining, was within the stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 26, though that alone, without the counter puncheon, would not make the figure, &c. Rex v. Ridgeley, 1 East, P. C. 171; 1 Leach, C. C. 189.

Though a puncheon for coining had not the letters:—Held, that it was sufficiently described in an indictment as a puncheon which would impress the head side of a shilling. Id.

On an indictment for having in possession a die made of iron and steel, proof of a die made of either material, or of both, will be sufficient; for it is immaterial to the offence of what the die is made. Rex v. Oxford, 1 Russ. C. & M. 76; R. & R. C. C. 382; S. P. Rex v. Phillips, R. & R. C. C. 369—Bayley.

A collar of iron for graining the edges of counterfeit money, was an instrument within the stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 26, s. 1, although it was to be used in a coining press. Rex v. Moore, 2 C. & P. 235; R. & M. C. C. 122—Burrough.

A mould of lead, having the stamp of one side of a shilling, held to be a tool or instrument within the 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 25. Rex v. Lennard, 2 W. Black. 807.

A prisoner may be indicted for having the unlawful custody of a mould; for a mould being mentioned in the first clause of the stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 26, it is to be considered as included in the general words "tool or instrument" in the subsequent clause. Rex v. Lennard, 1 Leach, C. C. 90; 1 East, P. C. 170; 2 W. Black. 807.

It is a misdemeanour at common law to have tools for coining in possession with intent to use them. Rex v. Sutton, 1 East, P. C. 172—Hardwicke diss.

The cases of Rex v. Oxford, 1 Russ. C. & M. 76; R. & R. C. C. 382; S. P. Rex v. Phillips, R. & R. C. C. 369; Rex v. Barker, 1 Russ. C. & M. 79; S. P. Rex v. Wallace, 1 East, P. C. 186; related to the time of the commencement of the prosecution, which is now not material, the stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 26, being repealed by the 2 Will. 4, c. 34.

4. Selling counterfeit Coin at less than its Denomination imports.

2 Will. 4, c. 34, s. 6.]—By this stat. the stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 26, is wholly repealed.

An indictment on 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 26, s. 6, stated that five counterfeit shillings were paid and put off for two shillings; the proof was that five bad shillings were sold for half a crown:—Held, that the variance was fatal, as it was a contract which must be correctly proved as laid. Rex v. Joyce, Car. Cr. Law, 164—Thompson and Heath.

In an indictment for putting off counterfeit money at a lower rate than its denomination imports, it was alleged that the prisoner put off a counterfeit sovereign and three counterfeit shillings "for the sum of five shillings;" the proof was, that the prisoner said he would let the witness have a bad sovereign at four shillings, and three bad shillings at one shilling, and the witness paid for them with two good half crowns:—Held, that this proof supported the allegation. Rex v. Hedges, 3 C. & P. 410—Vaughan.

Where, on a bargain for the sale of counterfeit money, the price had been agreed upon and the prisoner had produced the coin, but the complete transfer was prevented by the appearance of the police officers:—Held, that it did not amount to a putting off within stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 26. Rex v. Wooldridge, 1 Leach, C. C. 307; 1 East, P. C. 179.

An indictment on 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 26, s. 6, for putting off bad money, must have stated that it was "not cut in pieces." Rex v. Palmer, 1 Leach, C. C. 102. But, semble, that that is not now necessary.

In an indictment for putting off counterfeit money, the names of the persons to whom it was put off ought to be set out. Anon. 1 East, P. C. 180—Holt.

The punishment under statutes 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 26, and 11 Geo. 3, c. 40, was burning in the hand, and imprisonment not exceeding a year, and that under stat. 18 Eliz. c. 7, s. 30. Rex v. West, 1 East, P. C. 181. But it is now regulated by the stat. 2 Will. 4, c. 34.

The case of Rex v. Bunning, 1 East, P. C. 180; 2 Leach, C. C. 621; related to the words milled money, which do not occur in the stat. 2 Will. 4, c. 34.

5. Having base Coin.

2 Will. 4, c. 34, s. 8.]—Having counterfeit silver in possession, with intent to utter it as good, was no offence before the stat. 2 Will. 4, c. 34, s. 8. Rex v. Heath, R. & R. C. C. 184; S. P. Rex v. Stewart, R. & R. C. C. 288.

And the having such silver in possession, knowingly, designedly, and illegally, knowing it to be counterfeit, cannot be considered an act. Id.

But getting it into possession with intent to utter it is an offence. Id.

Procuring base coin, with intent to utter it as good, is a misdemeanour. Rex v. Fuller, R. & R. C. C. 308.

Having in possession a large quantity of base coin is evidence of having procured it with intent to utter it, unless there are other circumstances to induce a belief that the defendant was the maker. Id.

Having the possession of counterfeit money, with intention to pay it away as and for good money, was an indictable offence at common law. Rex v. Parker, 1 Leach, C. C. 41. But see the stat. 1 Will. 4, c. 34.

6. Uttering.

(a) After Conviction.

2 Will. 4, c. 34, s. 7.]—By this stat. the stat. 15 Geo. 2, c. 28, is wholly repealed.

An indictment on 15 Geo. 2, c. 28, for uttering bad money by the common trick called "ringing the changes," was good, although it did not state that it was uttered in payment as and for good and lawful money: for the words of the statute are in the disjunctive "utter or tender in payment." Rex v. Franks, 2 Leach, C. C. 644.

An indictment on stat. 15 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 3, for uttering after a conviction for a double offence, need not have averred that defendant was adjudged to be a common utterer; it was sufficient if it stated that he was tried and convicted of uttering to A., and of uttering on the same day to B., and adjudged to be imprisoned a year. Rex v. Booth, R. & R. C. C. 7.

An indictment on 15 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 2, for feloniously uttering counterfeit coin after two convictions and judgments for misdemeanours on the same statute, must have set out the former convictions and judgments with a prout patet per recordum. Rex v. Turner, 1 R. & M. C. C. 47.

An indictment charging that the defendant was before that time indicted for uttering base coin, knowing it to be false and counterfeit, and having about him at the time in his custody and possession other base coin, on which he was in due form of law tried and convicted, and adjudged by the court to be imprisoned for a year, and find sureties for two years more; and then averring, that, having been so convicted as a common utterer of false money, he afterwards knowingly uttered other base money, is good, without averring that the court before whom he was tried and convicted for the first offence adjudged him to be a common utterer of false money; though the stat. 15 & 16 Geo. 2, c. 28, said, that such a person as is described in the first indictment shall be deemed and taken to be a common utterer, &c. Rex v. Michael, 2 Leach, C. C. 988; 1 East, P. C. Add. xix.; R. & R. C. C. 29.

(b) Twice within Ten Days.

2 Will. 4, c. 34, s. 7.]—By this statute the stat. 15 Geo. 2, c. 28, is wholly repealed.

Charging two utterings on the same day, and in a different count, would not have warranted judgment on 15 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 3, as for two utterings on the same day, there being no precise averment of that fact. Rex v. Tandy, 1 East, P. C. 182; 2 Leach, C. C. 833.

A conviction on 15 Geo. 2, c. 28, for two utterings on the same day, would have warranted judgment of a year's imprisonment, though the indictment charged the first uttering on 14th February, and that on the said 14th February he uttered, &c.; for, being a material averment, it would be taken to have been proved that both utterings were on the same day. Rex v. Motes, 2 Leach, C. C. 923; 1 East, P. C. Add. xviii.; Russ. C. & M. 83.

It is not necessary, in an indictment charging the offence of repeated uttering within ten days to show that in the original indictment the offender was adjudged a common utterer. Rex v. Michael, R. & R. C. C. 29; 1 East, P. C. Add. xix.; 2 Leach, C. C. 98.

In an indictment on the 15 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 1, it was not necessary to aver that the defendant is a common utterer of false money. Rex v. Smith, 2 B. & P. 127. But see the stat. 2 Will. 4, c. 34, s. 7, which relates to this offence.

(c) Uttering while having other Counterfeit Money.

2 Will. 4, c. 34, s. 7.]—By this statute the stat. 15 Geo. 2, c. 28, is wholly repealed.

Indictment on that statute charged that defendant uttered a counterfeit half-crown to I. K. and that at the time he so uttered it he had about him another counterfeit half-crown; but it did not conclude by averring that he was a common utterer of false money:—Held, that such aver-ment was unnecessary, and that the indictment was sufficient to warrant the greater punishment of the third section of the statute Rex v. Smith, R. & R. C. C. 5; 2 Leach, C. C. 858; 1 East, P. C. 183; 2 B. & P. 127.

Semle, that such an averment was a necessary conclusion of law from the facts stated in the indictment, and not necessary to be averred. Rex v. Smith, R. & R. C. C. 5; 2 Leach, C. C. 858; 1 East, P. C. 183; 2 B. & P. 127.

If two prisoners are indicted for uttering a counterfeit shilling, having another counterfeit shilling in their possession, it is not necessary to prove with certainty which of the pieces was the one uttered, and which was found on them unuttered, if both the pieces of the money are proved to be counterfeit. And if it appear that two prisoners went to a shop, and that one of them went in and uttered the bad money, having no more in her possession, and the other stayed outside the shop, having other bad pieces of money, both may be convicted; the uttering and the possession being both joint. Rex v. Skerrett, 2 C. & P. 427—Garrow.

Where a man and woman were indicted for uttering a bad shilling to M. B., and having in their possession another bad shilling at the time, and the uttering was by the woman alone in the absence of the man:—Held, that the man was not liable to be convicted with the actual utterer, although proved to be the associate of the woman on the day of uttering, and to have had other bad money about him for the purpose of uttering; and, secondly, that the woman could not be convicted of the second offence of having other bad money in her possession, on the evidence of her associating with a man not present at the uttering, but having large quantities of bad money about him for the purpose of uttering. Rex v. Else, R. & R. C. C. 142. See Rex v. Smith, supra.

7. Copper Coin.

2 Will. 4, c. 34, s. 12.]—By this statute the stat. 11 Geo. 3, c. 40, is wholly, and the stat. 37 Geo. 3, c. 126, partially, repealed.

The punishment under 11 Geo. 3, c. 40, for counterfeiting the copper moneys, was only a year's imprisonment, which was founded on the general stat. 18 Eliz. c. 7, s. 3. Rex v. West, 1 East, P. C. 162. But it is now regulated by the Will. 4, c. 34, s. 12.

Uttering and tendering in payment counterfeit copper money was not an indictable offence. Rex v. Cirwan, 1 Russ. C. & M. 79, 82, 1 East, P. C. 182, before the stat. 2 W. 4, c. 34, but is made so by s. 12 of that act.

3. Exchanging Coin at higher than its Value.

The exchanging guineas for bank-notes, taking more guineas in such exchange at a higher value than they were current for by the king's proclamation, is not an offence against the stat. 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 19. Rex v. De Yonge, 14 East, 402. That statute is repealed, as are sects. 13, 14, 15, 16, of the stat. 56 Geo. 3, c. 68.

9. Competency of Witnesses.

The record of the conviction and judgment must be produced before a convict for coining can be a witness. Rex v. Collins, 2 Leach, C. C. 829.

V. OFFENCES RELATIVE TO THE CUSTOMS.

[6 Geo. 4, c. 108; 7 Geo. 4, c. 48; 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 84; 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 51, 59.]

To constitute the offence of shooting at a vessel of the customs, and also at an officer of the same on the high seas, under stat. 52 Geo. 3, c. 143, the shooting must be malicious. Therefore, if a custom-house vessel chase a smuggler, and fire upon her without hoisting such a pendant and ensign as the 56 Geo. 3, stat. 2, c. 104, s. 8, requires, the returning of the fire will not be malicious. Rex v. Reynolds, R. & R. C. C. 465.

[These statutes, as well as those on which these cases were decided, are now repealed, but it is material to consider whether they are not applicable to the enactments now in force.]

There must have been a deliberate assembling to bring the offenders within the penalty of the Smuggling Statute, 19 Geo. 2, c. 34. Rex v. Hutchinson, 1 Leach, C. C. 339: S. P. Rex v. Spice, 1 Leach, C. C. 343, n.

To bring offenders within the penalties of that statute they must have been armed with offensive weapons. Id.

An information stating that H. was a person employed in the service of the customs, that it was his duty, as such person so employed, to seize certain goods, and that defendant offered to bribe H. to violate such duty:—Held bad in arrest of judgment for not stating the facts out of which the legal duty arose. Rex v. Everett, 2 M. & R. 35; 8 B. & C. 114.

A common horsewhip is not an offensive weapon. Rex v. Fletcher, 1 Leach, C. C. 23, 342, n.; 2 Str. 1166.

Nor a hatchet caught up accidentally in the heat and hurry of the affray. Rex v. Rose, 1 Leach, C. C. 342, n.

Nor large sticks about three feet long with large knobs at the end, with several prongs, the natural growth of the stick arising out of them. Rex v. Ince, 1 Leach, C. C. 342, n.

Nor large sticks such as people usually ride with to defend themselves. Rex v. Cosans, 1 Leach, C. C. 342, n.

But bludgeons, properly so called, clubs, and anything that is not in common use for any other purpose but a weapon, are clearly offensive weapons within the act. Id.

Semle, that bats, which are long poles used by smugglers to carry tubs of spirits, are not offensive weapons within the meaning of 6 Geo. 4, c. 108, s. 56. Rex v. Noakes, 5 C. & P. 326—Littledale, Bolland, and Alderson.

It is not necessary to constitute a felony within the act that every individual assembled should be armed. Rex v. Franklyn, 1 Leach, C. C. 255, 343, n.; Cald. 244.

An indictment lay to the quarter sessions for lighting fires on the coast, contrary to stat. 47 Geo. 3, sess. 2, c. 66; and if removed, and the defendant be tried and convicted before a judge at Nisi Prius, this court awarded sentence. Rex v. Cock, 4 M. & S. 71.

A vessel liable to forfeiture under 6 Geo. 4, c. 108, s. 3, was seized while entering the harbour of A., but within the jurisdiction of the justices of B. A person liable to apprehension under sect. 49 of that act being found on board, was arrested there, and carried to A., and convicted by two justices of that place under sect. 74 of that act:—Held, first, that the person was, in the absence of evidence as to the time of his going on board, properly convicted as having been on board on the high seas; and, secondly, that the justices of A. had jurisdiction. Rex v. Nunn, 3 M. & R. 75.

VI. OFFENCES RELATIVE TO QUARANTINE, AND EXPOSURE OF INFECTED PERSONS.

6 Geo. 4, c. 78.]—Disobeying the orders of the Privy Council with respect to the performance of quarantine is an offence at common law. Rex v. Harris, 2 Leach, C. C. 549.

The 26 Geo. 2, c. 6, s. 1, enacts, that all persons going on board ships coming from infected places shall obey such orders as the king in council shall make, without annexing any particular punishment; the disobedience of such an order is an indictable offence, and punishable as a misdemeanour at common law. Rex v. Harris, 4 T. R. 202.

A person may be indicted for unlawfully and injuriously carrying a child infected with the small-pox along a public highway, in which persons are passing, and near to the habitations of the king's subjects. Rex v. Vantindillo, 4 M. & S. 73.

It is an indictable offence in an apothecary unlawfully and injuriously to inoculate children with the small-pox, and, while they are sick of it, unlawfully and injuriously to cause them to be carried along a public street. Rex v. Burnett, 4 M. & S. 272.

VII. OFFENCES RELATING TO STAMPS.

1. Forgery.

[10 Ann. c. 97; 12 Geo. 3, c. 48; 13 Geo. 3, cc. 56, 59; 24 Geo. 3, sess. 2, c. 53; 27 Geo. 3, c. 13; 38 Geo. 3, c. 69; 44 Geo. 3, c. 98; 52 Geo. 3, c. 143; 55 Geo. 3, cc. 184, 185; 56 Geo. 3, c. 56; 6 Geo. 4, c. 119; 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 97.]

Delivering a box, containing, amongst other things, forged stamps, to the party's own servant, that he may carry them to an inn, to be forwarded by the carrier to a customer in the country, is an uttering. Rex v. Collicot, R. & R. C. C. 212; 2 Leach, C. C. 1048; 4 Taunt. 300.

The offence of uttering a forged stamp will be complete, although, at the time of uttering, certain parts of the stamp are concealed, but all the parts that are visible are like a genuine stamp, though the part concealed is unlike a genuine stamp. And such an offence is indictable under the 44 Geo. 3, c. 98. Id.

Quære, whether a person who takes some of the stamps from a writ, and fixes them to another writ of the same kind, and then sells it for the purpose of its being used by such persons as might buy it from his vendee, is within the 12 Geo. 3, c. 48? Rex v. Field, 1 Leach, C. C. 33.

An indictment for forging a stamp on foreign muslins, on stat. 27 Geo. 3, c. 13, s. 35, string the duty to be chargeable, for and in respect of foreign muslins, is sufficient, although the words of the statute imposing the duty are "for or upon" in some clauses, "for" in others, "on" in others, and "upon" in others. Rex v. Hall, 1 East, P. C. 895.

Where a person delivers forged stamps to his servant, to convey to a certain inn, and the place of delivery and the inn are in different counties:—Held, that indictments for uttering such forged stamps should be laid in the county where the delivery was. Rex v. Collicot, R. & R. C. C. 212; 2 Leach, C. C. 1048; 4 Taunt. 300.

If a person engraves a counterfeit stamp similar in some parts, dissimilar in others, to the legal stamp, and, cutting out the dissimilar parts, alters the similar parts as genuine, concealing the space whence the dissimilar part is cut out; this amounts to a forgery and uttering. Id.

In describing the offence of forging a stamp, it is enough to describe it as a stamp provided and used in pursuance of an act of parliament, without setting out the impression or inscription, or naming the amount of duty denoted thereby. Id.

An indictment on the 44 Geo. 3, c. 98, for forging stamps, need not aver that the commissioners had provided a certain stamp, nor describe what that stamp is. Id.

2. Having false stamped Paper.

Where on an indictment for having in possession certain reams of paper, with counterfeit marks, and impressions of certain stamps used to denote the duty imposed in respect of paper, on the covers or wrappers thereof, it was proved that the paper came from the prisoner at Exeter, and was brought from thence by his servant to Topsham, in the county of Devon, and seized by the custom officer on board a vessel at Topsham:—Held, that this was in law a custody and possession in the prisoner in the county of Devon sufficient to maintain the indictment in that county. Rex v. Pim, R. & R. C. C. 425.

3. Transposing Stamps.

55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 7.]—It was the duty of the prisoner, who was a clerk in the stamp-office, to cut off the corners of parchments which bore the blue paper stamps allowed for as spoiled by the commissioners of stamps, and to put the blue paper stamps and the small pieces of parchment so cut off, and which were glued to them, into the fire, without separating them. Instead of doing this, he separated a blue paper stamp from the small piece of parchment to which it had been glued, and glued it to a new skin of parchment, on which the words "This indenture" had been written. The jury found, that he had no fraudulent intent when he cut the stamp from the skin of parchment, but that he had when he separated the blue paper stamp from the small piece of parchment; and that he then intended to apply the stamp to a parchment intended to be used as an indenture:—Held, that this was a capital offence. And it being uncertain whether the stamp so separated was impressed before or after the passing of the stat. 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, it was held, that the party might be properly convicted on a count stating the stamp to be the impression of a die made and used "in pursuance of the statute made and provided for denoting a certain duty, being one of those under the management of the commissioners of stamps." Rex v. Smith, 5 C. & P. 107—Littledale, Vaughan, and Bosanquet; M. C. C. 314.

A variance on the 13 Geo. 3, c. 56, for removing the silver mark from one article to another, between a lion rampant and a lion passant, held fatal. Rex v. Lee, 1 Leach, C. C. 416.

VIII. OFFENCES RELATING TO THE POST-OFFICE.

[5 Geo. 3, c. 25; 7 Geo. 3, c. 50; 42 Geo. 3, c. 31; 52 Geo. 3, c. 143; 5 Geo. 4, c. 20; 2 Will. 4, c. 4.]

The stat. 7 Geo. 3, c. 50, s. 2, does not extend to servants of the post-office, and therefore a conviction of one of them for stealing out of the post-office a letter sent to be delivered by the post was held wrong. Rex v. Pooley, 1 East, P. C. Add. xvii.; 2 Leach, C. C. 887, 901, 904; 1 B. & P. 311; R. & R. C. C. 31.

A draft purporting to be drawn in London, but actually drawn in Maidstone, without any stamp on it, contrary to stat. 31 Geo. 3, c. 25, s. 4, is not such a draft for the payment of money as will make a servant of the post-office, who steals it out of a letter intrusted to his care, liable to the punishment inflicted on servants of the post-office by 7 Geo. 3, c. 50, s. 1. Id.

Such draft is admissible in evidence for the purpose of proving the fact of stealing the letter. Id.

It is not necessary, in order to ground a conviction on stat. 7 Geo. 3, c. 50, that the person employed by the post-office should have taken the oath mentioned in stat. 9 Anne, c. 10, s. 41. Rex v. Clay, 2 East, P. C. 580.

Quære, whether one indicted as a charger and porter of letters may not be convicted as a sorter only? Rex v. Shaw, 2 East, P. C. 580; 2 W. Black. 789; 1 Leach, C. C. 79.

But if acquitted on the special count, he cannot be convicted on a general count, as a person employed in the post-office, on evidence that he was no otherwise employed than as a sorter. Id.

If an indictment on the 7 Geo. 3, c. 50, s. 1, state the prisoner to have been employed as a post-boy and rider in the business of the post-office, proof that he was employed as post-boy is sufficient. Rex v. Ellins, R. & R. C. C. 188.

A bill of exchange may be laid as a warrant for the payment of money within the stat. 7 Geo. 3, c. 50. Rex v. Willoughby, 2 East, P. C. 581.

To steal a letter out of the post-office containing money, but no security for money, is not an offence within the 7 Geo. 3, c. 50, if the offender be a servant of the post-office. Rex v. Scutt, 1 Leach, C. C. 106; 2 East, P. C. 582.

A person employed by the post-office as a stamper or facer of letters, who embezzles letters for the purpose of defrauding the post-office of the postage, is not within 7 Geo. 3, c. 50. Rex v. Sloper, 1 Leach, C. C. 81; 2 East, P. C. 583.

A letter-carrier, taking letters out of the office, intending to deliver them to the owners, but to embezzle the postage, cannot be indicted under stat. 7 Geo. 3, c. 50, s. 2. Rex v. Howatt, 2 East, P. C. 604; 1 Leach, C. C. 83, n.

If a letter-carrier secrete two letters sent by the post on different days, each letter containing half of the same bank-note, it is a capital offence within stat. 7 Geo. 3, c. 50; and he may be indicted "that he, having the said two letters containing the said bank-note, did secrete the said two letters, &c." Rex v. Moore, 2 Leach, C. C. 575; 2 East, P. C. 582.

If in an indictment on the 7 Geo. 3, c. 50, s. 1, the letter embezzled is described as having contained several notes, proof of its having contained any one of them is sufficient. Id.

It is felony, in a servant of the post-office to steal a single bank-note from a letter committed to his care. Rex v. Hassel, 1 Leach, C. C. 1; 2 East, P. C. 598.

The secreting a letter, containing re-issuable country bank-notes, which had been paid in London, but not re-issued, is an offence within the meaning of 7 Geo. 3, c. 50. By seven against four judges. Rex v. Ranson, R. & R. C. C. 232; 2 Leach, C. C. 1090.

A person may be indicted and convicted on stat. 52 Geo. 3, c. 143, s. 3, for stealing a letter, though he has an employment in the post-office. Rex v. Brown, R. & R. C. C. 32, n.

A person employed at a receiving-house of the general post-office to clean boots, &c., and to assist in tying up the letter-bag, is not a servant of the post-office within the stat. 52 Geo. 3, c. 143, s. 2. Rex v. Pearson, 4 C. & P. 572—Littledale and Bosanquet.

A receiving-house is not a post-office within that statute, but it is "a place for the receipt of letters," and the whole shop is to be considered as the "place for the receipt of letters," and not the mere letter-box; and therefore if a person take a letter and put it on the shop counter of the receiving-house, or give it to one of the persons belonging to the shop there, that is a putting the letter into the post. Id.

In an indictment on this statute it was alleged that the letter was "to be delivered at T." The letter was addressed "T. house," which was a house in the parish of T.:—Held sufficient. Id.

To constitute the offence of stealing a letter from a place for the receipt of letters, under sect. 3 of this act, it is essential that the letter should be carried out of the shop which was "the place for the receipt of letters;" and, therefore, if a person take a letter and steal its contents, without taking the letter out of the shop, that is not an offence within this section of this act of parliament. Id.

S. was employed by a post-mistress to carry letters from Dursley to Berkeley, at a weekly salary paid him by the post-mistress, but which was re-paid to her by the post-office:—Held, that S. was a person employed by the post-office, within the stat. 52 Geo. 3, c. 143, s. 2. But a letter sent from Cardiff to Dudley, but which, it was alleged, was mis-sent to Dursley, if stolen by S., would not be a letter which came to his hands "in consequence of his employment." Semble, that the words, "whilst employed," in sect. 2 of the stat. 52 Geo. 3, c. 143, relative to stealing letters, merely mean that the party should be then in the employ of the post-office; and not that the letter, when stolen, was in the party's hands in the course of his duty. Rex v. Salisbury, 5 C. & P. 155—Patteson.

A stamper at the post-office, who purloins a letter for the purpose of delivering it as a mis-sorted letter, with a view of obtaining the postage of it, cannot be capitally convicted of secreting a letter containing bills under 52 Geo. 3, c. 143, s. 2, although the letter may, in fact, contain bills. Rex v. Sharpe, Car. C. L. 147; R. & M. C. C. 125.

Fraudulently obtaining the mail bags by delivery from one in the post-office to the prisoner, is a stealing out of the post-office. Rex v. Pearce, 2 East, P. C. 603.

The horse mail bags being left by the mail rider after he had taken possession of them for a temporary purpose for two minutes, were stolen during his absence:—Held, within the stat. 52 Geo. 3, c. 143, s. 3. Rex v. Robinson, 2 Stark. N. P. C. 485. See Rex v. Thomas—LARCENY, XXXI. div. 1.

IX. SEDUCING SOLDIERS OR SAILORS TO DESERT.

[1 Geo. 1, c. 47; 37 Geo. 3, c. 70, (made perpetual by 57 Geo. 3, c. 7), and the Mutiny Act.]

An indictment on the stat. 37 Geo. 3, c. 70, for seducing soldiers, need not set out the means used for that purpose, nor even that the prisoner knew the person endeavoured to be seduced to be a soldier; and it seems that it may without repugnancy charge the double act, that he endeavoured to incite the soldier to commit mutiny, and also to incite him to commit traitorous practices. Rex v. Fuller, 2 Leach, C. C. 790; 1 East, P. C. 92.

A sailor, in a sick hospital, where he had been for thirty days, and therefore not entitled to pay, and only liable for what he then did to a court-martial to the limited extent stated in the 22 Geo. 2, c. 33, s. 4, was held to be a person serving in his majesty's forces by sea, within 37 Geo. 3, c. 70, so as to make the seducing him an offence within that act. Rex v. Tierney, R. & R. C. C. 74.

On an indictment against an apprentice for enlisting himself as a soldier, the indentures must be proved by the subscribing witnesses. Rex v. Jones, 1 Leach, C. C. 174; 2 East, P. C. 822.

X. OFFENCES RELATING TO PRISONERS OF WAR.

Indictment lies against a clerk to an agent for French prisoners of war, for taking bribes to procure an exchange out of term. Rex v. Bask, 1 East, 183.

As to supplying prisoners of war with bad food, see Rex v. Trevor, post, OMITTING TO GIVE SUFFICIENT FOOD, XXVII.

XI. OFFENCES RELATING TO STORES.

One became possessed, on the death of his husband, of canvass stores, which had been purchased by him in his lifetime, at a public sale, and had been many years made up into household furniture, but no evidence was given of any certificate of such sale being lawful, as required by stat. 9 & 10 Will. 3, c. 41, or of any excuse allowed by the act; yet the possession being, by act of law, without fraud:—Held, not within the penalty of the statute. Anon. 2 East, P. C. 765.

A person convicted of concealing naval stores, or of having them unlawfully in his custody, may receive the corporal punishment directed by the stat. 17 Geo. 2, c. 40, s. 10, although he is ready and offers to pay the penalty of 200*l.* inflicted by the 9 & 10 Will. 3, c. 41. Rex v. Bland, 2 Leach C. C. 595; 2 East, P. C. 760.

The fraudulently charging, by a purser, of stores which were never issued, and the making of false entries in the ship's books to cover such charges, are an offence punishable "according to the laws and customs in such cases used at sea," amounting under the 22 Geo. 2, c. 33, s. 3, to "a crime not capital, committed by persons in the fleet not before mentioned in this act, and for which no punishment is thereby directed to be inflicted." Mann v. Owen, 4 M. & R. 449; 9 B. & C. 595.

XII. PERSONATION OF SEAMEN, &c., AND OFFENCES RELATING TO THE SEA SERVICE.

[See the statutes referred to in 2 Russ. C. & M. 436 et seq., 480.]

Under stat. 31 Geo. 2, c. 10, the personating must be of some existing person entitled, or who prima facie might be entitled, to receive the wages: therefore, where it did not appear that there was any such seaman on board a certain ship as the character assumed:—Held, that the indictment could not be supported. Rex v. Brown, 2 East, P. C. 1007.

Where the prisoner personated one S. Cuff, who was dead, and whose prize-money had been paid to his mother:—Held, that it did not vary the prisoner's guilt; and that he might be convicted on the 54 Geo. 3, c. 93, s. 89. Rex v. Cramp, R. & R. C. C. 327.

The prisoner applied at the Greenwich Hospital for prize-money in the name of J. B.; J. B. was dead, and was supposed to be so at the hospital, and the prisoner did not obtain the money. On an indictment for personating, &c.:—Held, that the stat. 54 Geo. 3, c. 93, s. 89, applied, although the seaman was dead. Rex v. Martin, R. & R. C. C. 324.

To constitute the offence of personating the name of a seaman under stat. 57 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 4, the person entitled, or really supposed to be entitled, to prize-money, must be personated; personating a man who never had any connexion with the ship is not an offence within the act. Rex v. Tannet, R. & R. C. C. 351.

Where there never was such a person belonging to the ship as the person described in the indictment as the person personated, the prisoner cannot be convicted, although there was a person belonging to the ship of nearly the same name, whom the prisoner meant to personate. Id.

All persons aiding and abetting the personating a seaman entitled to allowance money are principals, and the offence is not confined to the person only who personates the seaman. Rex v. Potts, R. & R. C. C. 353.

On stat. 31 Geo. 2, c. 10, s. 24, for taking a false oath to obtain administration to a seaman's effects in order to receive his wages, it is necessary to prove directly and positively that it was he prisoner who took the oath. Rex v. Brady, Leach, C. C. 327.

XIII. PERSONATING STOCKHOLDERS.

[1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 7.]

Obtaining and indorsing a dividend warrant at the bank in the name of a stockholder is "personating a proprietor, and thereby endeavouring to receive the dividend," although no attempt whatever is made to receive the money at the pay-office. Rex v. Parr, 1 Leach, C. C. 434; East, P. C. 1005.

XIV. HOMICIDE.

1. Murder.

[Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 3; 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 75, s. 16.]

Accidental homicide may be murder, if it happens in the prosecution of any illegal act; as in carrying away furniture to avoid a distress for rent. Rex v. Hodgson, 1 Leach, C. C. 6: S. C. 44. Rex v. Hubson, 1 East, P. C. 258.

In a case of death by stabbing, if the jury are of opinion that the wound was inflicted by the prisoner while smarting under a provocation, so recent and so strong that the prisoner may be considered as not being at the moment the master of his own understanding, the offence will be manslaughter; but if there had been after the provocation sufficient time for the blood to cool, for reason to resume its seat before the mortal wound was given, the offence will amount to murder; and if the prisoner display thought, contrivance, and design in the mode of possessing himself of the weapon, and in again replacing it immediately after the blow was struck, such exercise of contrivance and design denotes rather the presence of judgment and reason than of violent and ungovernable passion. Rex v. Hayward, 6 C. & P. 157—Tindal.

A person cannot be indicted for murder in procuring another to be executed by falsely charging him with a crime of which he was innocent. Rex v. Macdaniel, 1 Leach, C. C. 44; 1 East, P. C. 333.

To justify a conviction on an indictment charging a woman with the wilful murder of a child of which she was delivered, and which was born alive, the jury must be satisfied affirmatively that the whole body was brought alive into the world; and it is not sufficient that the child had breathed in the progress of the birth. Rex v. Poulton, 5 C. & P. 329—Littledale.

Where the indictment in such a case states the child to have been born a bastard, the proof that it was so lies on the prosecutor; but evidence that the prisoner told a person that she had only mentioned her being with child to the father of it, who had lately got married, was held to be sufficient proof of the allegation. Id.

If a child has breathed before it is born, this is not sufficiently life to make the killing of the child murder. There must be an independent circulation in the child, or the child cannot be considered as alive for this purpose. Rex v. Enoch, 5 C. & P. 539—Parke.

An unskilful practitioner of midwifery wounded the head of a child before the child was perfectly born. The child was afterwards born alive, but subsequently died of this injury:—Held, manslaughter, although the child was in ventre sa mere at the time when the wound was given. Rex v. Senior, M. C. C. 344; Lew. C. C. 183, n.

He who kills another upon his desire or command is, in the judgment of the law, as much a murderer as if he had done it merely of his own head. Rex v. Sawyer, 1 Russ. C. & M. 424. And see Rex v. Dyson, R. & R. C. C. 523; post, p. 738.

Forcing a person to do an act which is likely to produce his death, and which does produce it, is murder. Rex v. Evans, 1 Russ. C. & M. 426.

And threats may constitute such force. Id.

It is murder to cause the death of an infant of tender years, unable to provide food for and take care of itself, by not providing sufficient food and nourishment, whether such infant be child, apprentice, or servant, whom the party is obliged by duty or contract to provide for. Rex v. Squires, 1 Russ. C. & M. 426.

If a master by premeditated negligence or harsh usage cause the death of his apprentice, it is murder. Rex v. Self, 1 Leach, C. C. 137; 1 East, P. C. 226.

Quære, whether, if a mother-in-law, on perceiving a fault committed by her daughter-in-law in some work she was doing, throw a child's stool at her and kill her, and then conceal her death and hide the body, it is murder or manslaughter? Rex v. Hazel, 1 Leach, C. C. 368.

If a man encourages another to murder himself, and is present abetting him while he does so, such person is guilty of murder as principal. Rex v. Dyson, R. & R. C. C. 523.

If two encourage each other to murder themselves together, and one does so, but the other fails in the attempt upon himself, he is a principal in the murder of the other. Id.

But if it be uncertain whether the deceased really killed himself, or whether he came to his death by accident before the moment when he meant to destroy himself, it will not be murder in either. Id.

Even blows previously received will not extenuate homicide upon deliberate malice and revenge: especially where it is to be collected from the circumstance that the provocation was sought for the purpose of colouring the revenge. Rex v. Mason, 1 East, P. C. 239.

If a woman takes poison with intent to procure a miscarriage, and dies of it, she is guilty of self-murder, whether she was quick with child or not; and a person who furnished her with the poison for that purpose, will, if absent when she took it, be an accessory before the fact only; and as he could not have been tried as such before 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 9, he is not triable for a substantive felony under that act. Rex v. Russell, M. C. C. 356.

An accessory before the fact to the crime of self-murder was not triable at common law, because the principal could not be tried; and is not now triable under 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 9, for that section is not to be taken to make accessories triable, except in cases in which they might have been tried before. Id.

As an assault, though illegal, will not reduce the crime of the party killing the person assaulting him to manslaughter, when the revenge is disproportionate and barbarous, much less will such personal restraint and coercion as one man may lawfully use towards another form any ground of extenuation. Rex v. Willoughby, 1 Russ. C. & M. 437; 1 East, P. C. 288. And see Rex v. Steadman, 1 East, P. C. 234; Rex v. Nailor, 1 East, P. C. 277; Rex v. Mitton, 1 East, P. C. 411.

If gamekeepers attempt to apprehend a gang of night poachers, and one of the gamekeepers be shot by one of the poachers, this will be murder in all the poachers, unless it can be proved that either of them separated himself from the rest, so as to show that he did not join in the act. Rex v. Edmeads, 3 C. & P. 390—Vaughan.

Where gamekeepers had secured two poachers, and they, having surrendered, called to a third, who came up and killed one of the gamekeepers, this is murder in all, though the two struck no blow, and though the gamekeepers had not announced in what capacity they had apprehended them. Rex v. Whithorne, 3 C. & P. 294—Vaughan.

Under 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, s. 2, a gamekeeper, &c., may apprehend poachers, though there are three or more, and found armed, for though s. 2 only authorizes apprehending for what are offences under s. 1, and where there are three or more armed, they are punishable under s. 9; yet what is punishable under s. 9 is nevertheless an offence under s. 1, though the circumstances of aggravation make it liable to a greater punishment; and if the gamekeeper, &c., be killed in the attempt to apprehend, the offender will be guilty of murder, though the gamekeeper had previously struck the offender or any of his party, if he struck in self-defence only, and to diminish the violence illegally used against him, and not individually to punish. Rex v. William Bell, M. C. C. R. 330.

If a gamekeeper attempting lawfully to apprehend a poacher be met with violence, and in opposition to such violence, and in self-defence, strike the poacher, and then is killed by the poacher, it will be murder. Rex v. James Bell, M. C. C. 333.

A gamekeeper or other person, lawfully authorized under 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, s. 2, may apprehend persons found offending under that act, without calling on them to surrender, if the circumstances be such as to constitute notice of his purpose. Rex v. Payne, M. C. C. R. 378.

If the servant of the owner of property find a party actually committing an offence against sect. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, (the Larceny Act), and apprehend him under sect. 63 of that act, and, while taking the party to a magistrate, such party kill him, this will be murder; but if the servant either did not see him in the actual commission of the offence, or be taking him to any other place than before a magistrate, it will not be murder. Rex v. Curran, 3 C. & P. 397—Vaughan.

In order to render the killing of an officer of justice, whether he be authorized in right of his office or by warrant, amount to murder upon his interference in an affray, it is necessary that he should have given some notification of his being an officer, and of the intent with which he interfered. Rex v. Gordon, 1 East, P. C. 315, 332.

But a small matter will amount to due notification. Id.

Killing an officer will amount to murder though he had no warrant, and was not present when any felony was committed, but takes the party upon a charge only; and though such charge does not in terms specify all the particulars necessary to constitute the felony. Rex v. Ford, 1 Russ. C. & M. 504; R. & R. C. C. 329.

Killing an officer who attempts to arrest a man will be murder, though the officer had no warrant, and though the man has done nothing by which he was liable to be arrested, if the officer has a charge against him for felony, and the man knows the individual to be an officer, though the officer do not notify to him that he has such charge. Rex v. Woolmer, M. C. C. R. 334.

And the nine judges (four contra) held that a watchman could legally arrest a prisoner without saying that he had a charge of robbery against him, though the prisoner had, in fact, one nothing to warrant the arrest, and that if death ensued it would be murder. Id.

And it will be no excuse for killing an officer that he was proceeding to handcuff the party who was in his possession upon a charge of felony. Id.

An attachment issued and signed by the county clerk in his own cause is legal process, and if the officer be resisted and killed in the execution of, such homicide will be murder. Rex v. Baker, Leach, C. C. 112; 1 East, P. C. 323.

Quære, whether a woman who in a transport of passion kills a peace-officer, who is about to take the man she cohabits with to prison under warrant which turns out to be illegal, is guilty of murder or manslaughter? Rex v. Adey, 1 Leach, C. C. 206; 1 East, P. C. 329.

If a ship's sentinel shoot a man because he persists in approaching the ship when he has been ordered not to do so, it will be murder unless such an act was necessary for the ship's safety. Rex v. Thomas, 1 Russ. C. & M. 510.

Seemingly, that where guns are fired by one vessel at another vessel, and those on board her generally, those guns are to be considered as shot at each individual on board her. Rex v. Bailey, 1 R. & C. C. 1.

If a person be impressed who is not a proper subject of impressment; or if the impressment be made without any legal warrant, it is lawful for a party to make resistance, and if the death of any of the parties concerned ensue, it is murder. Rex v. Dixon, 1 East, P. C. 313; S. P. Rex v. Keby, 1 East, P. C. 312.

If A. stands with an offensive weapon in the doorway of a room, wrongfully to prevent J. S. from leaving it and others from entering, and C., who has a right in the room, struggles with him to get his weapon from him, upon which D., a friend of A., stabs C., it will be murder in D. if C. dies. Rex v. Longden, R. & R. C. C. 228; Russ. C. & M. 439.

The case of Rex v. Edwards, 1 Russ. C. & M. 510, relates to petty treason, which is no longer an offence. See 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 2.

2. Manslaughter.

Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 9.]—By this statute, the statutes of stabbing, 1 Jac. 1, c. 8, and 3 Geo. 4, c. 31, are wholly, and the stat. 33 Hen. 1, c. 12, partially, repealed.

See L. C. J. Tindal's Charge, 5 C. & P. 261, n. The case of Rex v. Jennings, R. & R. C. C. R. 334, relates to the effects of the benefit of clergy in cases of manslaughter. The benefit of clergy is abolished by the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 3, c. 28, s. 6.

Where one, having had his pocket picked, seized the offender, and, being encouraged by a concourse of people, threw him into an adjoining pond by way of avenging the theft by ducking him, but without any apparent intention of taking away his life, and the pickpocket was drowned:—Held, it only amounted to manslaughter. Rex v. Fray, 1 East, P. C. 236. And see Rex v. Hazel, 1 East, P. C. 236.

Attempting illegally to arrest a man is sufficient to reduce killing the person making the attempt to manslaughter, though the arrest was not actually made, and though the prisoner had armed himself with a deadly weapon to resist such attempt, if the prisoner was in such a situation that he could not have escaped from the arrest; and it is not necessary that he should have given warning to the person attempting to arrest him before he struck the blow. Rex v. Thompson, 1 R. & M. C. C. 80. And see Rex v. Gillow, 1 R. & M. C. C. 85.

If a constable take a man without warrant upon a charge which gives him no authority to do so, and the prisoner runs away and is pursued by J. S., who was with the constable all the time, and charged by him to assist, and the man kill J. S. to prevent his retaking him, it will not be murder, but manslaughter only: because, if the original arrest was illegal, the recaption would have been so likewise. Rex v. Curran, R. & M. C. C. R. 132.

Where a common soldier stabbed a serjeant in the same regiment who had arrested him for some alleged misdemeanour:—Held, that as the articles of war were not produced, by which the arrest might have been justified, it was only manslaughter, as no authority appeared for the arrest. Rex v. Whithers, 1 East, P. C. 295, 360.

If, after an interchange of blows on equal terms, one of the parties, on a sudden and without any such intention at the commencement of the affray, snatches up a deadly weapon and kills the other party with it, such killing will only amount to manslaughter. Rex v. Anderson, 1 Russ. C. & M. 447—Bayley.

But if a party, under colour of fighting upon equal terms, uses from the beginning of the contest a deadly weapon without the knowledge of the other party, whom he kills with such weapon; or if at the beginning of the contest he prepares a deadly weapon, so as to have the power of using it in some part of the contest, and accordingly does so and kills the other party; the killing in both these cases will be murder. Rex v. Whiteley, Lew. C. C. 173.

In a case where there had been mutual blows, and then, upon one of the parties being pushed down on the ground, the other stamped upon his stomach and belly with great force, and thereby killed him, it was considered only to be manslaughter. Rex v. Ayes, 1 Russ. C. & M. 496; R. & R. C. C. 166. But in the case of Rex v. Thorpe, Lew. C. C., Bayley, J., intimated that death caused by up-and-down fighting would be murder.

If two persons quarrel, and begin to fight on equal terms, where one, finding himself not equal to his adversary, runs away, and, being pursued, draws his knife, and, when overtaken by his adversary, stabs him; if death ensue, this would be only manslaughter; and, therefore, for such stabbing, the party cannot be convicted capitally under Lord Ellenborough's Act; but if, before the conflict began, the party had drawn his knife in cool blood, in case death had ensued, the offence would have been murder. Rex v. Kessel, 1 C. & P. 437—Park.

A person set to watch a yard or garden is not justified in shooting any one who comes into it in the night, even if he should see the party go into his master's hen-roost; but if, from the conduct of the party, he has fair grounds for believing his own life in actual and immediate danger, he is justified in shooting him. Rex v. Scully, 1 C. & P. 319—Garrow.

If a person is driving a cart at an unusually rapid pace, and drives over another, and kills him, he is guilty of manslaughter, though he called to the deceased to get out of the way, and he might have done so, if he had not been in a state of intoxication. Rex v. Walker, 1 C. & P. 320—Garrow.

Two private watchmen, seeing the prisoner and another person with two carts laden with apples, went up to them, intending, as soon as they could get assistance, to secure them; one of the watchmen walked beside the prisoner, and the other watchman beside the other person, at some distance from the prisoner. The other person wounded the watchman who was near him:—Held, that the prisoner could not be convicted of this wounding, unless the jury should be satisfied that the prisoner and the other person had not only gone out with a common purpose of stealing apples, but also had the common purpose of resisting, with extreme violence, any person who might attempt to apprehend them. Rex v. Collison, 4 C. & P. 568—Garrow.

A warrant leaving a blank for the christian name of the person to be apprehended, and giving no reason for omitting it, but describing him only as the son of J. S. L., (it appeared that J. S. L. had four sons all living in his house), and stating the charge to be for assaulting A. B., without particularizing the time, place, or any other circumstances of the assault, is too general and unspecific. A resistance to an arrest thereon, and killing the person attempting to execute it, will not be murder. Rex v. Hood, M. C. C. R. 281.

The judges held that if the christian name was omitted in the warrant, it should have assigned some reason for the omission, and have given some distinguishing particulars of the party to be apprehended. Id.

A. was fighting with his brother; and, to prevent this, B. laid hold of A., and held him down upon a locker on board the barge in which they were, but struck no blow. A. stabbed B.:—Held, that if B. did nothing more than was sufficient to prevent A. from beating his brother, and had died of this stab, the offence of A. would have been murder; but that if B. did more than was necessary to prevent the beating of A.'s brother, it would have been manslaughter only. Rex v. Bourne, 5 C. & P. 120—Gaselee and Parke.

The killing of a person in an affray, by another who was in a violent heat and passion at the time, will not amount to the crime of murder, but manslaughter. Rex v. Renkin, R. & R. C. C. 43.

If, on a sudden quarrel between two parties of keelmen and soldiers, a blow intended for an individual of one party would, if death ensued, have amounted only to manslaughter; it will be only manslaughter though by accident it kill another. Rex v. Brown, 1 Leach, C. C. 148; 1 East, P. C. 231, 245, 274.

If, on any sudden quarrel, blows pass without any intention to kill or injure any one materially, and in the course of the scuffle, after the parties are heated by the contest, one kill the other with a deadly weapon, it is only manslaughter. Rex v. Snow, 1 Leach, C. C. 151; 1 East, 244. And see Rex v. Taylor, 5 Burr. 2793.

It is not every slight provocation, even by a blow which will, when the party receiving it strikes with a deadly weapon and death ensues, reduce the crime from murder to manslaughter. Rex v. Lynch, 5 C. & P. 324.

Where the prisoner, who was a butcher, had employed the deceased, a shepherd boy, to tend some sheep which were penned, and he had negligently suffered some of them to escape through the hurdles; and the prisoner, upon seeing it, ran towards the boy, and, taking up a stake which was lying on the ground, threw it at him, and inflicted an injury of which he died:—Held, that under the circumstances it was a question for the jury whether it was murder or manslaughter; they found the latter. Rex v. Wiggs, 1 Leach, C. C. 379.

Where a father beat his son for theft so severely with a rope that he died:—Held, only manslaughter. Anon. 1 East, P. C. 261.

A party causing the death of a child by giving it spirituous liquors in a quantity quite unfit for its tender age, is guilty of manslaughter. Rex v. Martin, 3 C. & P. 211—Vaughan.

It was held to be no excuse for killing a man who was out at night dressed in white as a ghost, for the purpose of frightening the neighbourhood, that he could not otherwise be taken. Rex v. Smith, 1 Russ. C. & M. 452.

All persons who even by their presence encourage a fight, from which death ensues to one of the combatants, although they neither say nor do anything, are guilty of manslaughter. But if the death be caused, not by blows given in the fight itself, but by other parties breaking the ring and striking the deceased with bludgeons, the persons who merely encouraged the fight by their presence are not answerable. Rex v. Murphy, 6 C. & P. 103—Littledale and Bolland.

If a person bona fide and honestly exercising his best skill to cure a patient, perform an operation which causes the patient's death, he is not guilty of manslaughter; and it makes no difference whether such person be a regular surgeon or not, nor whether he has had a regular medical education or not. Rex v. Van Butchell, 3 C. & P. 629—Hullock and Littledale.

A person in the habit of acting as a man-midwife tore away part of the prolapsed uterus of one of his patients, supposing it to be a part of the placenta, by means of which the patient died:—Held, that this person was not indictable for manslaughter, unless he was guilty of criminal misconduct, arising either from the grossest ignorance or the most criminal inattention. Rex v. Williamson, 3 C. & P. 635—Ellenborough.

A person acting as a medical man, whether licensed or unlicensed, is not criminally responsible for the death of a patient, occasioned by his treatment, unless his conduct is characterized either by gross ignorance of his art, or gross inattention to his patient's safety. On an indictment for manslaughter, where the death is occasioned by the application of a lotion to the skin, evidence may be given of the effect of the lotion when applied to other patients. Rex v. St. John Long, 4 C. & P. 398—Park and Garrow.

Where a person, undertaking the cure of a disease, (whether he has received a medical education or not), is guilty of gross negligence in attending his patient after he has applied a remedy, or of gross rashness in the application of it, and death ensues in consequence of either, he is liable to be convicted of manslaughter. Rex v. St. John Long, 4 C. & P. 423—Bayley, Bolland, and Bosanquet.

Any person, whether a licensed medical practitioner or not, who deals with the life or health of any of his Majesty's subjects, is bound to have competent skill; and is bound to treat his or her patients with care, attention, and assiduity; and if a patient dies for want of either, the person is guilty of manslaughter. Rex v. Spiller, 5 C. & P. 333—Bolland and Bosanquet. See Rex v. Simpson, Lew. C. C. 172—Bayley. Rex v. Ferguson, Lew. C. C. 181—Tindal.

An allegation in an indictment, charging that the death of a person was caused by a plaister made and applied by the prisoner, is sufficiently proved by showing that three plaisters were applied, and that two of them were applied by the prisoner, and the third made from materials furnished by the prisoner. Id.

3. Indictment.

If the name of the party killed be not known, may be said to be a certain person to the jurors unknown. Rex v. Clark, 1 Russ. C. & M. 466; 1 R. & C. C. 358.

A bastard must not be described by his mother's name, till he has gained that name by reputation. Id.

Where a deceased illegitimate child had not been baptized, but the mother had on two occasions called it Mary Anne, a witness stating that a putative father had said he was a Baptist:—Held that it was rightly described as a female child, whose name was unknown. Rex v. Smith, C. & P. 151—Fifteen Judges.

An indictment for murder must set forth particularly the manner of the death, and the means by which it was effected, and an omission in this respect is not aided by a general conclusion that the defendant so murdered, &c. Rex v. Sharwin, East, P. C. 341, 421.

And therefore, if a person be indicted for one species of killing, as by poisoning, he cannot be convicted by evidence of a totally different species of death, as by shooting. Id.

But if the means of death proved agree in substance with that charged, it is sufficient. Id.

If the death be occasioned by any weapon, the name and description of that weapon ought to be stated; yet if it appear that the party was killed by a different weapon, the difference is immaterial if they produce the same sort of mischief. Rex v. Sharwin, 1 East, P. C. 341, 421.

So, if a death be laid to be by one sort of poisoning, and it turn out to be by another; but some sort or other must be alleged in the indictment, which ought to be as near the truth as possible. Id.

In a case where the death proceeded from suffocation, by the swelling up of the passage of the throat, and such swelling proceeded from wounds occasioned by forcing things into the throat:—Held, that the statement might be that the things were forced into the throat, and the deceased thereby suffocated, and that it was not necessary to mention the immediate cause of suffocation; namely, the swelling of the throat. Rex v. Tye, 1 Russ. C. & M. 470; R. & R. C. C. 345.

An indictment for murder, which states the death to be by striking and beating the deceased with a piece of brick, is not supported by proof that the prisoner knocked him down with his fist, and that the death was caused by the deceased striking his head by falling on a piece of brick, in consequence of the blow. Rex v. Kelly, Car. Cr. Law, 75; R. & M. C. C. 113; Lew. C. C. 193; Rex v. Wrigley, Lew. C. C. 127.

So, an indictment charging the death to be by the prisoner striking and beating the deceased upon the head, is not supported by proof that he knocked him down by a blow upon the head, and that he was killed by a mortal wound received by falling on the ground. Rex v. Thompson, Car. Cr. Law, 75; R. & M. C. C. 139; Lew. C. C. 194.

Where three persons had been convicted upon an indictment for murder, by striking upon the head with stones, it is not a ground of motion in arrest of judgment, that no number of stones is charged in the indictment; nor is the statement that the stones were "held by the prisoners in their right hands" sufficient ground for such a motion, as being too general and indefinite: and it seems that a sentence to a certain extent, ungrammatically constructed in that part of such an indictment, which stated the manner of the killing, is not a sufficient objection on which to arrest the judgment, if, from the whole tenor of the charge, the statement be sufficiently clear to furnish an intelligible description of the manner of committing the offence. Rex v. Dale, 13 Price, 172; 9 Moore, 19; 1 R. & M. C. C. 5.

An inquisition for murder, charging that the prisoner upon a new-born female child did make an assault, and the said new-born child, with "both her hands, in a certain piece of flannel, of no value, then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of her malice aforethought, did wrap up and fold, by means of which wrapping up and folding the said new-born female child in the piece of flannel aforesaid, she, the said new-born female child, was then and there suffocated and smothered, of which said suffocation, &c.," she instantly died, is good, although the inquisition does not go on to allege that the flannel was folded over the child's mouth, or inclosed the head, or the like. Rex v. Huggins, 3 C. & P. 414—Vaughan.

The indictment must state that the act by which death ensued was done of malice aforethought. Rex v. Nicholson, 1 East, P. C. 346.

Nor is it necessary to describe bruises. Rex v. Turner, Lew. C. C. 177—Parke.

An indictment for murder, which states wounds as contributing to the death, need not state their length, depth, or breadth. Rex v. Morley, 1 R. & M. C. C. 97; Lew. C. C. 189.

An indictment for murder must state that the prisoner gave the deceased a mortal wound. Rex v. Lad, 1 Leach, C. C. 96.

It is no objection to a coroner's inquisition for murder, that the offence is stated to have been committed on the 26th day June, omitting the word "of." Rex v. Huggins, 3 C. & P. 414—Vaughan.

Rex v. Edwards, 1 Russ. C. & M. 482, relates to petit treason, which is no longer a distinct offence. See 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 2.

A. was charged with suffocating B. by placing both her hands about the neck of B.:—Held, that A. might be convicted on this indictment, if B. was suffocated in any manner, either by A. or by any other person in her presence, she being privy to the commission of the offence. The phrase "about the neck," in an indictment for murder, is good, and is not open to the same objection as "about the breast." Rex v. Culkin, 5 C. & P. 121—Park, Parke, and Bolland.

A. was indicted for the manslaughter of B. by a blow of a hammer. No proof was given of the striking of any blow, only of a scuffle between the parties. The appearance of the injury was consistent with the supposition, either of a blow with a hammer, or of a push against the lock or key of a door:—Held, that if it was occasioned by a blow with a hammer, or any other hard substance held in the hand, it was sufficient to support an indictment; but otherwise, if it was the result of a push against the door. Rex v. Martin, 5 C. & P. 128—Park and Parke.

Indictment on stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 58. The first count stated that A., with a certain pistol, feloniously, wilfully, maliciously, and unlawfully, did shoot at D., with intent feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, to kill and murder him; and that B. and C. were aiding and abetting A. Another count stated that an unknown person feloniously, wilfully, maliciously, and unlawfully, did shoot at D., with intent feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, to kill and murder him; and that A., B., and C., were aiding and abetting the said unknown person felony aforesaid, in manner and form aforesaid, to do and commit; and were then and there knowing of and privy to the committing of the said felony; without alleging that they were feloniously present, aiding, &c. The jury acquitted B. and C., and found A. guilty generally; but afterwards added that he was not the person who fired the pistol:—Held, that A. was well convicted on this indictment. Rex v. Twile, 2 Marsh. 466; 3 Price, 145.

An indictment for manslaughter, charging that the prisoner "did compel and force" A. B. and C. D., who were working at a certain windlass, to leave the said windlass, and by such compulsion and force, &c., the deceased was killed, is not supported by evidence that the prisoner was working the windlass with A. B. and C. D., and that, by his going away, they were not strong enough to work it, in consequence of which they let it go; as the words "compel and force" must be taken to mean active force. Rex v. Lloyd, 1 C. & P. 301—Garrow.

4. Evidence and Witnesses.

On an indictment for the murder of a constable, in the execution of his office, it is not necessary to produce his appointment: it is sufficient if it be proved that he was known to act as constable. Rex v. Gordon, 1 Leach, C. C. 5, 15; 1 East, P. C. 312.

In order to negative malice in a case where death has ensued from a blow not likely to have produced death or mortal disease, all circumstances of aggravation, (though not sufficient to warrant giving a deadly blow) will be material. Rex v. Freeman, 1 Russ. C. & M. 439.

On the trial of an indictment for murder, an examination of the party wounded, taken by a magistrate at an infirmary, to which the deceased had been taken for the purpose of receiving medical assistance, but in the absence of the prisoner, could not be read in evidence as an examination, pursuant to the statute, 2 & 3 Phil. & Mary, c. 10. Rex v. Dingler, 2 Leach, C. C. 561.

But quære, if the party was in apprehension of approaching dissolution, whether it may be read as a dying declaration in extremis? Id.

On the trial of an indictment for murder, the death of the person charged to have been killed may be collected from the circumstances, if incapable of being proved by other evidence. Rex v. Hindmarsh, 2 Leach, C. C. 569.

As where the deceased was thrown overboard into the sea, and never heard of afterwards. Id.

Rex v. Norwood, 1 East, P. C. 337, relates to petit treason, which is no longer a distinct offence. See 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 2.

An indictment for manslaughter charged, that the deceased was on horseback, and that the prisoner struck him with a stick, and that the deceased, from a well-grounded apprehension of a further attack, which would have endangered his life, spurred his horse, which became frightened and threw him, giving him a mortal fracture. The evidence was, that the prisoner struck the deceased with a small stick, and that the latter rode away, and the former rode after him; whereupon the deceased spurred his horse, which then winced, and threw him, whereby he was killed:—Held, that this evidence sufficiently supported the indictment. Rex v. Hickman, 5 C. & P. 151—Park.

A. was indicted for the murder of H. It was opened, that A., having malice against P., had hired H. to murder him, and that H. did so; but that H. being detected, A. had murdered H. to prevent a discovery of his (A.'s) guilt respecting the murder of P. Evidence was given of expressions of malice used by A. towards P.; and it was held that the prosecutor might also give evidence to show that H. was in fact the person by whom P. had been murdered. Rex v. Clewes, 4 C. & P. 221—Littledale.

5. Declarations in Articulo Mortis.

Nothing can be evidence in a declaration in articulo mortis which would not be so if the party were examined. Rex v. Sellers, Car. C. L. 233.

Therefore, anything the murdered person says as to facts is admissible; but not what he says as matter of opinion. Id.

To render the declaration of the deceased admissible on a trial for manslaughter, it must have been made by him under an impression of almost immediate dissolution; and it is not enough that the deceased should have thought that he should ultimately never recover. Rex v. Van Butchell, 3 C. & P. 629—Hullock and Littledale.

Before the declaration of a deceased person is received as a declaration in articulo mortis, the judge will hear all that the deceased said respecting the danger in which he considered himself to be; and it will, upon this, be for the judge to decide whether the deceased then had that impression on his mind which would render his declaration admissible. Id.

Whether or not dying declarations were made under an apprehension of danger, must be determined by the judge, in order to receive or reject the evidence; and not by the jury after the evidence is received. Rex v. John, 1 East, P. C. 57; S. P. Rex v. Wellbourn, 1 East, P. C. 358; S. P. Rex v. Hucks, 1 Stark. 523.

The apprehension of danger may appear either from the express declaration of the deceased at the time, or may be inferred from the state of the wound, or illness, or other circumstances indicating the same. Id.

If the deceased thought she should recover at the time the declarations were made, they ought not to be received in evidence. Rex v. Wellbourn, 1 East, P. C. 358; 1 Leach, C. C. 503, n.

In murder, the declarations of the deceased, after the mortal wound is given, may be received in evidence, though the party did not express any apprehension of approaching dissolution; but the examination of such a person taken by a magistrate extrajudicially cannot be received. Rex v. Woodcock, 1 Leach, C. C. 500; 1 East, P. C. 354; S. P. Rex v. Dingler, 1 Leach, C. C. 504, n.; 1 East, P. C. 357.

The declarations of a deceased person are evidence, though at the time they were made the deceased thought herself better, where she had uniformly said, both before and after they were made, and up to the time of her death, that she knew she should die. Rex v. Tinkler, 1 East, P. C. 354.

Where the deceased asked his surgeon if the wound was necessarily mortal, and on being told that recovery was just possible, and that there had been an instance where a person had recovered after such a wound, he said, "I am satisfied," and after this he made a statement:—Held, that it was not admissible as a declaration in articulo mortis, as it did not appear that the deceased thought himself at the point of death, for, being told that the wound was not necessarily mortal, he might still have a hope of recovery. Rex v. Christie, Car. C. L. 232—Abbott and Park.

The declarations of the deceased made on the day he was wounded, and when he believed he should not recover:—Held admissible, though he did not die until eleven days afterwards; and though the surgeon did not think his case hopeless, and continued to tell him so until the day of his death. Rex v. Mosley, 1 R. & M. C. C. 97; Lew. C. C. 79.

A person who was told by the surgeon that she would never recover, said that she "hoped he would do what he could for her, for the sake of her family." He again told her that there was no chance of her recovery:—Held, that this showed such a degree of hope in her mind, as to render a statement she then made inadmissible as a declaration in articulo mortis. Rex v. Crockett, 4 C. & P. 544—Bosanquet.

Any hope of recovery, however slight, existing in the mind of a deceased at the time of his making a declaration, will render it inadmissible as a declaration in articulo mortis; but where a deceased knew that he must die, and the magistrate, previous to his making the declaration, desired him, as a dying man, to tell the truth, and he replied that he would:—Held, that his declaration was admissible. Rex v. Hayward, 6 C. & P. 157—Tindal.

A declaration in articulo mortis, made by a child only four years old, is not admissible in evidence on the trial of an indictment for the murder of such child; because a child of such tender years could not have had that idea of a future state which is necessary to make such a declaration admissible. Rex v. Pike, 3 C. & P. 598—Park.

Parol evidence of dying declarations which have been reduced into writing cannot be received. Rex v. Trowter, 1 East, P. C. 356.

It is a general rule in criminal cases, that dying declarations are admissible only where the death of the deceased is the subject of the charge, and the circumstances of the death are the subject of the dying declaration; therefore, where a defendant had been convicted of perjury, and obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, pending which he shot the prosecutor, and on showing cause against the rule for a new trial, an affidavit of the dying declarations of the prosecutor, relating to the transaction out of which the prosecution for perjury arose, was produced:—Held, that it was inadmissible. Rex v. Mead, 4 D. & R. 120; 2 B. & C. 605.

In trials for robbery, the dying declarations of the party robbed have been held to be inadmissible. Anon. Phil. Evid. 225; S. P. Rex v. Lloyd, 4 C. & P. 233.

Declarations in articulo mortis are not admissible on an indictment for administering medicine to procure abortion. Rex v. Hutchinson, 2 B. & C. 608, n.

Nor on an indictment for perjury. Rex v. Mead, 4 D. & R. 120.

The declaration of a convict at the moment of execution, cannot be given in evidence as the declaration of a dying man, for being attainted, his testimony could not have been received on oath. Rex v. Drummond, 1 Leach, C. C. 337; 1 East, P. C. 353, n.

6. Trial, Judgment, and Execution in Murder.

9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 4, 5, & 6; 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 75, s. 16.]—By this statute the stat. 25 Geo. 3, c. 37, is repealed, so far as relates to this subject.

If a stroke be given at sea, and the party dies in Ireland, quære where shall the murder be tried? Rex v. Farrell, 1 W. Black. 456. This is now regulated by the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 8.

The case of Rex v. Radbourne. 1 Leach, C. C. 459; 1 East, P. C. 339, 356, relates to petty treason, which is not now a distinct offence.

A special verdict in murder must find that the fact was committed in the same county as that in which it was laid in the indictment, or no judgment can be given thereon. Rex v. Hazel, 1 Leach, C. C. 368.

But if not, it may be amended by the minutes taken at the trial. Id.

A trial for murder began on a Tuesday afternoon, and was concluded an hour after midnight; sentence was passed immediately after conviction, and the prisoner ordered for execution on the Friday. Rex v. Edwards, Car. Cr. Law, 88—Bayley.

A judge may, if he see fit, order a person convicted of murder to be executed immediately, or at any time within 48 hours after the conviction, as he may do in any other capital felony. Rex v. Wyatt, R. & R. C. C. 230; 1 Russ. C. & M. 479.

And it was not essential to award the day of execution in the sentence, the stat. 25 Geo. 2, c. 37, being in that respect only directory; and if a wrong day was awarded, it would not vitiate the sentence, if the mistake be discovered and set right during the assizes. By six judges against three. Id.

The bodies of executed murderers were by the common law at the king's disposal, and therefore the court could not direct them to be hung in chains; but by 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 75, s. 16, the judge may, after sentence pronounced, order the body to be hung in chains. Rex v. Hall, 1 Leach, C. C. 21.

Quære, whether on passing sentence of death on a conviction for murder, the award of dissection and anatomizing, in pursuance of 25 Geo. 3, c. 37, was an essential part of the sentence to be pronounced by the judge? Rex v. Fletcher, R. & R. C. C. 58; 1 Russ. C. & M. 479.

The omission of it may be remedied by the judge going again into court after adjournment, from his lodgings, and ordering the prisoner to be again brought up, and then passing the proper judgment, as the sentence may be corrected or altered at any time during the assizes. Id.

7. Murder and Manslaughter abroad.

9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 7.]—By this statute, the stats. 33 H. 8, c. 23, and 43 Geo. 3, c. 113, are wholly repealed.

A manslaughter committed in China by an alien enemy who had been a prisoner of war, and was then acting as a mariner on board an English merchant ship, could not be tried here under a commission issued in pursuance of the statute 33 Hen. 8, c. 23, and 43 Geo. 3, c. 113, &c. Rex v. Depardo, 1 Taunt. 26. But see 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 7.

The statute 33 Hen. 8, c. 23, extended to murders committed out of the realm, and within foreign dominions. Rex v. Ealing, Car. Cr. Law, 105; S. P. Rex v. Sawyer, Car. Cr. Law, 105; R. & R. C. C. 174.

A British subject was indictable under the 33 Hen. 8, c. 23, for the murder of another British subject, though the murder was committed within the dominion of a foreign state. Rex v. Sawyer, R. & R. C. C. 294; Russ. C. & M. 465.

If a prisoner of war abroad entered on board an English merchant ship, and whilst in that capacity killed an Englishman in a foreign country, he could not be tried for it here under the 33 Hen. 8, c. 23, and the 43 Geo. 3, c. 113. Rex v. Depardo, R. & R. C. C. 134; 1 Taunt. 26.

An indictment for a common law felony committed abroad, but made triable under the 33 Hen. 8, c. 23, need not conclude contra formam statuti. Rex v. Sawyer, R. & R. C. C. 294; 1 Russ. C. & M. 465.

An indictment on 33 Hen. 8, c. 23, for the murder of one British subject by another in a foreign state, stating that the person murdered was at the time in the king's peace, was sufficient to show that he was a British subject. Rex v. Sawyer, R. & R. C. C. 294; 1 Russ. C. & M. 465.

So, the conclusion in the indictment, that the offence was against the king's peace, showed sufficiently that the prisoner was a British subject. Id.

In an indictment on the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 7, for murder committed by a British subject abroad, it must be averred that the prisoner and the deceased were subjects of his Majesty. To prove the allegation that the prisoner was a subject of his Majesty, his own declaration is evidence to go to the jury, and it will be for them to say, whether they are satisfied that he is in fact a British-born subject. A bill of indictment for this offence ought not to state it to have been committed "at Boulogne, in the kingdom of France, to wit, at the parish of St. Mary-le-Bow, &c.," and it being so stated, the court directed the London venue to be struck out before the bill was found by the grand jury. Rex v. Asham, 4 C. & P. 394—Bayley and Bonquet.

XV. SHOOTING, STABBING, WOUNDING, ADMINISTERING POISON, &c., WITH INTENT TO MURDER, &c.

9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 11 & 12.]—By this statute the stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, (Lord Ellenborough's Act,) and 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 1, the Coventry Act, are wholly repealed; and by the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, the Black Act, 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, is also wholly repealed.

1. Shooting.

[As to the statutes, see supra.]

[See Title, HOMICIDE, ante, p. 737.]

The cases of Rex v. Gastineaux, 1 East, P. C. 412, 1 Leach, C. C. 417; Rex v. Empeon, 1 East, P. C. 412, 1 Leach, C. C. 224; Rex v. Harris, 3 Leach, C. C. 929, 1 East, P. C. Add. xviii.; Rex v. Granger, 1 Leach, C. C. 64, 1 East, P. C. 14, S. P.; Rex v. Wells, 1 East, P. C. 44; Rex v. Davis, 1 Leach, C. C. 493, 1 East, P. C. 414; Rex v. Duroure, 1 Leach, C. C. 351, 1 East, P. C. 415; Rex v. Gibson, 1 Leach, C. C. 859, 2 East, P. C. 508, are cases of shooting under the provisions of the Black Act, 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, which is repealed.

In order to constitute the offence of attempting to discharge loaded fire-arms, within stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, they must have been so loaded as to be capable of doing the mischief intended. Rex v. Carr, R. & R. C. C. 377; 1 Russ. C. & M. 597; Rex v. Whitley, Lew. C. C. 123.

Where on an indictment on 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, for maliciously shooting at a person, it appeared that the instrument was fired so near, and in such a direction, as to be likely to kill or do other grievous bodily harm to such person, and with an intent that it should do so, the case was within that act, although it were loaded with powder and paper only. Rex v. Kitchen, R. & R. C. C. 95; 1 Russ. C. & M. 596.

If a pistol be loaded with gunpowder and balls, but its touch-hole be plugged, so that it cannot by possibility be fired, this is not "loaded arms," within the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, ss. 11, 12. Rex v. Harris, 5 C. & P. 159.—Patteson.

If an indictment for shooting another, with intent to murder, &c., in all the counts aver that the pistol was loaded with powder and a leaden bullet, it must appear that the pistol was loaded with a bullet, or the prisoner will be entitled to an acquittal. Rex v. Hughes, 5 C. & P. 156. Mark, Parke, and Bolland.

Evidence of a wound having been made by the contents of a pistol, although no ball was found, and of its having made a loud report, with reference to its size, is sufficient to go to a jury of its having been loaded with ball. Rex v. Veston, 1 Leach, C. C. 247.

In an indictment on the 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, the intent laid in several counts of the indictment as to murder, to disable, or to do some grievous bodily harm; the intent found by the jury was prevent being apprehended:—Held, that the conviction was bad, for that, if the intent was to prevent the lawful apprehension of the prisoner, it should be laid so. Rex v. Duffin, R. & R. C. C. 365. 1 Russ. C. & M. 598.

If a person shoots at another who is endeavouring to apprehend him, he might have been convicted on the usual indictment for shooting with intent to murder, under the statute 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, although shooting at a person with intent to prevent his apprehending the person shooting is a distinct and capital offence. Rex v. Davis, 1 C. & P. 306—Garrow.

On an indictment on 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, the three first counts alleged, in the usual form, that J. S. did shoot at A. B., and went on to state that M. and N. were present, aiding and abetting; the second and third counts varying from the first only in the intent; the three last counts, varying in like manner as to the intent, stated that an unknown person, &c., did shoot at A. B., &c., and that J. S. and M. and N. were present, aiding and abetting the said unknown person the felony aforesaid, in manner and form aforesaid, to do and commit, and were then and there knowing and privy to the committing of the said felony, against the statute, &c.; but omitted to charge them with being feloniously present, &c.:—Held, that J. S. might be convicted on this indictment, although the jury negatived his being the person who fired the pistol at A. B. Rex v. Towle, R. & R. C. C. 314. 2 Marsh. 466.

Where an indictment on 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, contained counts both for actually shooting at, &c., and being present, aiding and abetting, &c., and there was evidence to go to the jury upon both modes in which the offence is charged, the prosecutor was not obliged to elect whether he will proceed on the counts for actually shooting, &c., or aiding and abetting, &c., but he may proceed on the whole indictment. Id.

Upon an indictment for maliciously shooting, it appeared that there were two shootings; but it being questionable whether the first shooting was by accident or design:—Held, that proof of the prisoner having intentionally shot at the person the second time, was evidence to show that the first was wilful. Rex v. Voke, R. & R. C. C. 531.

An indictment for maliciously shooting, containing several counts, need not refer distinctly to the shootings in the respective counts as by "last aforesaid," if such count concludes with the words "with intent in so doing, that is to say, in so shooting at the said T. P. as aforesaid," such words being grammatically and legally referable to the last antecedent matter. Id.

2. Stabbing, Cutting, and Wounding.

[As to the statute, see supra.]

[See tit. HOMICIDE, ante, p. 737.]

The cases of Rex v. Mills, 1 Leach, C. C. 259, 1 East, P. C. 397; Rex v. Carroll, 1 Leach, C. C. 55, 1 East, P. C. 394; Rex v. Tinkner, 1 Leach, C. C. 187, 1 East, P. C. 398; Rex v. Lee, 1 Leach, C. C. 51; Rex v. Mackey, 1 East, P. C. 399, are all decided on the Coventry Act, 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 1, which is repealed.

On an indictment for maliciously cutting, malice against the individual cut is not essential; general malice is sufficient. Rex v. Hunt, 1 R. & M. C. C. 93.

An intent to do grievous bodily harm is sufficient, though the cut is slight, and not in a vital part. Id.

The question is not what the wound is, but what wound was intended. Id.

By the case of Rex v. Akenhead, Holt, 469, cor. Bayley, it seemed that the words "other grievous bodily harm" apply only to wounds in a vital part, inflicted under circumstances which, in case of death, would have amounted to murder.

But in the case of Rex v. Griffith, 1 C. & P. 298, cor. Park, it was held, that, to constitute the offence of cutting with intent to murder, it is not necessary that the wound should be near a vital part, or of such a nature as to be likely to cause death.

The offence of "maliciously cutting, with intent to resist lawful apprehension," is not committed where the party has no notice of the purpose of the officers. Rex v. Ricketts, 3 Camp. 68—Lawrence.

On an indictment for stabbing, with intent to resist lawful apprehension, it must be shown that the officer was either present or came armed with a warrant. Rex v. Dyson, 1 Stark. 246—Le Blanc.

On an indictment for cutting, it appeared that the prisoner was seen in the night entering an outhouse with intent to commit a felony, by a person who went and informed the prosecutor of it. The latter in about a quarter of an hour went in search of the prisoner, to apprehend him. The prisoner had left the prosecutor's premises, and was found in a neighbouring garden, crouched down under a tree, with a drawn sword in his hand. The prosecutor apprehended the prisoner, who cut and wounded him. It was objected that the prosecutor had no right to apprehend the prisoner, and that, if death had ensued, it would have been manslaughter only. The prisoner was convicted, and the judges held the conviction right. The 4th and 6th sections of the Vagrant Act, 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, which relate to the apprehending of persons armed with any offensive weapon, with intent to commit any felonious act, were cited in the argument. Rex v. Howarth, Carr. Supp. 231. S. C. R. & M. C. C. 207.

A gamekeeper, accompanied by his assistant, met four poachers on the highway, one carrying a gun, another a gun-barrel, and the other two, bludgeons. There had been previously two shots fired. The gamekeeper said to his assistant, "mind the gun," and the assistant laid hold of it, and then the gamekeeper called to another person; upon this three of the poachers knocked him down and stunned him, and when he came to himself he saw all of them near, and one said as they passed him, "d—n them, we have done them both," and one turned back and cut him on the left leg, and all then ran away. It was objected, first, that the wounding of the leg was the act of one alone, and there was no evidence to show which of them it was;—secondly, that, from the expressions used, it was evident that both were thought to be dead, and there could be no intent to murder, &c.;—thirdly, that the prisoner being on the highway, the gamekeeper and his assistant had no right to interfere with them. The prisoners were convicted, and the judges held the conviction right. Rex v. Warner, 5 C. & P. 525; M. C. C. 380.

On an indictment for cutting and maiming with intent to do grievous bodily harm, a prisoner may be convicted whose main and principal intent was to prevent his lawful apprehension, if, in order to effect the latter intent, he also intended to murder, or do grievous bodily harm, &c. Rex v. Gillow, 1 R. & M. C. C. 85; Lex. C. 57. See Rex v. Thompson, 1 R. & M. C. C. 92. Rex v. Duffin, and Rex v. Davis, ante, p. 745.

An indictment under 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, for cutting and maiming with intent to murder and disable, was not supported by evidence of a cutting with intent to produce a temporary disability in a person lawfully apprehending the prisoner until he could effect his own escape. Rex v. Rogers, 1 R. & M. C. C. 29. 1 Russ. C. & M. 599.

Cutting a female child's private parts, so as to enlarge them for the time, may be considered as doing her grievous bodily harm, within the act 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, and done with that intent, although the hymen is not injured, the incision is not deep, and the wound eventually is not dangerous. Rex v. Cox, R. & R. C. C. 362. 1 Russ. C. & M. 598.

A blow with a square iron bar, which inflicted a contused or lacerated wound, has been held not to be a cutting within Lord Ellenborough's act, 43 Geo. 3, c. 58. Rex v. Adams, 1 Russ. C. & M. 597—Lawrence.

And where a similar wound was given on the head by a blow with the metal scabbard of a sword, which was sheathed at the time, it was held not to be a cutting. Rex v. Whitfield, 1 Russ. C. & M. 597—Bayley.

But if a cutting be inflicted, the case is within the statute, though the instrument (an iron cross) is not intended for cutting, nor ordinarily used to cut, but generally used to force doors, &c., and though the intention was not to cut, but to inflict some other mischief. Rex v. Heywood, 1 Russ. C. & M. 598. R. & R. C. C. 18.

And a blow with the handle of a window is not a cutting, though it make an incision. Ann 1 Russ. C. & M. 597—Dallas.

An indictment on 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, for cutting J. S., was not supported by evidence that the wounds were inflicted by stabbing, and not by cutting. Rex v. M'Dermot, R. & R. C. C. 35; 1 Russ. C. & M. 597.

As the statute used the words stab or cut as the alternative, so as to distinguish them, the distinction should be attended to. Id.

A striking over the face and head with the sharp or claw part of a hammer was a sufficient cutting within the statute. Rex v. Ashman, 1 R. & R. C. C. 104. 1 Russ. C. & M. 597.

Breaking a person's collar bone, and bruising him, is not a wounding within the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 12. Rex v. Wood, 4 C. & P. 381—Fifteen Judges.

Inflicting a wound on a person by throwing a sledge-hammer at him, is a wounding within the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 11, 12, although the sledge-hammer, from being blunt, was not an instrument calculated to inflict a wound. Rex v. Withers, 4 C. & P. 446; M. C. C. R. 294—Vaughan and Alderson.

If a person strike another with a bludgeon, and break the skin and draw blood, this is a sufficient wounding to be within the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 11 & 12. Under that stat. it is not at all material what the instrument is with which the party is wounded. Rex v. Payne, 4 C. & P. 558—Patteson.

If a person, for the purpose of accomplishing a robbery, wound, by means of kicking, the skin of the party whom he is endeavouring to rob, he is punishable under the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 12, if the jury find that his intent was either to disable or do grievous bodily harm. Rex v. Shadolt, 5 C. & P. 504—Denman and Vaughan.

In an indictment for wounding with intent to murder, &c., the instrument or means by which the wound was inflicted need not be stated, and, if stated, do not confine the prosecutor to prove the wound by such means. Rex v. Briggs, M. C. C. R. 318; Lew. C. C. 61.

A wound from a kick with a shoe will be within the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 12. Id.

On an indictment which charges the wound to have been inflicted by striking with a stick, and kicking with the feet, proof that the wound was caused either by a blow from a stick, or a kick, will be sufficient, though it be uncertain by which of the two it was. Id.

A. was indicted for stabbing B., there being another indictment against him for stabbing C.:—Held, that on the trial of the indictment for stabbing B., both C. and the surgeon may be asked as to what kind of wound C. received, with a view to identifying the instrument used. Rex v. Furry, 6 C. & P.—Gaselee and Parke.

The case of Rex v. Amarro, R. & R. C. C. 286, related to this offence if committed at sea, but that now regulated by the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 32.

3. Administering Poison.

[As to the stat. see ante, p. 745.]

It is not an administering of poison unless the poison be taken into the stomach. Therefore where a prisoner was indicted for administering poison to E. D., with intent to murder her; and the proof was that he gave her a bit of a cake which contained arsenic and sulphate of copper, which she put into her mouth, but which she spit out again without having swallowed any part of it—Held, by the twelve judges, that it was not sufficient to convict. Rex v. Cadman, Car. Cr. W., 237.

If a servant put poison into a coffee-pot which contained coffee, and, when her mistress comes down to breakfast, the servant tells the mistress that she has put the coffee-pot there for her (the mistress's) breakfast, and the mistress drink the poisoned coffee—This is a "causing the poison to be taken," within the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 11, and the servant is therefore indictable under that act. Semble, that this is also an "administering," within that act; as, to constitute an administering, it is not necessary that the poison should be delivered by the hand of the party. Rex v. Harley, 4 C. & P. 369—Park.

If A. sends poison intending it for B., and with intent to kill B., and it comes into the possession of C., who takes it, A. may be indicted on the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 11, for "administering" it to C. Rex v. Celia Davis, 6 C. & P.—Gurney.

A prisoner was indicted for mixing sponge with milk, and administering it with intent to poison. The indictment was held insufficient, because it did not aver that the sponge was of a deleterious or poisonous nature. Rex v. Elizabeth Powles, 4 C. & P. 571.

XVI. ADMINISTERING TO PROCURE ABORTION.

9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 13.]—By this stat. the stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, (Lord Ellenborough's Act), is wholly repealed.

The expression "quick with child," in the statute 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, s. 1, meant when the woman has felt the child move within her. Goldsmith's case, 3 Camp. 76—Lawrence.

Upon an indictment on that statute charging that the prisoner administered a mixture for the purpose of procuring abortion, it was unnecessary to prove that the mixture was noxious or destructive, or even that the woman was actually with child. Id.

The interpretation to be put upon the words "quick with child," in stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, s. 1, must be feeling the child alive and quick within, at whatever time the fœtus may have a separate existence. Rex v. Phillips, 1 Russ. C. & M. 554; 3 Camp. 77.

On an indictment for administering a drug to a woman to procure abortion, she not being quick with child; if it appear that the woman was not with child at all, the prisoner must be acquitted, although it appear that the prisoner thought that she was with child, and gave her the drug with an intent to destroy such child. Rex v. Scudder, 3 C. & P. 605; Id. R. & M. C. C. 216.

XVII. CONCEALMENT OF BIRTH OF DEAD CHILDREN.

9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 14.]—By the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, the stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, (Lord Ellenborough's Act), is wholly repealed.

The cases of Rex v. Prat, 1 East, P. C. 229, and Rex v. Jeffard, Id., relate to offences under the stat. 21 Jac. 1, c. 27, which was repealed by 43 Geo. 3, c. 58.

The act of throwing a bastard child down the privy, by its mother, was evidence of an endeavour to conceal the birth, within the 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, a. 3. Rex v. Cornwall, R. & R. C. C. 337; 1 Russ. C. & M. 477.

A woman may be found guilty of concealment, although from appearances it is probable that the child was still-born, and although the birth was probably known to an accomplice. Rex v. Cornwall, 1 Russ. C. & M. 477; 1 R. & R. C. C. 336.

If a mother, who had communicated her pregnancy to persons not implicated with her in the concealment, or, to the knowledge of any other persons, make preparations for her confinement, it would have been an answer to a charge of concealment, under statute 43 Geo. 3, c. 58; Rex v. Southern, 1 Russ. C. & M. 476—Bayley.

A woman was delivered of a child, whose dead body was found at her father's house in a bed among the feathers. There was no evidence to show who placed it there, but it being proved that the woman had sent for a surgeon at the time of her confinement, and had prepared child's clothes, the learned judge directed an acquittal on the charge of endeavouring to conceal the birth. Rex v. Higley, 4 C. & P. 366—Park.

Whether a prisoner be charged with the murder of her bastard child by the coroner's inquisition, or by a bill of indictment returned by the grand jury, she might have been found guilty under 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, of endeavouring to conceal the birth. Rex v. Maynard, 1 Russ. C. & M. 477; R. & M. C. C. 240: S. P. Rex v. Cole, 2 Leach, C. C. 1955: S. P. 3 Camp. 371: S. P. Rex v. Dobson, Lew. C. C. 43.

The stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, only empowered a jury to find the prisoner guilty of the concealment of the birth of a bastard child when she was tried upon an indictment for the murder of such child, and did not make the concealment an offence for which an indictment could be preferred. Rex v. Parkinson, 1 Russ. C. & M. 475—Bayley. But that is now altered by the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 14.

On all inquests held on the body of dead bastard children, it is the bounden duty of the coroner to tell the jury, in all cases where there is not the most clear and decisive proof that the child was born alive, that they ought never to think of returning a verdict of wilful murder against the mother. Rex v. Bayley, Car. Cr. Law, 243—Vaughan.

XVIII. SODOMY.

9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 15, 18.]—By this stat. the stats. 25 Hen. 8, c. 6, and 5 Eliz. c. 17, are wholly repealed.

To constitute the offence of sodomy, the act must be in that part where sodomy is usually committed; for, the act in a child's mouth does not constitute the offence. Rex v. Jacobs, 1 Russ. C. & M. 568; R. & R. C. C. 331.

A person forced open a child's mouth, and put in his private parts, and proceeded to a completion of his lust:—Held, that this did not constitute the offence of sodomy. Id.

An unnatural connexion with an animal of the fowl kind was not sodomy, before the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 15, a fowl not coming under the term "beast," [the words of the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 15, are "any animal"]: and it was agreed clearly not to be sodomy when the fowl was so small that its private parts would not admit those of a man, and were torn in the attempt. Rex v. Mulready, 1 Russ. C. & M. 568.

Proof of injectio seminis, as well as penetration, were essential in an indictment for sodomy. Rex v. Parker, 1 Russ. C. & M. 560: S. P. Rex v. Duffin, 1 East, P. C. 437.

And, therefore, proof of penetration, but emission out of the body, was not sufficient. Id.

But since the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 18, the crime is complete, if the jury be satisfied that penetration took place. Rex v. Reekpear, R. C. C. R. 342. See the case of Rex v. Cox, post, p. 749.

XIX. RAPE AND ABUSE OF CHILDREN

9 Geo. 4, c. 31 ss. 16, 17, 18.]—By this stat. the stats. 3 Edw. 1, c. 13; 13 Edw. 1, c. 34; 6 Ric. 2, c. 6; and 18 Eliz. c. 7, are repealed.

A boy under the age of fourteen cannot be convicted of an assault with intent to commit a rape. Rex v. Eldershaw, 3 C. & P. 396—Vaugh.

Having carnal knowledge of a married woman under circumstances which induced her to suppose it is her husband:—Held, by eight against four judges, not to amount to a rape. Rex v. Jackson, R. & R. C. C. 487.

A prisoner may be convicted of rape upon the unsupported evidence of an infant under years of discretion, if the jury are satisfied that the evidence is such as to leave no reasonable doubt of the prisoner's guilt. Anon. 1 Russ. C. & M. 566—Rooke.

In cases of carnal knowledge of children, the infant witness, though under seven years of age, if apprized of the nature of an oath, must be sworn. Rex v. Brasier, 1 Leach, C. C. 199; 1 East, P. C. 443. And see Rex v. Darnell, 1 East, P. C. 442.

In an indictment for a rape, the deposition of the girl taken before the committing magistrate, and signed by him, may, after her death, be read in evidence at the trial of the prisoner, although it was not signed by her, and she was under twelve years of age, provided she was sworn, and appeared competent to take an oath; and all the facts necessary to complete the crime may be collected from her testimony so given in evidence. Rex v. Flemming, 2 Leach, C. C. 354; 1 East, P. C. 440.

Proof of injectio seminis, as well as penetration, was essential in an indictment for rape before the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31. Rex v. Hill, 1 East, P. C. 439: S. P. Rex v. Cove, 1 East, P. C. 438; but see Rex v. Sheridan, 1 East, P. C. 438: Rex v. Harmwood, 1 East, P. C. 440.

Before the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 18, if anything occurred to create an alarm to a party while he was perpetrating the offence of a rape, it was left to the jury to say whether he left the body re infecta, because of the alarm, or whether he left it because his purpose was accomplished. Rex v. Burrows, R. & R. C. C. 519; 1 Russ. C. & M. 561.

Since the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, the offence of rape is made out by proof of penetration only; and in such case a prisoner must be found guilty, although there was no emission, and although he did not withdraw himself merely because he was satisfied. Rex v. Jennings, 4 C. & P. 249—Hullock. Lew. C. C. 93.

The 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 18, does not make emission unnecessary to complete the offence of rape. Rex v. Russell, 2 M. & M. 122—Taunt. See Rex v. Coulthart, Lew. C. C. 94.

But in the case of Rex v. Cox, 5 P. & C. 297: M. C. C. 337, which is subsequent to all these cases, the jury found that there had been penetration, but that there had not been any emission from the prisoner; and the fifteen judges held that the prisoner was rightly convicted of rape. See Rex v. Reekpear, ante, p. 748.

Any the slightest penetration is sufficient, even though it do not break the hymen. Rex v. Russen, 1 East, P. C. 438.

If, in a case of rape, there has not been sufficient penetration to rupture the hymen, the offence is not complete. Rex v. Gammon, 5 C. & P. 321.

Upon an indictment for a rape, the woman is not compellable to answer whether she has not had connection with other men, or with a particular person named. Rex v. Hodgson, R. & R. C. 211—Gurney.

Nor is evidence of her having had such connection admissible. Id.

A general conviction of a prisoner charged both as principal in the first degree, and as an aider and abettor of other men in rape, is valid in the count charging him as principal. Rex v. Folkes, M. C. C. R. 354.

On such an indictment, evidence may be given of several rapes on the same woman, at the same time, by the prisoner and other men, each assisting the other in turn, without putting the prosecutor to elect on which count to proceed. Id.

But the character of the prosecutrix as to general chastity may be impeached by general evidence. Rex v. Clarke, 2 Stark. 241—Holroyd.

A defendant will be acquitted in an indictment for an assault with intent to ravish, if the evidence amounts to proof of an actual rape. Rex v. Harmwood, 1 Russ. C. & M. 560, 564. 1 East, C. 411.

Under an indictment for an assault to commit rape, the defendant may impeach the prosecutrix's character for chastity by general, but not by particular evidence. Rex v. Clarke, 2 Stark. 241—Holroyd.

The fact of her making complaint of the outrage, and the state in which she was at the time making the complaint, are evidence. Id.

On a trial for rape, the prisoner may give evidence that the woman bore a notoriously bad character, for want of chastity and common decency, or that she had before been criminally connected with the prisoner; but he cannot show that she had a criminal connection with other persons. Hodgson's case, 1 Phil. Evid. 165.

Nor is the woman obliged to answer as to the latter fact. Id.

On the trial of an indictment for a rape, it was held, that the prisoner's counsel might ask the prosecutrix the following questions, with a view to contradict her: "Were you not, on ———, (since the time of the alleged offence), walking in the High street at Oxford to look out for men?" "Were you not, on ———, (since the time of the alleged offence), walking in the High street with a woman reported to be a common prostitute?"—Held, also, that evidence might be adduced by the prisoner, to show the general light character of the prosecutrix, and that general evidence might be given of her being a street-walker; but semble, that evidence of specific acts of criminality by her would not be admissible. Rex v. Barker, 3 C. & P. 589—Park and Parke.

A prisoner was charged with carnally abusing a child under ten years old, on Feb. 5, 1832. To prove the child under ten years old, an examined copy of the register of her baptism on Feb. 9, 1822, was put in, and the child's father stated, that he left his house about a week before the 9th of Feb., 1822, his wife not being then confined; and that on his return on that day he found this child, and was told by his wife's mother that it had been born on the day before:—Held, that this was not sufficient evidence of the child's being under ten years old. Rex v. Wedge, 5 C. & P. 298—Littledale and Taunton.

The first count of an indictment charged an assault with intent to ravish; the second, a common assault. The record went on to state, that the jury found the defendant guilty of the misdemeanour and offence in the said indictment specified, in manner and form as by the said indictment is alleged against him, and the judgment was, imprisonment and hard labour:—Held, on writ of error, that the word misdemeanour was nomen collectivum, and that the finding of the jury was in effect, that the defendant was guilty of the whole matter charged, and that the judgment was therefore warranted by the verdict. Rex v. Powell, 2 B. & Adol. 75.

XX. ABDUCTION.

9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 19 & 20.]—By this stat., 3 Edw. 1, c. 13; 3 Hen. 7, c. 2; 39 Eliz. c. 9; 4 & 5 Ph. & M. c. 8; and 1 Geo. 4, c. 115, are repealed; and also so much of the stat. 6 Ric. 2, s. 1, c. 6, as relates to this subject.

On a prosecution on the stat. 3 Hen. 7, c. 2, it was essential that there should be a continuance of the force into the county where the defilement took place. Rex v. Gordon, 1 Russ. C. & M. 572.

In cases of this kind the wife is a witness as well for as against her husband, although she has cohabited with him from the day of the marriage. Rex v. Perry, 1 Russ. C. & M. 577.

Where several defendants were indicted for a misdemeanour in conspiring to carry away a young lady, under the age of sixteen, from the custody appointed by her father, and to cause her to marry one of the defendants; and, in another, for conspiring to take her away by force, being an heiress, and to marry her to one of the defendants:—Held, that assuming the young lady to be at the time the lawful wife of one of the defendants, she was a competent witness for the prosecution, although there was no evidence to support that part of the indictment which charged force. Rex v. Wakefield, 2 Russ. C. & M. 605.

Although the woman is taken away as well as married with her own consent; yet, if this be effected by means of any fraud practised upon her to induce her to go with the offender, and to consent to marry him:—Semble, that he is equally within the act, for her mind being in a state of delusion by means of the fraud, she cannot be considered as a free agent to give any consent. Rex v. Wakefield, Dea. C. L. 4.

XXI. BIGAMY.

9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 22; 3 Geo. 4, c. 75; 4 Geo. 4, c. 76.]—By the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, the stats. 1 Jac. 1, c. 11, and 35 Geo. 3, c. 67, are repealed; and so much of 4 Ed. 1, s. 3, and 18 Ed. 3, s. 3, and 1 Ed. 6, c. 12, as relates to this subject.

The age of consent within the provision of s. 3, 1 Jac. 1, c. 11, was fourteen years in a man, and twelve in a woman. Rex v. Gordon, R. & R. C. C. 48.

No divorce of an ecclesiastical court was within the third exception of the stat. 1 Jac. 1, c. 1, unless it is a divorce of a court within the limits to which the statute extends. Rex v. Lolly, 1 Russ. C. & M. 190; R. & R. C. C. 237.

Therefore, it was no defence to prove a divorce a vinculo matrimonii before the second marriage, if such divorce were out of England, unless upon a ground which by the law of England would warrant such a divorce. Id.

Where a prisoner, having been apprehended for larceny, is detained in the same county for bigamy, the detainer is such an apprehension as would warrant the indicting him in that county, under 1 Jac. 1, c. 11. Rex v. Gordon, R. & R. C. C. 48.

On the trial of an indictment for bigamy in the county where the party was apprehended, and not where the second marriage was had, the apprehension in the county, if a warrant has issued, must be proved by the production of the warrant, in order to give the court jurisdiction. Rex v. Forsyth, 2 Leach, C. C. 826.

A sentence of jactitation is not conclusive evidence against an indictment of bigamy; for its validity may be impeached as having been obtained by fraud. Duchess of Kingston's case, 1 Leach, C. C. 146; 1 East, P. C. 468.

By Irish stat. 9 Geo. 2, c. 11, "the marriage of a minor without consent is void: but if no suit be commenced within one year after the marriage, it shall be good." Therefore where it appeared in a case of bigamy that the first marriage was celebrated in Ireland by license, when the prisoner was a minor, without his father's consent:—Held, that it was no defence, as more than a year had elapsed from the time of the marriage. Rex v. Jacobs, Car. Cr. Law, 255; R. & M. C. C. 140; S. P. Rex v. Riordan. Id.

Semble, that assuming a fictitious name upon the second marriage will not prevent the offence from being complete. Rex v. Allison, 1 Russ. C. & M. 201, 207; R. & R. C. C. 109.

And if the marriages are proved by a person present at them, it is not necessary to prove the registration, or license, or banns. Id.

And if the prisoner have written down the names for the publication of the banns, he is precluded from saying that the woman was not known by the name he delivered in, and that she was not rightly described by that name in the indictment. Rex v. Edwards, 1 Russ. C. & M. 201; R. & R. C. C. 283.

On an indictment against a man for bigamy, it appeared that, for the purpose of concealment, the second wife was married by a name by which she had never been known:—Held, that this was no answer to the charge, although, if the first marriage had taken place under such circumstances, that would have been thereby rendered void. Rex v. Penson, 5 C. & P. 412—Gurney.

On an indictment for bigamy, if the first marriage was by banns, it is no objection that the parties did not reside in the parish where the banns were published, and the marriage celebrated. Rex v. Hind, R. & R. C. C. 253.

Semble, that an acknowledgment alone by the prisoner of the fact of the first marriage would not be sufficient evidence of that fact. Rex v. Trueman, 1 Russ. C. & M. 207; 1 East, P. C. 470.

But proof of such an acknowledgment, together with evidence of cohabitation, and that the prisoner backed his assertion by producing to the witness a copy of a proceeding in a Scotch court for having improperly contracted the marriage (but which was a nullity), was held to be sufficient evidence of the first marriage. Id.

On a trial for bigamy, the registry of the first marriage stated it to be by license generally, without saying by consent of parents or guardians; the prisoner proved that he was an infant at the time, and that his parents were never known to have been in England:—Held, that this was prima facie evidence that the first marriage was without consent of parents or guardians, and that the jury might have acquitted the prisoner if such evidence was unanswered. Rex v. Jones, R. & R. C. C. 17; 1 Russ. C. & M. 201.

Semble, that on such trial the prisoner ought not to be called on to prove a negative, it being sufficient for the prisoner to prove himself under age at the time of the first marriage, and that it then rested with the prosecutor to show that the marriage was with the consent of parents or guardians. Id. S. P. Rex v. Morton, R. & R. C. 19, n.; 1 Russ. C. & M. 201.

Where, on an indictment for bigamy, the first marriage was proved to have been by license, and that the party was under age at the time of such marriage, but it did not appear that the marriage was with consent of parents or guardians:—Held, that it lies on the part of the prosecutor to prove such consent given. Rex v. Butler, R. & R. C. C. 61; 1 Russ. C. & M. 202.

The marriage of a minor by license without the consent required by the Marriage Act, 4 Geo. 4, c. 75, s. 16, is valid. Rex v. Birmingham, 2 M. & R. 230; 8 B. & C. 29.

The marriage of an infant by license, without the consent of parent or guardians, solemnized in the interval between July 22, 1822, (when 3 Geo. 4, c. 75, received the royal assent, by which s. 11 of 26 Geo. 2, c. 33, is repealed), and Sept. 1, 1822, when 3 Geo. 4, c. 75, began to operate generally, is valid. Rex v. Waully, R. & M. C. C. 163; Lew. C. C. 23.

In the publication of banns in 1817, a woman named Mary Hodgkinson was called White, a surname entered by mistake in the register of her baptism, but which she had never gone by or been entitled to. The false name was given to the officiating clergyman without any intention to mislead; nor did any individual having an interest in the marriage appear to have been deceived:—Held, that the marriage was void. It might have been otherwise, if (without any fraudulent intent) there had been only a partial variation of the name, or the addition or suppression of one Christian name, or the name had been one which the party had ever used or been known by. Rex v. The Inhabitants of Tibshelf, 1 B. & Adol. 190.

A marriage which would have been void by s. 26 Geo. 2, c. 33, and had once been rendered valid by sect. 2 of 3 Geo. 4, c. 75, cannot be subsequently rendered invalid by the marriage of either of the parties, during the life of the other, with a third person. Rex v. Delpike, 2 B. & Ad. 16.

XXII. RIOT AND UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY.

1. Where Capital.

1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 5.]—If, in reading the proclamation from the Riot Act, the magistrate omit to read the words “God save the King,” at the end of it, persons remaining together for an hour after such reading of the proclamation cannot be capitally convicted under sect. 1 of that act. 1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 5, s. 1. Rex v. Child and others, C. & P. 442—Vaughan and Alderson.

If an indictment on the Riot Act, 1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 5, s. 1, for remaining assembled one hour after proclamation, in setting out the proclamation omit the words “of the reign of,” which were contained in the proclamation read by the magistrate—this is a fatal variance. Rex v. Woolcock, 5 C. & P. 516—Patteson.

If the proclamation be read several times, the hour is to be computed from the first reading. Id.

If there be such an assembly that there would have been a riot if the parties had carried their purpose into effect, this is within the statute; and whether there was a cessation or not, is a question for the jury. Id.

An indictment on the Riot Act, 1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 5, s. 1, for remaining assembled one hour after proclamation made, need not charge the original riot to have been in terrorem populi. Rex v. Warren James, 5 C. & P. 153—Patteson.

2. Where a Misdemeanour.

3 Geo. 4, s. 114.]—A justice called upon to suppress a riot, is required by law to do all he knows to be in his power that can reasonably be expected from a man of honesty and of ordinary prudence, firmness, and activity, under the circumstances. Mere honesty of intention is no defence, if he fails in his duty. Rex v. Pinney, 3 B. & Adol. 946.

Nor will it be a defence that he acted upon the best professional advice that could be obtained, on legal and military points, if his conduct has been faulty in point of law. Id.

In suppressing a riot, he is not bound to head the special constables, or to arrange and marshal them; this is the duty of the chief constables. Id.

Magistrates are not criminally answerable for not having called out special constables, and compelled them to act pursuant to the 1 & 2 W. 4, c. 41, unless it be proved that information was laid before them, on oath, of a riot, &c., having occurred or being expected. Id.

A magistrate is not chargeable with neglect of duty for not having called out the posse comitatus in case of a riot, if he has given the king's subjects reasonable and timely warning to come to his assistance. Id.

Applying personally to some of the inhabitants of a city, calling at the houses of others, employing other persons to do the same, sending others to the churchwardens, &c., (on a Sunday,) to be published at the places of worship, requiring the people to meet the magistrates at a stated time and place in aid of the civil power and for the protection of the city, and posting and distributing other notices to the like effect, is reasonable warning, the riot having recently broken out. Id.

A magistrate who calls upon soldiers to attack a mob and suppress a riot is not bound to go with them; it is enough if he gives them his authority. Id.

The general rules of law require of magistrates, at the time of a riot, that they should keep the peace, and restrain the rioters, and pursue and take them; and to enable them to do this, they may call on all the king's subjects to assist them; and all the king's subjects are bound to do so, upon reasonable warning. In point of law, a magistrate would be justified in giving fire-arms to those who thus come to assist him, but it would be imprudent in him to do so. Rex v. Pinney, 5 C. & P. 255. At bar in K. B.

It is no part of the duty of a magistrate to go out and head the constables, neither is it any part of his duty to marshal and arrange them; neither is it any part of his duty to hire men to assist him in putting down a riot; nor to keep a body of men, as a reserve, to act as occasion may require. Neither is he bound to call out the Chelsea pensioners, any more than the rest of the king's subjects; nor is it any part of his duty to give any orders respecting the fire-arms in the gunsmiths' shops. Nor is a magistrate bound to ride with the military; if he gives the military officer orders to act, that is all that is required of him. Id.

Mere good feeling and upright intention in a magistrate will be no defence, if he has been guilty of a neglect of his duty. Nor will the fact of his having acted under the advice of others be any defence for him. The question is, whether he did all that he knew was in his power, and which could be expected from a man of ordinary prudence, firmness, and activity. Id.

On the trial of a magistrate, for neglect of duty, he ought not to be found guilty, unless all the jury are satisfied that he has been guilty of the same act of neglect; and if four jurors think him guilty of one act of neglect, and eight think him guilty of another act of neglect, that is not sufficient. Id.

A magistrate may assemble all the king's subjects to quell a riot, and may call in the soldiers, who are subjects, and may act as such; but this should be done with great caution. At the time of a riot, a magistrate may repel force by force, before the reading of the proclamation from the Riot Act. Rex v. Kennett, 5 C. & P. 282, n.

If, on a riot taking place, a magistrate neither reads the proclamation from the Riot Act, nor restrains nor apprehends the rioters, nor gives any order to fire on them, nor makes any use of a military force under his command, this is prima facie evidence of a criminal neglect of duty in him; and it is no answer to the charge for him to say that he was afraid, unless his fear arose from such danger as would affect a firm man; and if, rather than apprehend the rioters, his sole care was for himself, this is also neglect. Id.

An assembly of great numbers of persons, which, from its general appearance and accompanying circumstances, is calculated to excite terror, alarm, and consternation, is generally criminal and unlawful. Rex v. Hunt, 1 Russ. C. & M. 254—Bayley and Holroyd. See Rex v. Hunt, tit. CONSPIRACY, LXIX., 3.

And all persons who join an assembly of this kind, disregarding its probable effect, and the alarm and consternation that are likely to ensue, and all who give countenance and support to it, are criminal parties. Id.

A riot is not the less a riot, nor is an illegal meeting the less an illegal meeting, because the proclamation from the Riot Act has not been read, the effect of that proclamation being to make the parties guilty of a capital offence if they do not disperse within an hour; but if that proclamation be not read the common-law offence remains, which is a misdemeanour, and all magistrates, constable, and even private individuals are justified in dispersing the offenders, and, if they cannot otherwise succeed in doing so, they may use force. Rex v. Furzey, 6 C. P.—Gaselee and Parke.

Without any proclamation at all, if a meeting is illegal, a party who attends it, knowing it to be so, is guilty of an offence. Id.

A meeting called "to adopt preparatory measures for holding a national convention" is an illegal meeting. Id.

If four are indicted for a riot, and two die before trial, and two be found guilty, judgment shall not be arrested. Rex v. Scott, 3 Burr. 1202; 1 W. Black. 359.

Although a man may arm himself and his friends for the defence of the possession of his house against such as threaten to make an unlawful entry, he cannot lawfully do the same in defence of his close. Rex v. Banger (Bishop), 1 Russ. C. & M. 255—Heath.

A rising to quell a treasonable riot is lawful, and no information is to be granted for petty irregularity in so doing. Rex v. Wigan (Bishop), 1 W. Black. 47.

Semble, that under 33 Hen. 8, c. 12, a riot committed in a court of justice, for the purpose of rescuing a prisoner, in the course of which and in order to accomplish the rescue, an assault was committed, subjects the party to the punishment of amputation awarded by the statute. Rex v. Thanet (Lord), 1 East, P. C. 408.

[By the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, so much of the stat. 33 Hen. 8, c. 12, as relates to the punishment of manslaughter and of malicious striking, by reason whereof blood shall be shed, is repealed.]

Twelve persons were indicted for a riot and assaulting J. W. The indictment did not conclude in terrorem populi. Several of the defendants had been convicted, and, at an evening assize, at which the remaining defendants were tried, there was evidence that they had joined in the riot, but there was no proof of any assault, except the words "po. se," and "guilty," written on the indictment, over the names of the convicted defendants:—Held, that this was no proof of an assault as against the present defendants, and that the present defendants could not be convicted of the riot only, as the indictment did not conclude in terrorem populi. Rex v. Hughes, 1 C. & P. 373—Parke.

If persons be charged with a riot, and cutting down fences, and the indictment do not conclude in terrorem populi, they cannot on that indictment be convicted of a riot, but may be convicted of an unlawful assembly. Rex v. Cox, 4 C. & P. 538—Parke.

If parties assemble together for a purpose which, if executed, would make them rioters, but, having assembled, they do nothing, and separate without carrying their purpose into effect, this is an unlawful assembly. Rex v. Bell, 5 C. & P. 154—Patteson.

XXIII. PRIZE FIGHT.

Persons who are present at a prize fight, and who have gone thither for the purpose of seeing the persons strike each other, are all principals in the breach of the peace, and indictable for an assault, as well as the actual combatants, and it is not at all material, which of the combatants struck the first blow. Rex v. Perkins, 4 C. & P. 537—Patteson.

All persons present countenancing a prize-fight are guilty of an offence. Rex v. Billingham, 2 C. & P. 234—Per Burrough.

Where a prize-fight is expected the magistrates ought to cause the intended combatants to be brought before them, and compel them to enter into securities to keep the peace till the assizes or sessions, and if they refuse to enter into such securities to commit them. Id.

XXIV. ASSAULT AND INDECENT EXPOSURE.

(As to Assault with intent to rob, see post, ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO ROB.)

[9 Geo. 4, c. 31.]

1. Offence.

It is an indictable offence to expose a person to the inclemency of the weather. Rex v. Ridley, 1 Russ. C. & M. 605; 2 Camp. 650, 653—Lawrence.

If one has his idiot brother, who is helpless, as an inmate in his house, and omits to supply him with proper food, warmth, &c., he is not indictable for the omission. Rex v. Smith, 2 C. & P. 449—Burrough.

If one has an idiot brother who is bed-ridden in his house, and keeps him in a dark room without sufficient warmth or clothing, this will not be an assault or an imprisonment, nor will proof of this support an indictment for an assault or an imprisonment. Id.

Making a female patient strip naked, under the pretence that the defendant, a medical man, cannot otherwise judge of her illness, is, if he himself takes off her clothes, an assault. Rex v. Rosinski, 1 R. & M. C. C. 19; 1 Russ. C. & M. 606.

If a schoolmaster take indecent liberties with female scholar, without her consent, though she do not resist, he is liable to be punished as for a common assault. Rex v. Nichol, R. & R. C. C. 30; 1 Russ. C. & M. 606.

If one of two persons, fighting unintentionally strikes a third, he is answerable in an action for an assault, and the absence of intention can only be urged in mitigation of damages. James v. Campbell, 5 C. & P. 372—Bosanquet.

If parish officers cut off the hair of a pauper in the poor-house by force, and against the will of such pauper, this is an assault; and if it be done as matter of degradation, and not with a view to cleanliness, that will be an aggravation, and go to increase the damages. Forde v. Skinner, 4 C. & P. 239—Bayley.

A medical man is not warranted, merely on statements made by the relations of a person supposed to be insane, in sending men to take him into custody and confine him, unless he is satisfied, from those statements, that such a step is necessary to prevent some immediate injury from being done by the individual, either to himself or to other persons; and, if access cannot be had for the purpose of examination, application should be made to the Lord Chancellor, that the party may be taken up under his authority. Anderson v. Burrows, 4 C. & P. 210—Tenterden.

A. was advancing in a threatening attitude, with an intention to strike B., so that his blow would have almost immediately reached B., if he had not been stopped:—Held, that it was an assault in point of law, though, at the particular moment when A. was stopped, he was not near enough for his blow to take effect. Stephens v. Myers, 4 C. & P. 349—Tindal.

An excise officer gave defendant a search warrant to look at, who then refused to deliver it up, and a scuffle ensued: on an indictment for an assault the question left to the jury was, whether the officer had used more force than was necessary to recover possession of the warrant. Rex v. Milton, 1 M. & M. 107: S. C. nom. Rex v. Milton, 3 C. & P. 31—Tenterden.

A constable and his assistants who take a bailiff into custody during an affray to rescue his prisoner, in which the bailiff struck one of the assailants, and the prisoner was rescued, are guilty of an assault and rescue, as the bailiff was authorized by his warrant. Anon. 1 East, P. C. 305—Heath.

If a party be turning towards the wall in the street, at night, for a particular occasion, a watchman is not justified in collaring him to prevent his so doing. Booth v. Hanley, 2 C. & P. 288.

A person may, under particular circumstances, justify laying hands on another in order to serve him with process. Harrison v. Hodgson, 10 B. & C. 445.

One of the marshals of the city of London, whose duty it was, on the day of a public meeting at Guildhall, to see that a passage was kept for the transit to their carriages of the members of the corporation and others, directed a person in the front of a crowd at the entrance to stand back, and, on being told by him that he could not for those behind him, struck him immediately on the face, saying that he would make him:—Held, that in so doing the marshal exceeded his authority, and that he should have confined himself to the use of pressure, and should have waited a short time to afford an opportunity for removing the party in a more peaceable way. Imason v. Cope, 5 C. & P. 193—Tindal.

A police constable is not justified under the stat. 10 Geo. 4, c. 44, s. 7, in laying hold of, pushing along the highway, and ordering to be off, a person found by him conversing in a crowd with another, merely because the person with whom he happens to be conversing is known to be a reputed thief. Stocken v. Carter, 4 C. & P. 477—Gaselee.

A police officer, hearing a noise in a public-house at one o'clock in the night, entered the house, the door being open:—Held, that this was not a trespass. Rex v. Smith, 6 C. & P.—Tindal.

The case of Rex v. Williams, 1 Leach, C. C. 529, and 1 East, P. C. 424, is a decision on stat. 6 Geo. 1, c. 23, (now repealed), respecting assaults to destroy clothes. The case of Rex v. Randall, 1 East, P. C. 423, is a decision on the stat. 9 Anno, c. 15, s. 8, (now repealed), respecting assaults on account of money won at play. [Both those statutes are repealed by the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31.]

2. Indictment.

An indictment for an assault, false imprisonment, and rescue, stated that the judges of the court of record of the town and county, &c., of P., issued their writ, directed to T. B., one of the serjeants at mace to the said town and county, to arrest W., by virtue of which T. B. was proceeding to arrest W., within the jurisdiction of the said court, but that the defendant assaulted T. B. in the due execution of his office, and prevented the arrest:—Held, that such an indictment was bad, it not appearing that T. B. was an officer of the court; and that there could not be judgment after a general verdict on such a count as for a common assault and false imprisonment, because the jury must be taken to have found that the assault and imprisonment were for the cause therein stated, which cause appears to have been that the officer was attempting to make an illegal arrest of another, which being a breach of the peace, the defendant might, for aught that appeared, have lawfully interfered to prevent it. Rex v. Omer, 5 East, 304; 1 Smith, 555.

Where an indictment charged the defendant with an assault and an intent to abuse and carnally know a female child:—Held, that he might be convicted of an assault to abuse her simply, as the averment of such intention is divisible. Rex v. Dawson, 3 Stark. 62—Holroyd.

On an indictment for an assault on A. B. it is sufficient to prove that an assault was committed on a person bearing that name, although two persons bore the same name, viz. A. B. the elder, and A. B. the younger, and the assault had been committed on the latter only. Rex v. Peace, 3 B. & A. 579.

An indictment against two for an assault on two, bad. Anon, Loft, 271. And see Rex v. Burfield, 2 Burr. 983.

An indictment, stating that the defendant, late of W., with force and arms, at the parish aforesaid, did make an assault, &c. is bad, for it is not stated in what place the offence was committed. Rex v. Matthews, Nolan, 202; 2 Leach, C. C. 585.

[This is now regulated by the stat. 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 20.]

On an indictment for an assault the words "against the form of the statute" are surplusage. Rex v. Matthews, 2 Leach, C. C. 585.

3. Summary Conviction.

[9 Geo. 4, c. 31.]

A party was convicted summarily by two justices for an assault. The act appeared to have been done with an intent to commit an unusual offence, or to solicit such offence, but not to have been attended with violence. A certiorari was moved for, on the ground that the offence, if committed, was within the sect. 29 of the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, which prevents justices from convicting where an attempt to commit felony appears. The court refused to interfere, as no excess of jurisdiction appeared on the face of the conviction, and the evidence, of which the magistrates were the judges, did not clearly show an intention to commit felony. Anon. 1 B. & Adol. 382.

Semble, that even if the intent had appeared by the deposition, and the conviction had been consequently illegal, the court would not have interposed by certiorari. Id.

XXV. CHALLENGES TO FIGHT DUELL

An endeavour to provoke another to commit the misdemeanour of sending a challenge to fight is itself a misdemeanour indictable, particularly where such provocation was given by a writing containing libellous matter, and alleged in the prefatory part of the indictment to have been done with the intent to do the party bodily harm, and to break the king's peace; the sending such writing being an act done towards procuring the commission of the misdemeanour meant to be accomplished. Rex v. Philipps, 6 East, 464; 1 Smith, 550.

If one kill another in a deliberate duel, under provocation of charges against his character and conduct, however grievous, it is murder in law and his second, and therefore the bare incitement to fight, though under such provocation, is in itself a very high misdemeanour, though no consequence ensue thereon against the peace. Rex v. Rice, 3 East, 581. See also Rex v. Krum, 1 B. & A. 462.

XXVI. BRAWLING IN CHURCHYARD

Semble, that brawling was not made an offence by stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6, c. 4, but was previously cognizable by the spiritual courts. Ex parte Williams, 6 D. & R. 373; 4 B. & C. 312.

XXVII. OMITTING TO GIVE SUFFICIENT FOOD AND ILL-TREATMENT OF, SERVANTS, PAUPERS OR HELPLESS PERSONS.

An indictment lies against a master for not providing sufficient food and sustenance for a servant, whereby she became sick and emaciated. Rex v. Ridley, 2 Camp. 650—Lawrence.

In an indictment for criminal misconduct towards the poor, a general description of them without setting out their names, seems sufficient. Rex v. Wetherill, Cald. 432. See Ford v. Skinner, ante, p. 753.

An indictment charging the defendant, a female, with ill-treatment of a poor, living separately and apart from her husband, band, with neglecting and refusing to provide necessary meat and drink for her servant, and keeping her without sufficient warmth, whereby she became sick and emaciated, was held insufficient, in not alleging that the servant was of tender years, and under the dominion and control of the defendant. Rex v. Ridley, 2 Camp. 650—Lawrence. See Rex v. Squires, ante, p. 737.

It is an indictable offence, in the nature of a misdemeanour, to refuse or neglect to provide sufficient food or other necessaries for any infant of tender years unable to provide for and take care of itself, (whether such infant be child, apprentice, or servant, whom the party is obliged by duty or contract to provide for,) so as thereby to injure his health. Rex v. Friend, 1 Russ. C. & M. 44; R. & R. C. C. 20—Bayley. And see Rex v. Squires, 1 Russ. C. & M. 16.

An indictment against a master for not providing necessaries for his apprentice ought to state that the apprentice was of tender years, and unable to provide for himself. Id.

Semble, that where the charge is that the prisoner received a child as an apprentice, an indictment, importing that a former master, with the child's consent, bound the child to the prisoner, will be sufficient evidence of the receiving as an apprentice, though such indenture is executed by a stranger as trustee for the former master, and not in the former master's name. Id.

It is an indictable offence in an overseer to neglect to supply medical assistance, when required, to a pauper labouring under dangerous illness, although he was not in the workhouse, nor had, previously to his illness, received or stood in need of parochial relief. Rex v. Warren, Russ. C. & M. 142; R. & R. C. C. 48, n.—Holroyd. And see Hays v. Bryant, 1 H. Black. 255.

But an overseer is not indictable for not relieving a pauper, unless there is an order for his relief; except in case of immediate emergency, when there is not time to get an order—By six edges against five. Rex v. Meredith, R. & R. C. 46. But see, contra, Rex v. Booth, R. & R. C. 47, n. See Rex v. Smith, ante, p. 753.

It is an indictable offence wilfully and maliciously to supply prisoners of war with unwholesome food not fit to be eaten by man. Rex v. Yeeve, 2 East, P. C. 821.

XXVIII. OFFENCES RELATING TO LUNATICS.

Geo. 4, c. 41; 10 Geo. 4, c. 18; 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 107; 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 54.]

The act 9 Geo. 4, c. 41, provided that no person not a parish patient shall be taken into any house for the reception of lunatics, without a certificate of two medical practitioners, containing certain particulars. Sect. 30 enacts, that any person who shall knowingly, and with intent to deceive, sign any such certificate, untrue, setting forth such particulars, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour; and that any physician, surgeon, &c., who shall sign any such certificate, without having visited and personally examined the patient, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour. An indictment charged that the defendant, a surgeon, knowingly, and with intention to deceive, signed a certificate required by the act, without having visited and personally examined the patient, contrary to the statute: the jury negatived the intention to deceive, and found the defendant guilty, subject to the opinion of the court upon the case:—Held, that in the description of the offence the averment of intention was surplusage, and that such unnecessary matter might be rejected, as well in an indictment on a penal statute as at common law. Rex v. Jones, 2 B. & Adol. 611. See Anderson v. Burrows, ante, p. 753.

XXIX. PERSONS MAIMING THEMSELVES.

A party who maims himself, or procures another to do it for him, so that he may be better enabled to beg, or to prevent himself from being pressed for a soldier, is liable to fine or imprisonment at common law. Rex v. Wright, 1 East, P. C. 396.

So is the party by whom it is effected at the other's desire. Id.

XXX. FORCIBLE ENTRY.

[15 R. 2, c. 2; 8 Hen. 6, c. 9; 21 Jac. 1, c. 15.]

In an indictment for a forcible entry upon the possession of a lessee for years, proof of the force and of such possession is sufficient, although the indictment also allege that the premises were his freehold, and such allegation is not proved. Rex v. Lloyd, Cald. 415.

An indictment for a forcible entry, which does not show sufficient actual force, violence, unlawful assembly, riot, or other circumstances, will be quashed even upon motion. Rex v. Bake, 3 Burr. 1731.

An indictment at common law, charging the defendants with having unlawfully and with a strong hand entered the prosecutor's mill, and expelled him from the possession, is good. Rex v. Wilson, 8 T. R. 357.

An averment in an indictment for a forcible entry that the prosecutor was "seised," is sufficient to found an application for a writ of restitution; and it need not be shown by the prosecutor that he still continued to be seised. Rex v. Dillon, 2 Chit. 314.

Indictment will lie for a forcible entry in a close. Rex v. Nicholls, 2 Ld. Ken. 512.

On an indictment for forcible entry and detainer, under the statutes of Ric. 2 and Jac. 1, the party aggrieved is not a competent witness. Rex v. Beavan, 1 R. & M. 242—Littledale.

To constitute a forcible entry, or a forcible detainer, it is not necessary that any one should be assaulted, but only that the entry or detainer should be with such numbers of persons, and show of force, as is calculated to deter the rightful owner from sending the persons away, and resuming his own possession. Milner v. Maclean, 2 C. & P. 17—Abbott.

Upon the trial of an indictment for a forcible entry or detainer, under the 8 Hen. 6, c. 9, or 21 Jac. 1, c. 15, the party dispossessed is not a competent witness for the prosecution. Rex v. Williams, 4 M. & R. 471; 9 B. & C. 549.

Where such an indictment is brought before K. B. by certiorari, that court is bound, upon conviction, to award restitution. Id.

On the trial of such an indictment, the defendant cannot impeach the title of the party dispossessed. Id.

For the mode of proceeding to obtain restitution on application to a judge, after indictment found, but before trial, see Rex v. Hake, 4 M. & R. 483—Burrough.

An indictment for a forcible entry cannot be supported by evidence of a mere trespass; but there must be proof of such force, or at least such show of force, as is calculated to prevent any resistance. Rex v. Smyth, 5 C. & P. 201.

A wife separated from her husband took a house, of which the husband, with the landlord's consent, obtained possession. Semble, that if the wife came with others, and made a forcible entry into this house, she might be convicted on an indictment for a forcible entry, stating it to be the house of the husband. Id.

A constable entered a house with a warrant in his hand, and searched the house; and for such entering and searching was indicted for a forcible entry:—Held, that his counsel might ask the witnesses for the prosecution what the constable said, at the time, as to whom he was searching for. Id.

If a tenant of a house, after regular notice to quit, abandon it, and lock it up, leaving some articles of furniture in it, and the landlord break it open and take possession, the tenant cannot maintain trespass: his remedy, if any, is by indictment for forcible entry. Turner v. Meymott, 7 Moore, 574; 1 Bing. 158.

The stat. 8 Hen. 6, c. 9, s. 6, which gives treble damages to the party grieved by a forcible entry and expulsion, applies only to persons having the freehold, for the remedy is given against the disseisor. Cole v. Eagle, 8 B. & C. 409.

The stat. 8 Hen. 6, c. 9, recites that the stat. 15 R. 2, c. 2, does not extend to entries in tenements in peaceable manner, and after holden with force, and then enacts that the statute shall be duly executed; and if from thenceforth any doth make a forcible entry in lands, &c., or them to hold forcibly after complaint thereof, made within the same county where such entry is made to the justices of the peace, they shall cause the statute duly to be executed:—Held, that the statute 8 Hen. 6, was intended to give a summary jurisdiction in case of forcible detainer after an unlawful entry; and that a conviction by justices on that statute, merely stating an entry and a forcible detainer, was insufficient. Rex v. Odell, 4 B. & Adol. 307.

The statute 15 R. 2, c. 2, gave justices a summary jurisdiction to convict, on their own view, for a forcible detainer after a forcible entry. Id.

XXXI. SIMPLE LARCENY.

[7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29.]

1. The Taking.

A., in consequence of seeing an advertisement, applied to B. to raise money for him. B. said he would procure him 5000*l.*, and produced from his pocket-book ten blank 5*s.* bill stamps, seven each of which A. wrote, "Accepted, payable to Messrs. P. & Co., 189, F. Street, London," and signed his name. B., who was present, took up the stamps, and nothing was said as to what was to be done with them. Afterwards bills of exchange for 500*l.* each were drawn on these stamps, and B. put them into circulation:—Held, that these stamps, with the acceptances thus written upon them, were neither "bills of exchange," "orders for the payment of money," or "securities for money;" and held also, that a charge of larceny against B. for stealing the stamps, and for stealing the paper on which the stamps were, would not be sustained, as this was no larceny. Rex v. Minter Hart, 6 C. & P. 106—Littledale, Bolland, and Bosanquet.

To constitute felony, breach of trust is not sufficient, there must be a felonious taking; but that is satisfied by an act not warranted by the purpose for which the property was delivered. Cartwright v. Green, 8 Ves. jun. 409.

Stealing, by the wife of a member of a friendly society, money of the society deposited in a box in the husband's custody, kept locked by the stewards, is not larceny. Rex v. Wallis, 11 C. R. 375.

If a larceny be committed out of the kingdom, though within the king's dominions, (e.g. in Jersey,) bringing the things stolen into this kingdom will not make it larceny here. Rex v. Pratt, M. C. C. R. 349. [As to Scotland and Ireland see s. 76 of the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29.]

It is not an indictable offence to take away a chattel, unless such a degree of force be used as will make it an offence against the public; and the indictment must show that fact. Rex v. Gardiner, 1 Russ. C. & M. 52.

A. delivered his watch to B. to be repaired; instead of repairing it he sold it, and A., being informed of this, told B. that he would either have his watch back, or the money:—Held no felony. Rex v. Levy, 4 C. & P. 241—Vaughan.

A. went to the shop of B., and asked for shoes for Mrs. D. to look at; B. gave her five; she passed two, and three were found at her lodgings. Mrs. D. was not called as a witness:—Held, that A., on this evidence, could not be convicted of a larceny in stealing the goods of B. Rex v. Suggs, 5 C. & P. 143—Paterson.

To obtain property by fraud, and under a pre-concerted plan to rob, is felony, but the animus furandi must be found by the jury. Rex v. Horner, 1 Leach, C. C. 270.

A banker's clerk enters a fictitious sum in the ledger to the credit of a customer, and tells him he has paid that sum to his account; and on the faith of it obtains from the customer his check on the bankers, which the prisoner pays to himself by bank notes from the till, and enters in the waste-book a true account of the check, drawer, and notes, as paid to "a man." This was held a felonious taking of the notes from the till. Rex v. Hammon, 5 Taunt. 304.

Where a person gave his servant a 5*l.* note to get changed, and he got the note changed, and made off with the change:—Held to be no larceny, but an embezzlement. Rex v. Sullens, Carr. C. L. 319; R. & M. C. C. 129.

The assent of a prosecutor to give facility to the commission of a larceny, for the purpose of detecting the offenders, does not do away the felony, although the property was not taken against his will. Rex v. Egginton, 2 Leach, C. C. 913; 2 East, P. C. 494, 666; 2 B. & P. 508.

The owner of goods knowing of an intention in the prisoners to steal them, they having plotted to do with his servant, desired the servant to carry on the business with a view to the detection of the thieves; in consequence of which, the servant, with the consent of his master, agreed with the prisoners to open the outer door to them, and let them into the house, when they broke open inner apartments, and took the goods:—Held by a majority of the judges to be larceny, one doubting because of the owner's assent and partial encouragement of the felony by means of his servant. Rex v. Egginton, 2 Leach, C. C. 913; 2 East, P. C. 494, 666; 2 B. & P. 408.

If a man steal goods in one county, and carry them into another, it will be larceny in the latter, though the goods are not carried into the latter county until long after the original theft. Rex v. Perkin, 1 R. & M. C. C. 45; 2 Russ. C. & M. 74.

An indictment for robbing a mail-bag of letters must be laid in the county where the mail was actually taken, in order to bring the case within the statute; and cannot be laid in the county where the prisoner was in possession of it only; the jury finding that the letters had been taken from the bag in some other county through which the mail had passed. Rex v. Thomas, 2 East, P. C. 105; 2 Leach, C. C. 634.

To make a taking felonious it is not necessary that it should be done lucri causa; taking with an intent to destroy will be sufficient to constitute the offence of larceny, if done to serve the prisoner, or another person, though not in a pecuniary way. By six against five judges. Rex v. Cabbage, R. & R. C. C. 292; 2 Russ. C. & M. 4.

Clandestinely taking away articles to induce the owner (a girl) to fetch them, and thereby to give the prisoner an opportunity to solicit her to commit fornication with him, is not felonious. Rex v. Dickinson, R. & R. C. C. 420; 2 Russ. C. & M. 98.

A. had consigned three trusses of hay to B., and had sent them by the prisoner's cart; the prisoner took away one of the trusses, which was found in his stable, but not broken up:—Held no larceny, as the prisoner did not break up the truss. Rex v. Pratley, 5 C. & P. 533—Parke.

If a poacher take a gun by force from a game-keeper, under the impression that it may be used against him, it is not felony, though he state afterwards that he will sell the gun, and it be not subsequently heard of. Rex v. Holloway, 5 C. & P. 524—Vaughan.

To obtain from a person his note of hand by threatening with a knife held to his throat to take away his life, was not a felonious stealing of the note within stat. 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, for it never was of value to, or in the peaceable possession of, such person. Rex v. Phipoe, 2 Leach, C. C. 673; 2 East, P. C. 599.

If a person be induced to play at hiding under the hat, and stake down his money voluntarily on the event, meaning to receive the stake if he wins, and to pay it if he loses, the taking up of the stake so deposited by him on the table is not a felonious taking, although the taker was made to appear to win the money by fraudulent conspiracy and collusion. Rex v. Nicholson, 2 Leach, C. C. 610; 2 East, P. C. 669.

Where the prisoner stopped the prosecutor, who was carrying a bed on his shoulders, and told him to lay it down, or he would shoot him, and he laid it down on the ground, but before the prisoner could take it up he was apprehended:—Held, that the offence was not completed. Rex v. Farrell, 1 Leach, C. C. 322, n.

Although stat. 22 Car. 2, c. 5, makes the stealing of the king's stores to the value of 20*s.* only felony, an officer may be convicted of larceny at common law, though the value be under 20*s.* Rex v. Thorne, 2 East, P. C. 622.

Where a prisoner took a packet of diamonds to a pawnbroker, with whom he had previously pledged a brooch; and, having agreed with the shopman for the amount of the loan on the diamonds, sealed them up and received the amount, deducting the amount for which the brooch was pledged; but, instead of giving the packet of diamonds to the shopman, gave him a packet of similar appearance, containing only glass:—Held, that it was not a larceny, but only a fraud. Rex v. Meilheim, Car. C. L. 281.

If a pawnbroker's servant, who has a general authority from his master to act in his business, delivers up a pledge to the pawner, on receiving a parcel from the pawner, which he supposes contains valuables he has just seen in the pawner's possession in a similar parcel, the receipt of the pledges by the pawner is not a larceny. Rex v. Jackson, R. & M. C. C. R. 119.

Where a letter, inclosing a check, was directed to James Mucklow, St. Martin's Lane, Birmingham, and no person of that name lived there, but the prisoner lived about ten yards from St. Martin's Lane, and another James Mucklow lived in New Hall Street, and the prisoner, in consequence of a message left by the postman, got the letter from the post-office, and appropriated the check to his own use:—Held, that it was not a felonious taking. Rex v. Mucklow, Car. C. L. 280; R. & M. C. C. 160.

If a man steal his own goods from his own bailee, though he has no intent to charge the bailee, but his intent is to defraud the king, yet if the bailee had an interest in the possession, and could have withheld it from the owner, the taking is a larceny. By seven against four judges. Rex v. Wilkinson, R. & R. C. C. 470; 2 Russ. C. & M. 156.

If a part owner of property steal it from the person in whose custody it is, and who is responsible for its safety, he is guilty of larceny. Rex v. Bramley, R. & R. C. C. 478; 2 Russ. C. & M. 155.

A prisoner cannot be found guilty of stealing goods, if it appear that he could not otherwise get them than by the delivery of the prosecutor's wife, in which case it may be presumed that he received them from her. Rex v. Harrison, 1 Leach, C. C. 47; 2 East, P. C. 559.

If a man and the owner's wife jointly take away the husband's goods, it may be larceny in the man, though he was acting jointly with the wife. Rex v. Tolfree, R. & M. C. C. R. 243.

To constitute larceny, the felonious intention must exist in the mind at the time the property is obtained; for if it be obtained by fair contract, and afterwards fraudulently converted, it is no felony. Rex v. Charlewood, 1 Leach, C. C. 409; 2 East, P. C. 689.

If, however, a fraudulent conversion take place after the privity of contract is determined, it is felony. Id.

Obtaining a postchaise by hiring, with a felonious intent to convert it to the use of the hirer, is felony, although the contract of hiring was not for any definite time. Rex v. Semple, 1 Leach, C. C. 420; 2 East, P. C. 691.

Where the jury found that one who assisted in taking another's goods from a fire in his presence, but without his desire, and who afterwards concealed and denied having them, yet took them honestly at first, and that the evil intention to convert them came on the taken afterwards, it was held no larceny. Rex v. Leigh, 2 East, P. C. 694; 1 Leach, C. C. 411, n.

If the owner parts with the possession of goods for a special purpose, and the bailee, when that purpose is executed, neglects to return them, and afterwards disposes of them; if he had not a felonious intention when he originally took them, his subsequent withholding and disposing of them will not constitute a new felonious taking, or make him guilty of felony. Rex v. Banks, R. & R. C. C. 441; 2 Russ. C. & M. 132.

If a man who is hired to drive cattle sell them it is larceny: for he has the custody only, and not the right to the possession; his possession is the owner's possession, though he is a general drover, at least if he is paid by the day. Rex v. McIntie, M. C. C. R. 368.

Semble, that if the master of a foreign vessel captured by a British ship, and carried into port, takes goods from the vessel after she has been condemned as a prize, it is not larceny, unless there is evidence that he took them for the purpose of converting them to his own private use. Rex v. Van Mayen, R. & R. C. C. 118; 2 Russ. C. & M. 199.

The prisoner went into a shop in London and purchased jewellery, and said that he would pay in cash, and the seller agreed to deliver the goods at a coach-office belonging to an inn, where the prisoner stated that he lodged. The seller made out an invoice and took the goods there, when the prisoner said he had been disappointed in receiving some money he expected by letter. Just afterwards a two-penny post letter was put into his hands, which he opened in the presence of the seller, and said he had to meet a friend at Tom's Coffee-house at seven, who would supply the money. The goods were left at the coach-office, and the seller went home. The prisoner had taken a place in the mail, but he countermanded that, and absconded with the goods. The seller swore that he considered the goods sold if he got his cash, but not before. It was left to the jury to say whether the prisoner had any intention of buying and paying for the goods, or whether he gave the order merely to get possession of them to convert them to his own use. The jury found the latter, and the prisoner was convicted, and the conviction was held right by the twelve judges. Rex v. Campbell, Car. C. L. 280; 1 M. & P. 53; R. & M. C. C. 179.

Getting goods delivered into a hired cart, on the express condition that the price shall be paid for them before they are taken from the cart, and then getting them from the cart without paying the price, will be larceny, if the prisoner never had any intention of paying, but had, ab initio, the intention to defraud. Rex v. Pratt, R. & M. C. C. 22.

Taking goods, though prisoner had bargained to buy, is felonious, if by the usage the price ought to be paid before they are taken, and the owner did not consent to their being taken, and the prisoner when he bargained for them did not intend to pay for them, but meant to get them into his possession, and dispose of them for his own benefit, without paying for them. Rex v. Gilbert, R. & M. C. C. 185.

If a tradesman sell a stranger goods, enter them to his debit, and make out a bill of parcels for them as goods sold, and the goods are delivered to the purchaser by the servant of the seller, who receives bills for them, it is not felony, although the tradesman sold them for ready money, never intending to give the stranger credit, and it appear that he had taken the apartments to which he ordered them to be sent for the purpose of obtaining them fraudulently. Rex v. Parker, 1 Leach, C. C. 614; 2 East, P. C. 671.

If a person, having ordered a tradesman to bring goods to his house, look out a certain quantity, ask the price of them, separate them from the rest, and then, by sending the tradesman home pretence of wanting other articles, take the opportunity of running away with the goods so looked out, with intent to steal them, it is larceny; for, as the sale was not completed, the possession of the property still remained in the tradesman. Rex v. Sharpless, 1 Leach, C. C. 92; 2 East, P. C. 675.

Where property, which the prosecutor had bought, was weighed out in the presence of his clerk, and delivered to his carman's servant to cart, who let other persons take away the cart and dispose of the property for his benefit jointly with that of the others, the carman's servant, as well as the others, are guilty of larceny at common law. Rex v. Harding, R. & R. C. C. 125; 2 Russ. C. & M. 200.

Where the owner sends goods by his servant to be delivered to A., but B. fraudulently procures the delivery to himself by pretending to be A., he is guilty of felony. Rex v. Wilkins, 2 East, P. C. 673.

Getting a parcel from a carrier's servant, by falsely pretending to be the person to whom it is directed, if it be taken animo furandi it is a larceny; for the servant has no authority to part with it but to the right person. Rex v. Longtreath, R. & M. C. C. 137.

If a party finding property knows the owner, or if there be any mark upon it by which the owner can be ascertained, and instead of returning it converts it to his own use, such conversion will constitute a felonious taking. Anon. 2 Russ. C. & M. 102—Lawrence. Rex v. James, 2 Russ. C. & M. 102—Gibbs.

Where the prisoner obtained possession of a hat from the maker, which had been ordered by a third person, by sending a boy for it in the name of such third person:—Held, it did not amount to larceny. Rex v. Adams, 2 Russ. C. & M. 113; R. & R. C. C. 225.

Fraudulently obtaining a chest of tea from the India House, though by means of a regular receipt note and permit, was holden to be larceny. Rex v. Hench, 2 Russ. C. & M. 120; R. & R. C. C. 163.

Where the prisoner having offered to accommodate the prosecutor with gold for notes, the latter put down a number of bank notes for the purpose of their being exchanged, which the prisoner took up and ran away with:—Held a larceny, if the jury believed that he intended to run away with them at the time, and not to return the gold. Rex v. Oliver, 2 Russ. C. & M. 122—Wood.

To obtain a bill of exchange from an indorsee, under a pretence of getting it discounted, is felony, if the jury find that the indorsee did not intend to leave the bill in the prisoner's possession without the money, and that he undertook to discount it with a preconcerted design to convert its produce to his own use. Rex v. Aickles, 1 Leach, C. C. 294; 2 East, P. C. 675.

Where two planned to rob the prosecutrix of some coats, and one got her to go with him that might get some money to buy them of her, and he left the coats with the other, who immediately absconded with them:—Held, that the receipt by the one amounted to a felonious taking of the coats by both. Rex v. County, 2 Russ. C. & M. 127, 175.

If a bureau be delivered to a carpenter to repair, and he discover money in a secret drawer of it, which he unnecessarily as to its repairs breaks open, and converts the money to his own use, it is a felonious taking of the property, unless it appear that he did it with intention to restore it to its right owner. Cartwright v. Green, 2 Leach, C. C. 952; 8 Ves. jun. 405.

If a parcel be accidentally left in a hackney-coach, and the coachman, instead of restoring it to the owner, detain it, open it, destroy part of its contents, and borrow money on the rest, he is guilty of felony. Rex v. Wynne, 1 Leach, C. C. 413; 2 East, P. C. 664, 697; S. P. Rex v. Sears, 1 Leach, C. C. 415, n.

A servant clandestinely taking his master's corn, though to give to his master's horses, is guilty of larceny. Rex v. Morfit, R. & R. C. C. 307; 2 Russ. C. & M. 94.

Pulling wool from the bodies of live sheep and lambs, animo furandi, is larceny. Rex v. Martin, 1 Leach, C. C. 171; 2 East, P. C. 618.

So, it is larceny to take the milk from a cow. Id.

Where goods in a shop were tied to a string which was fastened by one end to the bottom of the counter, and a thief took up the goods and carried them away towards the door as far as the string would permit:—Held, that being no severance, there was no asportation, and consequently that it was not a felony. Anon. 2 East, P. C. 556; 1 Leach, C. C. 321, n.

The prisoner, having lifted up a bag from the boot of a coach, was detected before he had got it out, and it did not appear that it was entirely removed from the space it at first occupied in the boot, but the raising it from the bottom had completely removed each part of it from the space that specific part occupied:—Held, that it was a complete asportation. Rex v. Walsh, 1 R. & M. C. C. 14; 2 Russ. C. & M. 96.

To remove a package from the head to the tail of a wagon, with a felonious intent to take it away, is a sufficient asportation to constitute a larceny; but merely to alter the position of a package on the spot where it lies is not. Rex v. Coslet, 1 Leach, C. C. 236; 2 East, P. C. 556.

Where the prisoner set up a long bale upon end in a wagon, and cut the wrapper all the way down with intent to remove the contents, but was apprehended before he had taken anything out of it:—Held, that there was not a sufficient asportation to constitute a larceny. Rex v. Cherry, 1 Leach, C. C. 236, n; 2 East, P. C. 556.

If the master and owner of a ship steal some of the goods delivered to him to carry, it is not larceny in him, unless he take the goods out of their packages. Rex v. Madox, R. & R. C. C. 92; 2 Russ. C. & M. 135.

Nor, if larceny, would it be a capital offence within stat. 24 Geo. 2, c. 45. Id.

If a warehouseman has several bags of wheat delivered to him for safe custody, and he take the whole of the wheat out of one bag, it is no less a larceny than if he had severed a part from the residue of the wheat in the same bag, and had taken only that part, leaving the remainder of the wheat in the bag. Rex v. Brazier, R. & R. C. C. 337; 2 Russ. C. & M. 134.

If one employed to carry goods for hire appropriate them to his own use, but does not break bulk, this is no larceny, although the person so employed were not a common carrier, but was only employed in this particular instance. Rex v. Fletcher, 4 C. & P. 545—Patteson.

Where a person received a check from Sir T. P. to buy Exchequer bills, and he carried it to the bankers, got the cash, and embezzled part; on being indicted for stealing:—Held, first, that as there was no fraud to induce Sir T. P. to deliver the check, it was not larceny, although the prisoner intended to misapply the property when he took it, and misapplied it accordingly: secondly, that as Sir T. P. never had possession of the money received at the banker's, but by the hands of the prisoner, the indictment could not be supported. Rex v. Walsh, R. & R. C. C. 215; 2 Leach, C. C. 1054; 4 Taunt. 258. But see stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29.

The cases of Rex v. Petrie, 1 Leach, C. C. 294, 2 East, P. C. 740, and Rex v. Farley, 2 East, P. C. 740, relate to petty larceny, which is not now a distinct offence.

2. The Thing Taken.

[7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29.]

Semble, that bank-notes were not chattels within the meaning of stat. 3 Will. & M. c. 9, and 5 Anne, c. 31. Rex v. Morris, 1 Leach, C. C. 468; 2 East, P. C. 748.

A check on a banker's, written on unstamped paper, payable to D. F. J., and not made payable to bearer, is not a valuable security within 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 5. Rex v. Yates, Car. Cr. L. 273, 333.

Money was not within the meaning of the words "goods and chattels," in the statutes 3 Will. & M. c. 9, and 5 Anne, c. 31. Rex v. Guy, 1 Leach, C. C. 241; 2 East, P. C. 748. Rex v. Davidson, 1 Leach, C. C. 242, n.

Held not to be felony within 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, to steal bankers' notes completely executed, but which have never been put into circulation, on the ground that no money was due upon them. Anon. 2 Russ. C. & M. 147; 2 Leach, C. C. 1061, n.

Stealing re-issuable notes after they have been paid, and before they have been re-issued, did not subject the party to an indictment on the 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, for stealing notes; but he may be indicted for stealing paper with valuable stamps upon it. Rex v. Clark, R. & R. C. C. 181; 2 Leach, C. C. 1036.

Country bankers' notes, which had been paid by the bankers in London at whose house they were made payable, and by them sent down to the country bankers' to be re-issued, on the way there were stolen, and the prisoner was indicted for receiving them. The indictment in some counts charged the notes to be valuable securities, and in others as pieces of paper of the goods and chattels of the country bankers. The prisoner was convicted, and the conviction held right. Some of the judges doubted whether these notes were to be considered as valuable securities, but, if not, they all thought they were goods and chattels. Rex v. Vyze, R. & M. C. C. 218.

Exchequer bills, although signed by a person not authorized to do so, are securities and effects within the statute 15 Geo. 2, c. 13, s. 12. Rex v. Aslett, 2 Leach, C. C. 958; 1 N. R. 1.

The halves of country bank-notes, sent in a letter, are goods and chattels, and a person who steals them is indictable for larceny. Rex v. Mead, 4 C. & P. 535—Bosanquet.

Dollars, or Portugal money, not current by proclamation, are not goods within the meaning of the 24 Geo. 2, c. 45. Rex v. Leigh, 1 Leach, C. C. 52; S. P. Rex v. Grimes, 2 East, P. C. 646.

A larceny may be committed of window shutters which are neither hung nor beaded into the frame, but merely fastened by laths nailed across the frames to prevent their shaking out; as they are not fixed to the freehold. Rex v. Hedger, 1 Leach, C. C. 201; 2 East, P. C. 590, n.

Piratically stealing a ship's anchor and cable is a capital offence by the marine laws, and triable under the 28 Hen. 8, c. 15; 39 Geo. 3, c. 7, not extending to this case. Rex v. Curling, R. & R. C. C. 123. Indictment stated.

And the stealing is equally an offence, although the master of the vessel concur in it, and although the object is to defraud the underwriters for the benefit of the owners. Id.

If pigeons are so far tame that they come home every night to roost in the wooden box hung on the outside of the house of their owner, and a party come in the night and steal them out of those boxes, this is a larceny. Rex v. Brink, 1 C. & P. 131—Taddy.

3. The Ownership.

Property cannot be laid in a person who has never had either actual or constructive possession. Rex v. Adams, R. & R. C. C. 225; 2 Russ. C. & M. 113.

In an indictment for larceny, the property stolen may be described as the real owner's, although it never was actually in his possession, but in the possession of his agent only. Rex v. Remnant, R. & R. C. C. 136; 2 Russ. C. & M. 160.

If goods seized under a writ of fi. fa. are stolen, they may be described as the goods of the party against whom the writ issued; for, although they are in custodia legis, the original owner continues to have a property in them until they are sold. Rex v. Eastall, 2 Russ. C. & M. 197.

An indictment for stealing the wearing apparel of a son, who is an apprentice to his father, and furnished with his clothes in pursuance of his indentures, must lay them to be the property of the son, and not of the father. Rex v. Forsgate, 1 Leach, C. C. 463.

Where two had jointly stock upon a farm, and one died, leaving several children:—Held, that the property in sheep stolen was properly alleged to be in the survivor and the children, the former swearing that he considered himself to hold one moiety for the benefit of the latter. Rex v. Scott, 2 East, P. C. 655; R. & R. C. C. 13.

Semble, that the property might have been laid in the survivor alone, as he was in possession of the children's moiety as their agent. Id.

D. and C. were partners; C. died intestate, leaving a widow and children; from the time of his death the widow acted as partner with D., and attended the business of the shop; three weeks after C.'s death part of the goods were stolen; they were described in the indictment as the goods of D. and the widow:—Held, that the description was right. Rex v. Gaby, R. & R. C. C. 178; 2 Russ. C. & M. 161.

The goods in a dissenting chapel, vested in trustees, cannot be described in an indictment as the goods of a servant who has merely the custody of the chapel and things in it, to clean and keep in order, although he has the key of the chapel, and no other person but the minister has another key. Rex v. Hutchinson, R. & R. C. C. 112; 2 Russ. C. & M. 158.

A Bible had been given to a society of Wesleyans; and it had been bound at the expense of the society. B. stated that he was one of the trustees of the chapel, and also a member of the society. No trust-deed was produced:—Held, that, in an indictment for stealing the Bible, the property was rightly laid in B. and others. Rex v. Boulton, 5 C. & P. 537—Parke.

An unqualified person may have a sufficient legal possession of game to support an indictment for stealing it from him. Anon. 2 Russ. C. & M. 2—Grose.

A box belonging to a benefit society was stolen from a room in a public-house. Two of the stewards had keys of this box; and, by the rules of the society, the landlord ought to have had a key, but in fact he had not:—Held, that the prisoner might be convicted on a count laying the property in the landlord alone. Rex v. Wymer, 4 C. & P. 391—Parke.

An indictment for stealing goods may, under 55 Geo. 3, c. 137, state them to be the goods of the overseers of the poor, for the time being, of the parish of A.; for this will import that they were the then overseers. Rex v. Went, R. & R. C. C. 359; 2 Russ. C. & M. 167.

Stealing from the Invalid office at Chelsea, property must be laid in the house of the king. Rex v. Peyton, 1 Leach, C. C. 324; 2 East, P. C.

keeper or the guest. Rex v. Todd, 1 Leach, C. C. 357, n.

So, goods stolen from a washerwoman may be laid to be her property. Rex v. Parker, 1 Leach, C. C. 357, n.

So, in the case of an agister, who takes in sheep to agist for another, they may be laid to be his property. Rex v. Woodward, 1 Leach, C. C. 357, n.; 2 East, P. C. 653.

The coach-glass of a gentleman's coach, standing in the coachmaster's yard, may be laid to be the property of the coachmaster. Rex v. Taylor, 1 Leach, C. C. 356; 2 East, P. C. 653.

In larceny, the goods of a furnished lodging must be described as the lodger's goods, not as the goods of the original owner. Rex v. Belstead, R. & R. C. C. 411; 2 Russ. C. & M. 154; Rex v. Brunswick, 1 R. & M. C. C. 26; 2 Russ. C. & M. 154.

The property in goods stolen held to be properly alleged to be in the driver of a coach, from the boot of which they were taken. Rex v. Deakin, 2 East, P. C. 653; 2 Leach, C. C. 862.

If a cornfactor purchase a ship laden with corn, and send his lighter to fetch it from the ship to his wharf, a delivery of the corn on board the lighter puts it into the possession of the cornfactor, although the lighter man never delivers it at the factor's wharf. Rex v. Spears, 2 Leach, C. C. 825; 2 East, P. C. 568.

If a cornfactor purchase the cargo of a vessel laden with corn, and send his servant with a lighter to fetch it from the ship in loose bulk, and the servant contrive to have a certain portion of it put into sacks by the meters on board the ship, and take the corn so sacked feloniously away in the lighter immediately from the ship, he may be indicted for stealing the property of the cornfactor, although it was never put into his lighter, or otherwise reduced into the cornfactor's possession. Rex v. Abrahdt, 2 Leach, C. C. 824; 2 East, P. C. 569.

An indictment for larceny, laying the goods stolen to be the property of Victory Baroness Turkheim, is good, although her name is Selinda Victoire. Rex v. Sulle, 2 Leach, C. C. 861.

An indictment for the larceny of property belonging to trustees who are not incorporated must lay the property to be in them by name as individuals, subjoining a description of the character in which they are authorized to act. Rex v. Shenington, 1 Leach, C. C. 513.

4. Indictment.

An indictment for stealing a bank-note did not conclude contra formam statuti:—Held, by the fifteen judges, that it was bad. Rex v. Pearson, 5 C. & P. 121.

An indictment on 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, alleged the stealing of a bill of exchange in L., whereon the names of A. & B. were indorsed, which was the an indorsee when negotiated at L.:—Held, no variance. Rex v. Austin, 2 East, P. C. 602.

An indictment for larceny of a promissory note may describe it generally as "one promissory note for the payment of one guinea," without setting the note forth. Rex v. Milnes, 2 East, P. C. 602.

In an indictment for larceny, if the thing stolen be described as a bank post-bill, and be not set out, the court cannot take judicial notice that it is a promissory note, or that it is such an instrument as, under stat. 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, may be the subject of larceny, although it be described as made for the payment of money. Rex v. Chard, R. & R. C. C. 488.

Where an indictment described a bank-note as signed by A. H. for the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, and a prisoner was convicted; such conviction was held bad, there being no evidence of A. H.'s signature. Rex v. Craven, R. & R. C. C. 14; 2 East, P. C. 601.

Describing a bank-note "as a certain note, commonly called a bank-note," was not such a description as will warrant a conviction on 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, for stealing it. Id.

An indictment for stealing 10*l.* in moneys numbered is not sufficient; some of the pieces of which that money consisted should be specified. Rex v. Fry, R. & R. C. C. 482; 2 Russ. C. & M. 169.

An indictment on stat. 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, should have concluded against the form of the statute, and not statutes, although that statute had once expired and been revived by stat. 9 Geo. 2, c. 18. Rex v. Morgan, 2 East, P. C. 601.

In an indictment on stat. 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, it was improper to lay bank-notes as chattels, but that word might have been rejected as surplusage, if the indictment be in other respects sufficient. Rex v. Sadi, 2 East, P. C. 601.

A set of new handkerchiefs in a piece may be described as so many handkerchiefs, though they are not separated one from another, if the pattern designates each, and they are described in the trade as so many handkerchiefs. Rex v. Nibbs, 1 R. & M. C. C. 25; 2 Russ. C. & M. 169.

Where an indictment for stealing in a dwelling-house alleged it to be the dwelling-house of Sarah Lunns, and it appeared in evidence that her name was Sarah London:—Held, that the variance was fatal to the capital part of the indictment. Rex v. Woodward, 1 Leach, C. C. 253, n.

In cases of larceny of animals feræ naturæ, the indictment must show that they were either dead, tame, or confined, otherwise they must be presumed to be in their original state. Rex v. Rough, 2 East, P. C. 607. And see Rex v. Hudson, 2 East, P. C. 611.

Ferrets, though tame and saleable, cannot be the subject of larceny. Rex v. Searing, R. & R. C. C. 351; 2 Russ. C. & M. 153.

An indictment for stealing a dead animal should state that it was dead; for, upon a general statement that a party stole the animal, it is to be intended that he stole it alive. Rex v. Edwards, R. & R. C. C. 497—Holroyd; 2 Russ. C. & M. 171.

Upon an indictment for stealing a live animal, evidence cannot be given of stealing a dead one. Id.

But in the case of Rex v. Puckering, M. C. C. R. 242, A. was indicted for receiving a "lamb," when he received the lamb it was dead, and it was held by the fifteen judges that the indictment was sufficient, it being immaterial, as to the prisoner's offence, whether the lamb was alive or dead, his offence, and the punishment for it, being in both cases the same. This case appears to overrule the case of Rex v. Edwards.

An indictment for stealing four live turkeys was laid in the county of H.; it appeared that the prisoner stole them alive in the county of C., and killed them there, and then brought them into the county of H.:—Held, that as the prisoner had not the turkeys in a live state in the county of H., the charge as laid was not proved, and that the word "live" in the description could not be rejected as surplusage, and therefore that the indictment was bad. Rex v. Holloway, 1 C. & P. 128.

If a parish be partly situate in the county of W. and partly in the county of S., it is sufficient, in an indictment for larceny, to state the offence to have been committed at the parish of H., in the county of W. Rex v. Perkins, 4 C. & P. 33—Park.

5. Evidence and Trial.

A prisoner was indicted for stealing three articles. It appeared, that, having taken the first article, he returned in about two minutes and took the second, and then returned in half an hour and took the third:—Held, that the last taking was a distinct felony, and could not be given in evidence with the other two; but, that the interval of time between the first and second taking was so short, that they must be considered as parts of the same transaction. Rex v. Birdseye, 4 C. & P. 386—Littledale.

If the only evidence against a prisoner indicted for larceny be, that the goods were found in his possession sixteen months after they had been stolen, the judge will direct an acquittal, without calling on him for his defence. Rex v. —, 1 C. & P. 459—Bayley.

A prisoner was indicted for stealing carpenter's tools, and the only evidence against him was an acquittal was directed. Rex v. Adams, 3 C. & P. 600—Parke.

Non-delivery upon request is evidence of a tortious conversion. Rex v. Semple, 1 Leach, C. C. 424.

On an indictment for larceny, the wife of a receiver, who is not indicted, cannot be compelled to give her evidence against the prisoner. Rex v. Ast, Car. C. L. 66—Macdonald and Lawrence.

If it is probable that all the goods stolen were not stolen at one time, but still it is possible that they might have been so, the judge will not put the prosecutor to elect to go upon the stealing of some particular article or articles. Rex v. Dunn, Car. C. L. 82.

Larceny must be tried in the county where committed; but the offence is considered as committed in every county into which the thief carries the goods. Rex v. Thomson, 2 Russ. C. & M. 174.

Therefore, if a man steal goods in the county of A., and carry them into the county of B., he may be indicted for the larceny in the latter county. Id.

But if a compound larceny be committed in one county, and the offender carry the property into another, though he may be convicted in the latter county of the simple larceny, he cannot be there convicted of the compound larceny. Id.

Where four stole goods in the county of G., and divided them in that county, and then carried their shares into the county of W. in their separate bags:—Held, that it was not a joint larceny in W., but separate larcenies in that county, and the subject of distinct prosecutions. Rex v. Barnett, 2 Russ. C. & M. 175—Holroyd. And see Rex v. County, 2 Russ. C. & M. 127, 175.

On an indictment for the larceny of a bill of exchange obtained from the prosecutor, under a pretence of discounting it, parol evidence of the bill may be given after proof of a subpoena duces tecum given to the person in whose possession it was shown to be shortly previous to the trial, but who did not attend. Rex v. Aickles, 1 Leach, C. C. 294; 2 East, P. C. 675.

The case of Rex v. Herling, 1 R. & M. C. C. 9, relates to the punishment of larceny, which is now regulated by the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 3.

XXXII. ROBBERY.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, ss. 6 & 7.]—By the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, the stats. 23 Hen. 8, c. 1, and 3 R. & M. c. 9, are repealed, as is the stat. 1 Edw. c. 12, so far as relates to this subject.

See C. J. Tindal's Charge, 5 C. & P. 267, n.

1. The Offence.

If a robber take a purse of money from a person and restore it to him immediately, saying, if you value your purse take it back and give me the contents," but is apprehended before the money is delivered to him, yet the crime is completed. Rex v. Peat, 1 Leach, C. C. 228; 2 East, P. C. 557.

Taking money from a woman at the time of an attempt to commit a rape amounts to robbery, although there was no demand of money made by the prisoner, and it was clearly his original intent only to commit a rape. Rex v. Blackham, 2 East, P. C. 711.

Where money was given to one of the mob during the riots in London, in 1780, upon a knocking at the prosecutor's door in a menacing manner:—Held, that it was robbery. Rex v. Tuplin, 2 East, P. C. 712.

Where the prisoners threatened to bring a mob from Birmingham, (then in a state of riot and disturbance), and burn the prosecutor's house if he did not give them money, and he did so under fear of that threat:—Held, a robbery. Rex v. Astley, 2 East, P. C. 729; Rex v. Brown, 2 East, P. C. 731.

So it was held in the case of a threat to tear down corn, and level the house. Rex v. Simons, 2 East, P. C. 731.

If persons who had formed part of a mob obtain money from a party by advising him to give money to the mob, and be indicted for this as a robbery, the prosecutor, to show that this was not bona fide advice, may give evidence of demands of money made by the same mob at other places, before and afterwards, in the course of the same day, if any of the prisoners were present on those occasions. Rex v. Winkworth and others, 4 C. & P. 414—Parke.

If a person by force or threats compel another to give him goods, and by way of colour oblige him to take, or if he offer, less than the value, it is robbery. Rex v. Simons, 2 East, P. C. 712. S. P. Rex v. Spencer, 2 East, P. C. 712.

Where persons under pretence of an auction got a woman into a house, and compelled her, by threats of carrying her before a magistrate and to prison for not paying for a lot pretended to have been bid for by her, to pay them one shilling through fear of prison, and for the purpose of obtaining her liberation, but without any fear of any other personal violence:—Held, not robbery, but only duress. Rex v. Wood, 2 East, P. C. 732.

A woman went into a mock auction shop, and it was pretended that she bid for certain articles, and the prisoner threatened to take her to Bow-street, and have her sent to Newgate, unless she paid earnest for the articles, to avoid which she paid one shilling:—Held, that this was not a sufficient restraint to make this a robbery. Rex v. Newton, Car. Cr. Law, 285.

If the property be not taken by violence, nor parted with through fear, it is no robbery; though there were sufficient legal and reasonable ground for fear, as upon a threat to charge one with an unnatural crime. Rex v. Resne, 2 East, P. C. 734.

Snatching an article from a man will constitute robbery, if it is so attached to his person or clothes as to afford resistance. Rex v. Mason, R. & R. C. C. 419; 2 Russ. C. & M. 69.

Snatching property from the hand of another is not a sufficient force to constitute a highway robbery. Rex v. Baker, 1 Leach, C. C. 290; 2 East, P. C. 702.

Suddenly snatching a bundle from the hands of a boy as the prisoner ran past him:—Held, only larceny, as there was not a sufficient degree of force and terror to constitute robbery. Rex v. Macauley, 1 Leach, C. C. 287; S. P. Rex v. Robins, 1 Leach, C. C. 290, n., and cases there cited.

To force an ear-ring from the ear of a lady, with a felonious intent to steal it, is a sufficient degree of violence to constitute a robbery; and to remove it from the ear to the curls of her hair, where it accidentally remained, is a sufficient carrying away. Rex v. Lapier, 1 Leach, C. C. 320; 2 East, P. C. 557, 708.

To snatch a diamond-pin from the head-dress of a lady, with such force as to remove it with part of the hair from the place in which it was fixed, is a sufficient violence to constitute robbery. Rex v. Moore, 1 Leach, C. C. 335.

To constitute the crime of highway robbery, the force used must be force with intent to overpower the party, and prevent his resistance; and if the force used is not with that intent, but only to get possession of the property of the party attacked, it is not highway robbery. Rex v. Gnosil, 1 C. & P. 304—Garrow.

The crime of robbery may be committed by obtaining money from a man, by threatening to charge him with having been guilty of sodomitical practices. Rex v. Jones, 1 Leach, C. C. 139.

To obtain money from a person against his will, by threatening to carry him before a magistrate, and to accuse him of unnatural practices, amounts to robbery, though no actual or personal violence be used. Rex v. Donnally, 1 Leach, C. C. 193; 2 East, P. C. 713, 715, 783.

It is equally a robbery to extort money from a person, by threatening to accuse him of an unnatural crime, whether the party so threatened has been guilty of such crime or not. Rex v. Gardner, 1 C. & P. 479—Littledale.

If a man obtain property from another by accusing him of having been guilty of an unnatural crime, it will amount to robbery, although the party was under no apprehension of personal danger, and felt no other fear than that of losing his character. Rex v. Hickman, 1 Leach, C. C. 278; 2 East, P. C. 728.

To constitute robbery by taking money from another upon a threat of charging him with an unnatural crime, the money must be taken immediately upon the threat made, and not after the parties have separated, and there has been time for the prosecutor to deliberate and procure assistance; and especially, after he had consulted a friend, who was even present at the time when the money was paid, though the prosecutor parted with his money from fear of losing his character. Rex v. Jackson, 1 East, P. C. Add. xxi.; 1 Leach, C. C. 193, n.; 2 Leach, C. C. 618, n. And see Rex v. Hickman, 2 East, P. C. 728; 1 Leach, C. C. 278. And see Rex v. Cannon, post, p. 766.

Parting with property upon the charge of an unnatural crime will not make the taking a robbery, if it is parted with, not from fear of loss of character, but for the purpose of prosecuting. Rex v. Fuller, R. & R. C. C. 408; 2 Russ. C. & M. 88.

Where money was obtained by calling a man a sodomite and threatening him, but the money was parted with by the prosecutor, not so much from fear of losing his character, as from fear of losing his place:—Held, by a majority of the judges, that it was sufficient to constitute a robbery. Rex v. Elmstead, 2 Russ. C. & M. 86.

The parting with money or goods through fear of loss of character and service, upon a charge of sodomitical practices, is sufficient to constitute robbery, although the party has no fear of being taken into custody, nor any dread of punishment. Rex v. Egerton, R. & R. C. C. 375; 2 Russ. C. & M. 87.

Obtaining money from a woman by threatening to accuse her husband of an indecent assault is not robbery. Rex v. Edwards, 5 C. & P. 518—Littledale. S. C. nom. Rex v. Edward, 1 M. & Rob. 257.

If a bailiff handcuff a prisoner, under pretence of carrying him to prison with greater safety, and by means of this violence extort money, he is guilty of robbery. Rex v. Gascoigne, 1 Leach, C. C. 280; 2 East, P. C. 709.

If a gang of poachers attack a gamekeeper and leave him senseless on the ground, and one of them return and steal his money, &c.:—Held, that one only can be convicted of the robbery, as it was not in pursuance of any common intent. Rex v. Hawkins, 3 C. & P. 392—Park.

A. had set wires in which game was caught; B., a gamekeeper, found them and took them, with the game caught in them, for the use of the lord of the manor: A. demanded them with menace, and B. gave them up. The jury found that A. acted under a bona fide impression that the wires and game were his property:—Held, that it was no robbery. Rex v. Hall, 3 C. & P. 40—Vaughan.

The cases of Rex v. Pye, R. & R. C. C. 2, n.; and Rex v. Johnstone, R. & R. C. C. 10, n., were for robbery in a dwelling-house, which is not now a distinct offence.

If a prosecutor declare, on an indictment of robbery, that he parted with his property without any fear of violence to his person, or injury to his character, the prisoner cannot be convicted. Rex v. Reane, 2 Leach, C. C. 616; 2 East, P. C. 734.

A. and B. were walking together, B. carrying A.'s bundle, when C. and D. came up and assaulted A.: B. threw down the bundle, and ran to the assistance of A., when C. took it up and made off with it. C. and D. were indicted for robbery, A. being the prosecutor:—Held, that they could not be convicted of the robbery, but only of simple larceny, as the thing stolen was not in the personal custody of A. Rex v. Fallows, 5 C. & P. 508—Vaughan.

A. was attacked by robbers, who, after using very great violence towards him, took from him a piece of paper, on which was written a memorandum respecting some money that a person owed him:—Held, robbery. Rex v. Bingley, 5 C. & P. 602—Gurney.

2. Indictment.

An indictment for robbery need not have the word "violently;" but it must appear upon the whole statement that violence was used. Rex v. Smith, 2 East, P. C. 784.

An indictment for a robbery on an unmarried woman in her maiden name is good, although she marry before the indictment is found. Rex v. Turner, 1 Leach, C. C. 536.

An indictment for a highway robbery must state that the assault was feloniously made with an offensive weapon. Rex v. Pelfryman, 2 Leach, C. C. 563; 2 East, P. C. 783.

The case of Rex v. Wardle, R. & R. C. C. 9; 2 East, P. C. 785, was for robbing near a highway, which is not now a distinct offence.

3. Evidence.

On an indictment for robbery, the declaration in articulo mortis of the party robbed is not admissible in evidence. Rex v. Lloyd, 4. C. & P. 232—Bolland.

XXXIII. LARCENY FROM THE PERSON.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 6.]—By the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, the stat. 48 Geo. 3, c. 129, is wholly repealed.

The cases Rex v. Branny, 2 East, P. C. 704, 1 Leach, C. C. 241, n.; Rex v. Kennedy, 2 Leach, C. C. 788; 2 East, P. C. 706; Rex v. Huckley, 2 Leach, C. C. 789, n.; Rex v. Thompson, 1 Leach, C. C. 443; 2 East, P. C. 705; Rex v. Willan, 1 Leach, C. C. 495; 2 East, P. C. 705; Rex v. Sterne, 1 Leach, C. C. 473; 2 East, P. C. 701; Rex v. Murphey, 1 Leach, C. C. 266; 2 East, P. C. 701; and Rex v. Baynes, 1 Leach, C. C. 7; 2 East, P. C. 700, are all cases turning on what is a privately stealing, which is not now material.

To constitute a stealing from the person, the thing must be completely removed from the person; removal from the place where it was, if it remain throughout with the person, is not sufficient. Rex v. Thompson, 1 R. & M. C. C. 78.

But such removal would be sufficient to constitute a simple larceny. Id.

An indictment on the 48 Geo. 3, c. 129, need not have negatived the force or fear necessary to constitute robbery; and if it does not, though it may appear that there was such force or fear, the punishment imposed by the 48 Geo. 3 might have been inflicted. Rex v. Pearce, R. & R. C. C. 174; 2 Leach, C. C. 1046; 2 Russ. C. & M. 182; S. P., Rex v. Robinson, R. & R. C. C. 321.

The stat. 48 Geo. 3, c. 129, s. 2, which repealed the 8 Eliz. c. 4, was not intended to alter the offence of robbery at common law; but merely to

XXXIV. ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO ROB.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 6.]—By the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, the stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 54, is repealed, except so far as it relates to letters threatening to murder, burn, or destroy, and as to accessories to such offences, and rescue of such offenders.

An indictment on 7 Geo. 2, c. 21, for an assault with intent to rob, must have charged the assault to be unlawful and malicious, as well as felonious, unless it also laid a felonious demand of goods in a forcible and violent manner. Rex v. Pegge, 1 East, P. C. 420.

It must also charge that the prisoner made the assault with intent to rob, and not merely with intent to steal the goods of the prosecutor. Rex v. Monteth, 2 Leach, C. C. 702; 1 East, P. C. 420.

It must state that the assault was made with an offensive weapon, or that a demand was made of money or goods. Rex v. Jackson, 1 Leach, C. C. 267; 1 East, P. C. 419.

On an indictment on 7 Geo. 2, c. 21, for assaulting with an offensive weapon, with intent to steal, it appeared that the assault was made with a stick, although it was not of any extraordinary size:—Held, that the stick was an offensive weapon within the statute, although it might in general be used as a walking stick. Rex v. Johnson, R. & R. C. C. 492.

[The stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 54, s. 5, repeals the 7 Geo. 2, c. 21, and the 4 Geo. 4, c. 54, is repealed as above mentioned. It is now an offence under the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 6, and does not require that the assault should have been made with any weapon.]

It must be proved that the assault was made on the person intended to be robbed. Rex v. Thomas, 1 Leach, C. C. 330; 1 East, P. C. 417. And see Rex v. Trusty, 1 East, P. C. 418.

Therefore an assault on a post-boy, with intent to rob the traveller, is not sufficient. Id.

There must be a demand of money or other property, as well as an assault, to constitute the offence. Rex v. Parfait, 1 Leach, C. C. 19; 1 East, P. C. 416.

The defendant, who had been committed for having "with force and arms made an assault upon the prosecutor with intent feloniously to steal, take, and carry away from the person," &c., was bailed, because he was not charged with any offence within the statute 7 Geo. 2, c. 21, which enacted, "that if any person shall make an assault with an offensive weapon, or by menaces, or in a forcible manner, demand money, &c., from any other person, with a felonious intent to rob such person, he shall be guilty of felony." Rex v. Remnant, 5 T. R. 169.

XXXV. THREATENING LETTERS AND THREATS OF ACCUSATION.

4 Geo. 4, c. 54, 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 7.]—The

Geo. 2, c. 15, and of 30 Geo. 2, c. 24, as related to this subject; but the stat. 52 Geo. 3, c. 64, does not appear to be repealed; and by the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, the stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 54, is repealed so far as it relates to letters threatening to kill, murder, burn, and destroy, and to accessories to such offences, and rescue of such offenders.

The stat. 8 Geo. 1, c. 22, respecting threatening letters, was not repealed by the stat. 30 Geo. 2, c. 24, upon the same subject. Rex v. Robinson, 2 Leach, C. C. 749; 2 East, P. C. 1110. But it is by the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, and 9 Geo. 4, c. 31.

A bank-note was a valuable thing within the meaning of the stat. 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, and 30 Geo. 2, c. 24; and is sufficiently demanded by signifying an intention to impute the crime of murder to the party from whom it is attempted to be obtained. Id.

A letter, signed by two initials, as R. R., was a letter without a name subscribed thereto, within the meaning of the Black Act, 9 Geo. 1, c. 22. Id.

An indictment on 4 Geo. 4, c. 54, s. 5, for demanding money, &c., must have distinctly shown by whom it was demanded. Rex v. Dunkley, 1 R. & M. C. C. 90.

And an indictment on the same statute, by threatening to accuse, &c., must have positively shown who was threatened. Id.

In a threatening letter, the threat must be direct and plain. Rex v. Girdwood, 1 Leach, C. C. 142; 2 East, P. C. 1120.

The bare delivery of the letter, though sealed, is evidence of a knowledge of its contents. Id.

If the terms of a threatening letter are doubtful as to the exact accusations the prisoner meant to threaten, his declarations subsequently made, on being asked what he meant to impute, are evidence to explain the meaning of the letter. Rex v. Tucker, Car. C. L. 288; R. & M. C. C. 134. [In the marginal note of the report of R. & M. C. C. 134, it is said that an indictment on 4 Geo. 4, c. 54, for sending a threatening letter to accuse of an infamous crime need not specify the crime, for the specific crime the prisoner intended to charge might be intentionally left in doubt; however, in the case itself, nothing of the kind appears.]

Obtaining money by threatening to charge a man with an unnatural crime, and carry him before a magistrate, is robbery, if there is any constraint upon his person. Therefore, where the prisoners call a coach to carry the parties before a magistrate, and the prosecutor gets into it, this is a constraint on his person sufficient to constitute a robbery. Rex v. Cannon, R. & R. C. C. 146; 2 Russ. C. & M. 87. And see Rex v. Eger-ton, R. & R. C. C. 375; 2 Russ. C. & M. 87.

Semble, that the mere apprehension of danger to the party's character will not be sufficient to constitute the offence. Id.

A letter was signed, "I am your Cut-throat," and stated, that if the person to whom it was sent and if he made light of it, the writer would make light of him and his:—Held, that this letter plainly conveyed a threat to kill and murder, as to render it unnecessary to insert either innuendoes or prefatory allegations in the indictment to explain its meaning. Rex v. Boucher, 4 C. & P. 562—Patteson.

An indictment on stat. 30 Geo. 2, c. 24, for sending a threatening letter, intending to extort and gain money, could not be supported by showing a letter threatening to accuse the prisoner of an unnatural crime, if he did not give up a certain bill drawn by the prisoner, of which the prosecutor was the holder. Rex v. Major, 2 East, P. C. 1118; 2 Leach, C. C. 772.

Sending a letter threatening to accuse the prosecutor of having made overtures to the prisoner to commit sodomy with him, did not threaten to charge such an infamous crime as to be within stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 54, s. 3. Rex v. Hickman, 1 R. & M. C. C. 34. But what is an infamous crime is now regulated by the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 9.

It is no answer to a charge of sending threatening letters, that the contents would lead the party to suspect who wrote the letter, unless it is shown that the prisoner did not mean to conceal himself. Rex v. Wagstaff, R. & R. C. C. 398.

A threatening letter referring, in the terms of it, to such circumstances as were plainly intended to denote who the writer was, and making a demand of a sum of money in controversy between him and the prosecutor, which the latter had received, and which the former had before insisted should be accounted for to him, was not a threatening letter within stat. 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, or 27 Geo. 2, c. 15, although the writer did not subscribe his name. Rex v. Heming, 2 East, P. C. 1116; 1 Leach, C. C. 445, n.

Where the wife wrote a threatening letter, and the husband carried it to the party threatened:—Held, that the husband, though privy to the writing, was not within stat. 9 Geo. 1, and 27 Geo. 2; nor could the wife alone be convicted, unless she wrote and sent it without the husband who delivered it being privy to the contents. Rex v. Hammond, 2 East, P. C. 1119; 1 Leach, C. C. 444.

To bring the offence of sending a threatening letter within 27 Geo. 2, c. 15, the letter must have been sent to the person threatened, and it must have been so stated in the indictment. Rex v. Paddle, R. & R. C. C. 484.

But it seems, that sending the letter to A, in order that he may deliver it to B, is a sending to B, if the letter be delivered by A to B. Id.

On an indictment on 27 Geo. 2, c. 15, for sending a threatening letter, it was held, that the dropping a letter in a man's way, in order that he may pick it up, is a sending of it. Rex v. Wagstaff, R. & R. C. C. 398.

The sending will be within the statute, although the party saw the prisoner drop the letter.

On writing a letter to a third person, in the name of another, to borrow money, which he obtains by means of that fraud, is only guilty of a misdemeanour. Rex v. Atkinson, 2 East, P. C. 673.

An anonymous letter stated, that the writer had overheard certain persons agree together to do an injury to the person or property of the prosecutor, to whom the letter was sent: and that if thirty sovereigns were laid in a particular place, the writer would give such information as would frustrate the attempt:—Held, that this was not a threatening letter within the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 8, although it appeared that the letter was a mere device to defraud the prosecutor of thirty sovereigns. Rex v. Pickford, 4 C. & P. 227—Bolland.

To obtain money by a threat to send for a constable, and take the party before a magistrate, and from thence to prison, is not robbery; for the threat of legal imprisonment ought not so to alarm any mind so as to induce the person to part with his property. Rex v. Knewland, 2 Leach, C. C. 721; 2 East, P. C. 732.

An indictment for sending a threatening letter must set out the letter. Rex v. Lloyd, 2 East, P. C. 1122.

Stating that the prisoner sent such a letter, directed to the prosecutor, &c., seems sufficient, without expressly alleging that the prisoner sent it to the prosecutor. Id.

The offence of sending a threatening letter may be laid in the county where it is delivered by the post to the prosecutor. Rex v. Esser, 2 East, P. C. 1125; S. P. Rex v. Girdwood, 2 East, P. C. 1120, 1 Leach, C. C. 142.

An indictment, charging that a prisoner "did feloniously and maliciously, with intent to extort money, charge and accuse A. B. with having committed the horrible and detestable crime, &c., and feloniously, &c., menace and threaten to prosecute the said A. B., &c.," was not good under the stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 54, s. 5. Rex v. Abgood, 2 C. & P. 436—Garrow.

But if the indictment had followed the statute, and the evidence had been of a threat to prosecute, the judge would have left it to the jury to say, whether that was not a threatening to accuse. Id.

A conviction on 27 Geo. 2, c. 15, for sending a letter to the prosecutor, threatening "to set fire to his mill, and likewise do all the public injury they were able to him, in all his farms and estates," was held wrong when the prosecutor had not then any mill to which the threat of burning would apply (having parted with it three years before); and the threat as to the farm, &c., not necessarily implying a burning. Rex v. Jepson, 2 East, P. C. 1115.

If a party be indicted for sending a threatening letter, the court will, on motion of the prisoner's counsel, as soon as the bill is found, order that the letter be deposited with the officer of the

XXXVI. SACRILEGE.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 16.]—By the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, the stat. 23 Hen. 8, c. 1, is wholly repealed, and so much of the stat. 1 Edw. 6, c. 12, as relates to this subject.

The provisions of 1 Ed. 6, c. 12, s. 10, were not confined to goods used for divine service; they extended to articles kept in the church to keep it in repair, and therefore a conviction on an indictment on that act, for stealing a snatch-block to raise weights in case the bells wanted repairing, and an iron pot for charcoal, used to air the vaults, was held right. Rex v. Rourke, R. & R. C. C. 386; 2 Russ. C. & M. 45.

If a church tower be built higher than the church, and have a separate roof, but have no outer door, and be only accessible from the body of the church, from which it is not separated by any partition; this tower is a part of the church within the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 10. Rex v. Wheeler, 3 C. & P. 585—Parke.

XXXVII. BURGLARY.

1. Breaking and entering.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 11.]—By the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, the stat. 12 Anne, s. 1, is wholly repealed, and also so much of the stat. 18 Eliz. c. 7, as relates to this subject.

There must be both a breaking and entering to constitute a burglary, and the breaking must be such as will afford the burglar an opportunity of entering so as to commit the intended felony. Rex v. Hughes, 1 Leach; C. C. 406; 2 East, P. C. 491.

If there be an aperture in a cellar window to admit light, through which a thief enters in the night, this is not burglary. Rex v. Lewis, 2 C. & P. 628—Vaughan.

Where a mill, under the same roof and within the same curtilage as a dwelling-house, had a trap-door over a gate-way, which was only fastened by a lid-door kept down by its own weight, without bolts or other interior fastenings:—Held, that an entry into the mill in the night, with intention to steal flour by raising the lid-door amounted to burglary. Rex v. Brown, 2 East, P. C. 487—Buller; 2 Leach, C. C. 1016, n.

Though a thief enter a dwelling-house at night through an open door or window, yet if, when within, he break or open an inner door with intent to commit felony, it is burglary. Rex v. Johnson, 2 East, P. C. 488.

Introducing the hand between the glass of an outer window and an inner shutter was held to be a sufficient entry to constitute burglary. Rex v. Bailey, R. & R. C. C. 341; 2 Russ. C. & M. 12.

And it is a sufficient breaking to constitute such an offence, if the party breaks a pane of glass of a window, and puts his hand in for the purpose of which was merely kept in its place by its own weight, and which had no fastenings, because, it being a new trap-door, they had not been put on, is not a sufficient breaking to constitute a burglary; but unlocking and opening a hall-door and running away is a sufficient breaking out of the house. Rex v. Lawrence and Weaver, 4 C. & P. 231—Bolland.

Lifting the flap of a cellar usually kept down by its own weight is a sufficient breaking for the purpose of burglary. Rex v. Russell, M. C. C. R. 377.

Throwing up a window, and introducing an instrument between such window and an inside shutter, to force open the shutter, if the hand or some part of it is not within the window, is not a sufficient entry to constitute burglary. Rex v. Rust, R. & M. C. C. R. 183.

But where the prisoner raised a window which was not bolted, and thrust a crow-bar under the bottom of the shutter, (which was about half a foot within the window), so as to make an indent on the inside of the shutter, but from the length of the bar his hand was not inside the house:—Held, that it was not a sufficient entry to constitute a burglary. Rex v. Roberts, Car. Cr. Law, 293; 2 East, P. C. 487.

Where, in breaking a window in order to steal property in the house, the prisoner's finger went within the house:—Held, that there was a sufficient entry to constitute burglary. Rex v. Davis, R. & R. C. C. 499.

Where a window opens upon hinges, and is fastened by a wedge, so that the pushing against it will open it; forcing it open by pushing against it is a sufficient breaking to constitute a burglary. Rex v. Hall, R. & R. C. C. 355.

Removing the fastening of a window by the hand introduced through a partially broken pane of the window, and thereby opening the window and entering, is a breaking; not by breaking the residue of the pane, but by unfastening and opening the window. Rex v. Robinson, M. C. C. R. 327.

A chimney is part of a dwelling-house, and therefore the getting in at the top is a breaking of the dwelling-house; and where the prisoner, by lowering himself in the chimney, made an entry into the dwelling-house, though he did not enter any of the rooms, it was held sufficient to constitute burglary. Diss. Holroyd, J., and Burrough, J. Rex v. Brice, R. & R. C. C. 450.

Pulling down the sash of a window is a breaking sufficient to constitute burglary, although it has no fastening, and is only kept in its place by the pulley-weight, and it is equally a breaking, although there is an outer shutter which is not put to. Rex v. Haines, R. & R. C. C. 451.

A window was a little open, and the prisoner pushed it wide open and got in:—Held, no suffi-closed on the outside next the street; the flap was not bolted, but it had bolts:—six judges were of opinion that there was a sufficient breaking to constitute burglary, but the remaining six were of a contrary opinion. Rex v. Callan, R. & R. C. C. 157; 2 Russ. C. & M. 5. And see Rex v. Brown, 2 East, P. C. 487.

The prisoner broke the glass of the prosecutor's side door on the Friday night, with intent to enter the house at a future time, and actually entered on the Sunday:—Held, that this was burglary, although a day had intervened, the breaking and entering being both by night, and the breaking being with intent afterwards to enter. Rex v. Smith, R. & R. C. C. 417; 2 Russ. C. & M. 32.

When the family within the house were forced by threats and intimidations to let in the offenders by one of them opening the door:—Held, that it was as much a breaking by those who made use of such intimidations without, to prevail upon them so to open it, as if they had actually burst the door open. Rex v. Seales, 3 Russ. C. & M. 8—Thompson.

Quære, whether in an indictment on the 1 Ed. 6, c. 12, s. 10, for breaking and entering a house in the day time, evidence of breaking an inner door open and the lock of a cupboard, after having fraudulently obtained admission into the house, was sufficient to support the indictment. Rex v. Hamilton, 1 Leach, C. C. 348.

2. What is a Dwelling-house.

[See the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 13, by which many of the following cases are affected.]

Semble, that it is not burglary to enter a house occupied with a dwelling-house, and separated therefrom by an open passage eight feet wide, if it is not within the same curtilage. Rex v. Garland, 2 East, P. C. 493, 512; 1 Leach, C. C. 144.

But if the outhouse be adjoining to the dwelling-house, and occupied as parcel thereof, though there be no common inclosure or curtilage, it may still be considered as part of the main house. Rex v. Brown, 2 East, P. C. 493—Wilson.

A manufactory carried on in the centre building of a great pile, in the wings of which several persons dwelt, but having no internal communication with the same, though the roofs of all were connected, and the entrances of all were out of the same common inclosure:—Held, not a dwelling-house in which burglary could be committed. Rex v. Eginton, 2 East, P. C. 494, 666; 2 Leach, C. C. 913; 3 B. & P. 508.

An outhouse in the yard of a dwelling-house will be parcel of the dwelling-house if the yard is inclosed, though the occupier has another dwelling-house opening into the yard, and he lets out the dwelling-house with easements in the yard. Rex v. Walters, R. & M. C. C. 13; 2 Russ. C. & M. 5.

the street. Rex v. Jones, 1 Leach, C. C. 537. 2 East, P. C. 504.

A burglary committed in a banker's shop, in which no person slept, but to which there was a communication by a trap-door and a ladder from the upper rooms of the house, in which only a weekly workman and his family lived by the permission of the three partners, who were owners of the whole house, may be laid to have been committed in the dwelling-house of these partners, they inhabiting it by means of their servant. Rex v. Stock, 2 Leach, C. C. 1015; R. & R. C. C. 185; 2 Taunt. 339.

A summer-house used occasionally for tea and retirement, within the same enclosure as the house, though at the distance of about half a mile, was a building within the 4 Geo. 2, c. 32. Rex v. Norris, R. & R. C. C. 69. And see Rex v. Parker, 1 Leach, C. C. 320, n.

All buildings appear to be within 4 Geo. 2, c. 32. Id.

A building within the same fence as the dwelling-house, and used with it as parcel of the dwelling-house, though it has no internal communication with the house but through an open passage, is parcel of the dwelling-house. Rex v. Hancock, R. & R. C. C. 170; 2 Russ. C. & M. 58.

And such a building is equally a part of the dwelling-house, though used partly for the separate business of the occupier of the dwelling-house, and partly for a business in which he was a partner. Id. But see stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 13.

J. W. let a part of his house, viz. a shop, passage, cellar, &c., to his son, who did not sleep therein, and there was a distinct entrance into the son's part, but his passage led to his father's cellars, and they were open to his father's part of the house. The shop was broken into, and the prisoner was convicted thereof:—Held, that by reason of the internal communication, the son's part continued part of the father's house, and therefore that it was burglary. Rex v. Sefton, R. & R. C. C. 202; 2 Russ. C. & M. 14.

A door which only forms part of the outward fence of the curtilage, and opens into no building but into the yard only, is not such a part of the dwelling-house as that the breaking thereof will constitute burglary. Rex v. Bennett, R. & R. C. C. 289; 2 Russ. C. & M. 5, 59.

Prosecutor's house was at the corner of a street, and adjoining thereto was a workshop, beyond which a stable and a coach-house adjoined; all were used with the house, and had doors opening into a yard belonging to the house, which yard was surrounded by adjoining buildings, &c., so as to be altogether an inclosed yard; the workshop had no internal communication with the house, and it had a door opening into the street; its roof was higher than that of the dwelling-house: the street door of the workshop was broken open in the night, and on an indictment for burglary:—Held, the workshop was parcel of the dwelling-house. Rex v. Chalking, R. & R. C. C. 334; 2 Russ. C. & M. 56. [The law laid down in this and the six following cases is altered by the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 13.]

A garret made use of as a workshop, and rented with a sleeping-room by the week, is the mansion of the lodger, if the landlord do not sleep under the same roof. Rex v. Carrell, 1 Leach, C. C. 287; 2 East, P. C. 506.

Lofts over coach-houses and stables, converted into lodging-rooms, are the dwelling-houses of their inhabitants, if there be an outer door. Rex v. Turner, 1 Leach, C. C. 305; 2 East, P. C. 492.

An area gate, opening into the area only, is not part of the dwelling-house, so as to make the breaking thereof burglary, if there is any door or fastening to prevent persons in the area from entering the house, although such door or fastening may not be secured at the time. Rex v. Davis, R. & R. C. C. 322; 2 Russ. C. & M. 6, 59.

A building used with and under the same roof with a dwelling-house, but having no internal communication with it, although opening into an inclosed yard belonging to the house, and also into an adjoining street, may be parcel of the dwelling-house, so as to constitute the breaking and entering thereof a burglary. Rex v. Lithgo, R. & R. C. C. 357.

The prisoner broke into a goose-house, opening into the prosecutor's yard, into which his house also opened; the yard was surrounded partly by other buildings of the homestead, and partly by a wall; some of the buildings had doors opening backwards, and there was a gate in one part of the wall opening upon a road; this goose-house was held part of the dwelling-house, so as to constitute the breaking thereof burglary. Rex v. Clayburn, R. & R. C. C. 360.

Buildings separated from the dwelling-house by a public road, however narrow, will not be a parcel of the dwelling-house, so as to constitute the breaking thereof burglary, if there be no common fence or roof to connect them, although held by the same tenure, and although some of the offices necessary to the dwelling-house adjoin thereto, and although there be an awning extending therefrom to the dwelling-house. Rex v. Westwood, R. & R. C. C. 495.

But if such a building be made a sleeping place for any of the servants of the dwelling-house, it may be deemed a distinct dwelling-house. Id.

A shop adjoining to a house, if under the same roof, and within the curtilage, is part of the dwelling-house, although there be no internal communication between the shop and the house, and although no person sleep in the shop. Rex v. Gibson, 1 Leach, C. C. 357; 2 East, P. C. 508.

A room in a dwelling, occupied therewith and under the same roof, shall be deemed part of the dwelling-house, though it has a separate outer door, and no internal communication with the rest of the house. Rex v. Burrows, M. C. C. R. 274.

Where the owner of a house has never by himself, or by any of his family or servants, slept in the house, it is not his dwelling-house, so as to make the breaking in and stealing goods thereout burglary, though he has used it for his meals, and all the purposes of his business. Rex v. Martin, R. & R. C. C. 108; 2 Russ. C. & M. 18.

Although a man leaves his house, and never means to reside in it again, yet, if he uses part of it as a shop, and lets a servant and his family live and sleep in another part of it, for fear the place should be robbed, and lets the rest to lodgers, the habitation by his servant and family is an habitation by him, and the shop will be considered as part of the dwelling-house, so as to constitute the breaking thereof burglary. Rex v. Gibbons, R. & R. C. C. 422; 2 Russ. C. & M. 19.

Where the prosecutor left his house without any intention of living in it again, and intending to use it as a warehouse only; though he had persons (not of his family) to sleep in it, to guard the property:—Held, that it could not be considered as the “dwelling-house” of the prosecutor, so as to support a conviction for stealing therein to more than the amount of 40s. Rex v. Flanagan, R. & R. C. C. 187.

The owner of a house puts a person into it to sleep there at nights till he can get a tenant, in order to protect some furniture there, which he had purchased of the last tenant, which servant had so slept there for three weeks before, but the owner never intended to inhabit it himself:—Held, that a thief could not be capitally convicted of stealing goods in the dwelling-house of such owner to the value of 40s. within the stat. 12 Anne, c. 7. Rex v. Davis, 2 East, P. C. 499; 2 Leach, C. C. 876.

Or if the owner of a house has no intention of residing in it himself, it cannot be considered his dwelling-house, although his servant sleeps in it every night, if his sleeping there be merely to protect the furniture. Rex v. Davies, 2 Leach, C. C. 876; 2 East, P. C. 499.

A house into which the owner has only removed his goods, but has not slept in it, is not his dwelling-house as to the crime of burglary. Rex v. Thompson, 2 Leach, C. C. 771; 2 East, P. C. 498; Rex v. Hallard, 2 East, P. C. 498.

A nocturnal breaking into a house of which the owner has no farther taken possession than by depositing in it sundry articles of merchandise, neither he nor any servant of his having slept in it, is not burglary, for it cannot be considered as the dwelling-house of the owner. Rex v. Harris, 2 Leach, C. C. 701; 2 East, P. C. 498.

A house under repair, but not inhabited, is not the dwelling-house of the owner, though part of his property is deposited therein. Rex v. Lyons, 1 Leach, C. C. 185; 2 East, P. C. 497, differently reported. S. P. Rex v. Fuller, 1 Leach, C. C. 186, n.

A porter lying in a warehouse does not make it a dwelling-house. Rex v. Smith, 2 East, P. C. 497; 2 Leach, C. C. 1018, n. And see Rex v. Brown, 2 East, P. C. 501; 2 Leach, C. C. 1018, n.

A permanent building used and slept in only for a short time, for the purpose of a fair, may be treated as the dwelling-house of the person so occupying it in an indictment for burglary, though unoccupied the rest of the year. Rex v. Smith, M. & R. 256.—Park.

Indictment for a burglary, laid in the first count to have been committed in the house of M. R. B., in the second of J. B., and in the third of W. N. It appeared that the place where the robbery was committed was a centre building, having two wings; that in the centre building the business of M. R. B., J. B., W. N., and several other persons, was carried on; that in part of one of the wings was the dwelling of M. R. B., and in the other part that of J. B.; neither having any internal communication with the centre, except by a window in the dwelling of J. B., which looked into a passage that ran the whole length of the centre, and that the other wing was occupied by W. N., from which there was no communication with the centre. Semble, that the robbery did not amount to a burglary. Rex v. Egginton, 2 B. & P. 508.

The servant of three partners in trade had weekly wages, and three rooms assigned to him for lodging, over the bank and brewery office of the partners, with which it communicated by a trap-door and a ladder; a burglary being committed in the banking-room, it was held that it was well laid to be in the dwelling-house of the three partners. Rex v. Stock, 2 Taunt. 339.

3. Ownership.

The apartments of lodgers shall be considered as their respective dwelling-houses, if the owner of the premises do not sleep under the same roof. Rex v. Rogers, 1 Leach, C. C. 89; 2 East, P. C. 506.

A house, the whole of which is let out in lodgings, and has only one outer door common to all its inmates, is the mansion-house of its several inhabitants. Rex v. Trepelaw, 1 Leach, C. C. 427; 2 East, P. C. 506, 780.

Though a servant live rent free for the purpose of his service in a house provided for that purpose; yet, if he has the exclusive possession, and it is not parcel of any premises which his master occupies, it may be described as the house of the servant; especially if the house belongs not to his master, but to some person paramount to his master; as in the case of a toll-collector's house, occupied by the servant of the lessee of the tolls, for the purpose of collecting the tolls. Rex v. Camfield, 1 R. & M. C. C. 42; 2 Russ. C. & M. 25.

If two or more rent of the same owner different parts of the same house, so as to have amongst them the whole house, and the owner does not reserve or occupy any part of it, the separate part of each may be described as the dwelling-house of each. Rex v. Bailey, 1 R. & M. C. C. 23; 2 Russ. C. & M. 30.

A house, the joint property of partners in trade, and in which their business is carried on, may be described as the dwelling-house of all the partners, though only one of them resides in it. Rex v. Athea, M. C. C. R. 329.

If a married woman take a house, in which a burglary be committed, the house must be laid as the house of the husband, although she be living separate from him. Rex v. Smyth, 5 C. & P. 201.

The house of a husband, in which he allow his wife to live separate from him, may be described, in an indictment for burglary, as the house of the husband, although the wife lived there in adultery with another man, who paid the housekeeping expenses; and although the husband suspected a criminal intercourse between his wife and the other man when he allowed her to live separate. Rex v. Wilford, R. & R. C. C. 517.

Where a married woman lived apart from her husband, upon an income arising from property vested in trustees for her separate use:—Held, that a house which she had hired to live in was, in an indictment for burglary, properly described as her husband's dwelling-house, although she paid the rent out of her separate property, and the husband had never been in it. Rex v. French, R. & R. C. C. 491.

If a servant lives in a house of his master's at a yearly rent, the house cannot be described as the master's house, though it is on the premises where the master's business is carried on, and although the servant has it because of his service. Rex v. Jarvis, 1 R. & M. C. C. 7; 2 Russ. C. & M. 25.

Where a servant had part of a house for his own occupation, and the rest, in which a burglary is committed, is reserved by the proprietor for other purposes, the part reserved cannot be deemed part of the servant's dwelling-house. Rex v. Wilson, R. & R. C. C. 115; 2 Russ. C. & M. 26.

And it will be the same if any other person has part of the house, and the rest is reserved. Id.

If the owner of a house suffer a person to live in it rent free, it may be stated, in an indictment for breaking into such house in the day-time, to be that person's house; such person being tenant at will. Rex v. Collett, R. & R. C. C. 498; 2 Russ. C. & M. 28.

A burglary in the apartments of officers of a public company must be laid to be in the mansion-house of such company. Rex v. Hawkins, 2 East, P. C. 501; S. P. Rex v. Pickett. Id.

So, of the apartments of a college not occupied by the students, as the buttery. Rex v. Maynard, 2 East, P. C. 501.

Where one, under pretence of being robbed, forced the door of a guest's chamber in an inn, at night, and stole his goods:—Held, that the burglary must be laid to be in the dwelling-house of the innkeeper, and not of the guest. Rex v. Prosser, 2 East, P. C. 502.

If a burglary be committed in the house of a trading company, in the house belonging to which an agent of the company resides, with his family, for the purpose of carrying on the business, it may be laid to be the dwelling-house of the agent, although the rent thereof is paid and the lease is held by the company. Rex v. Margetts, 2 Leach, C. C. 930.

Though a servant live rent-free in a house belonging to an insurance company, and the company pays the taxes, and the company's business is carried on in it, if the servant and house, and the part in which the company's business is carried on be at all times open to those parts in which the servant lives, it may be stated as the servant's house, though the only part entered by the thief was that in which the company's business was carried on; and though the judges would not say that it might not have been described as the company's house, they thought it might, with equal propriety, be described as the house of the servant. Rex v. Witt, R. & M. C. C. R. 248.

If a house is let to A., and a warehouse under the same roof, and with an internal communication to the house, to A. & B.; the warehouse, in an indictment for burglary, cannot be described as the dwelling-house of A. Rex v. Jenkins, R. & R. C. C. 244; 2 Russ. C. & M. 31.

If the owner of a cottage lets one of his workmen, with his family, live in the cottage free of rent and taxes, and he lives there principally, if not wholly, for his own benefit, it may be described as the workman's dwelling-house in an indictment for burglary. Rex v. Jobling, R. & R. C. C. 525; 2 Russ. C. & M. 28.

4. Intent.

Breaking and entering a house in the night-time to recover tea, which had been seized, is no burglary, being intended for the benefit of the supposed owner. Rex v. Knight, 2 East, P. C. 510.

But semble, that it would have been burglary if the indictment had laid the intent to be to rescue the goods seized, which is made felony by statute. Id.

If several agree to commit a burglary, but one communicates the intent to an officer, that he may take the other two, and the officer is upon the watch accordingly; the person who has made that communication to the officer will not be particeps criminis in the burglary, although he is present when it is committed, and pretends to assist the other two, but in fact expedites their apprehension. Rex v. Dannelly, R. & R. C. C. 310; 2 Marsh. 571.

Nor will it make any difference, although his object in detecting is to obtain for himself (by previous agreement with the officer) part of a reward that will be payable on conviction. Id.

5. Indictment.

An indictment for burglary must state at what hour of the night it was committed. Rex v. Waddington, 2 East, P. C. 513.

It must be alleged and proved, either that a felony was committed in the dwelling-house, or that the party broke and entered with intent to commit some felony within the same. Rex v. Dobbs, 2 East, P. C. 513.

And whatever be the felony really intended, the same must be laid in the indictment, and proved agreeably to the fact. Rex v. Vandercomb, 2 East, P. C. 514, 519; 2 Leach, C. C. 708.

tents. Rex v. Thompson, 2 East, P. C. 515; 2 Leach, C. C. 1105, n.

An indictment for burglary, charging in one count an intent to steal the goods of the owner, and in another an intent to murder him, is good, for it is the same fact and evidence, only laid in different ways. Id.

The name of the owner of the house is essential in an indictment for burglary, and for stealing in the dwelling-house. Rex v. White, 1 Leach, C. C. 252; 2 East, 513, 780: S. P. Rex v. Woodward, 1 Leach, C. C. 253, n.

A corporation must prosecute in their corporate name; and the addition of such name as a description of the persons of which the corporation is composed is not sufficient in an indictment. Rex v. Patrick, 1 Leach, C. C. 253; 2 East, P. C. 1059.

An indictment for burglariously breaking and entering the house of A., with intent to steal the goods of B., is bad, if no person of that name had any property in the house. Rex v. Jenks, 2 Leach, C. C. 774; 2 East, P. C. 514.

A house may be described as in the possession of the actual occupier, though his possession be wrongful. Rex v. Wallis, M. C. C. R. 344.

6. Evidence and Trial.

The prisoner was indicted for burglary, 18th October, 23 Geo. 3. The indictment was found in August, 23 Geo. 3, and the offence was really committed 18th October, 22 Geo. 3:—Held, that the conviction on the indictment was wrong. Rex v. Goddard, 5 R. & R. C. C. 432, n. [But see 7 Geo. 4, c. 24, s. 20.]

On an indictment for burglary, the prisoner may be acquitted of the breaking, and found guilty of stealing in the dwelling-house. Rex v. Withal, 1 Leach, C. C. 88; 2 East, P. C. 515, 517.

If a prisoner be charged with a burglary and stealing the goods, the prosecutor, on failing to prove that these facts were committed on the day laid in the indictment, cannot be admitted to prove that the larceny was committed on a prior day. Rex v. Vandercomb, 2 Leach, P. C. 708; 2 East, P. C. 519.

On an indictment for burglary by breaking into a house in the night time, and stealing to the value of 5*l.* or more, the prisoner may be convicted of burglary, or of housebreaking, under the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 12, or of stealing in a dwelling-house to the value of 5*l.* Rex v. Compton, 3 C. & P. 418—Gaselee.

On an indictment for burglariously breaking and entering a dwelling-house, (omitting the words "with intent to steal,") and then and there stealing goods therein, the prisoner may be well convicted of the burglary if the larceny be proved: secus if not. Rex v. Furnival, R. & R. C. C. 445.

Upon an indictment for burglary and larceny against two, one may be found guilty of the burglary and larceny, and the other of the larceny only—Diss. Burrough and Hurlock. Rex v. Butterworth, R. & R. C. C. 520; 2 Russ. C. & M. 44.

When the felony is laid to constitute the burglary, an acquittal of the burglary is an acquittal of stealing in the dwelling-house. Rex v. Comer, 1 Leach, C. C. 36.

Where a party is indicted both for burglary and feloniously stealing in the dwelling-house, and is acquitted of the burglary, but found guilty of the stealing, the verdict should be entered thus, "Jury say not guilty of breaking and entering the dwelling-house in the night, but guilty of stealing the (property) in the dwelling-house." Rex v. Hungerford, 2 East, P. C. 518; 1 Leach, C. C. 88.

A. is indicted for a burglary, and B. as accessory both before and after the fact: the facts proved are, that A., at the instigation of B., a police-officer, concert with three others to commit a burglary, and it is agreed that B. should lie in wait to apprehend the three others, and that the reward for their conviction shall be shared between A. & B. The jury find A. guilty of larceny only, and B. as accessory both before and after. Quære, 1st, whether as A. was not to participate in the plunder, but only in the reward, he could be convicted of larceny? 2ndly, whether, as A., the principal, had been acquitted of the burglary, B. could be convicted as accessory to the larceny? Rex v. Dannelly, and Rex v. Vaughan, 2 Marsh. 571.

XXXVIII. HOUSEBREAKING.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 12; 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 34. —The stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, wholly repeals the stat. 23 H. 8, c. 1, and so much of the stat. 1 Edw. 6, c. 12, as relates to housebreaking, and wholly repeals the stat. 39 Eliz. c. 15, and 3 W. & M., c. 9, and 10 W. 3, c. 12, vulgo, stat. 10 & 11 W. 3, c. 23, and 12 Ann. st. 1, c. 7.

The cases of Rex v. Mounser, 2 Leach, C. C. 567; 2 East, P. C. 629; Rex v. Tandy, 1 C. & P. 291; and Rex v. Byford, R. & R. C. C. 531, relate to housebreaking in the day-time, and to the benefit of clergy, and are inapplicable to the present state of the law. See BURGLARY, ante, p. 767.

XXXIX. LARCENY IN A DWELLING-HOUSE.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 12; 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 62. —The stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, wholly repeals the stat. 12 Ann. st. 1, c. 7.

If a prisoner, who was in the service of the prosecutor, steal a quantity of lace in several pieces, the pieces together being above 5*l.* in value, and bring them all out of his master's house at the same time, this is a capital offence, although it be shown that the prisoner had the opportunity of stealing the lace by a piece at a time, and that no one of the pieces was worth 5*l.* Rex v. C. M. Jones, 4 C. & P. 217—Ballard.

Under stat. 12 Anne, st. 1, c. 7, the larceny must have been of things under the protection of the house, and not of any person within it, therefore not of money in the pocket. Rex v. Ouse, 2 East, P. C. 645; 2 Leach, C. C. 572.

Money feloniously obtained from a person by the practice of ring-dropping, although it is so obtained in the dwelling-house of another, was not a capital offence within the statute. Id.

Stealing a bank-note in a dwelling-house was a felony within the meaning of the words "money, goods, chattels, wares, or merchandises," in stat. 12 Anne, c. 7, Rex v. Dean, 2 Leach, C. C. 693; 2 East, P. C. 646, 749.

If one, on going to bed, put his clothes and money by the bed-side, they are under the protection of the dwelling-house, and not of the person, and therefore a party stealing them may be convicted of stealing in a dwelling-house. Rex v. Thomas, Car. C. Law, 295.

The penalties of stealing in a dwelling-house did not extend to the case of a prisoner stealing the property of another in his own dwelling-house. Rex v. Thompson, 1 Leach, C. C. 338; 2 East, P. C. 644.

Nor to the case of a woman stealing the property of another in the dwelling-house of her husband. Rex v. Gould, 1 Leach, C. C. 339, n. 217; 2 East, P. C. 644.

Property left by mistake at a house, and delivered to the occupier, under the supposition that it was for one of the persons in the house, is entitled to the protection of the house, so as to make the stealing of it, if of 40s. value, by a lodger therein, under pretence that it is his, a capital offence. Rex v. Carroll, 1 R. & M. C. C. 89.

A bank-note feloniously obtained in the house by a lodger from his landlord, under pretence of going to his banker to get it changed, was not a capital offence within the stat. 12 Anne, c. 7, for where the taking is from the person it is not a stealing in the dwelling-house. Rex v. Campbell, 2 Leach, C. C. 564; 2 East, P. C. 644.

The goods of a lodger's guest are under the protection of the dwelling-house; therefore a lodger who invites a man to his room, and then steals his goods to the value of 40s. (now 5l.) when not about his person, is liable to be found guilty of stealing in a dwelling-house. By seven against three judges. Rex v. Taylor, R. & R. C. C. 418; 2 Russ. C. & M. 52.

An indictment for stealing in the dwelling-house, persons being therein and put in fear, must state that the persons were put in fear by the prisoners. Rex v. Etherington, 2 Leach, C. C. 671; 2 East, P. C. 635.

The cases of Rex v. Jones, 2 East, P. C. 641; Rex v. Matthews, 2 East, P. C. 642; Rex v. Godfrey, 1 Leach, C. C. 287; 2 East, P. C. 642; Rex v. Stone, 1 Leach, C. C. 334; 2 East, P. C. 643; Rex v. Seas, 1 Leach, C. C. 304; 2 East, P. C. 643; are on the stat. 10 & 11 W. 3, c. 23, which is repealed, and do not apply to the present state of the law.

Where, on an indictment for privately stealing in a shop, &c., it appeared that there were several acting together, some in the shop, and some out, for the purpose of assisting those in the shop, and the property was stolen by the hands of one of those who were in the shop:—Held, that those who were on the outside were equally guilty as principals, and equally deprived of clergy. v. Gogerly, R. & R. C. C. 343; 1 Russ. C. 29.

Transportation for life is the proper sentence of persons convicted before the passing of W. 4, c. 62, of offences punishable without act, and sentenced after. Rex v. Lewis, C. R. 372.

XL. STEALING GOODS IN A COURSE OF MANUFACTURE.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 16.]—By the stat. Geo. 4, c. 27, the stat. 22 Car. 2, c. 5, & 5. 3, c. 41, are wholly repealed; and also the whole of the stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 53, except so far as it relates to the stealing of ammunition, &c.

On an indictment on 18 Geo. 2, c. 27, for using calico placed to be printed, &c., in a building made use of by a calico-printer, for printing, &c.:—Held, that in order to support a capital charge, it was necessary to have proved that the building, from which the calico was made use of either for printing or dyeing calico. Rex v. Dickson, R. & R. C. C. 53.

Where, on an indictment on 18 G. 2, c. 27, for stealing yarn out of a bleaching ground, it appeared that the yarn had been spread on the ground, but at the time of the theft was in a building in order to be carried into the house:—Held, as there was no occasion to leave it in that place, it was not within the statute, which uses the words, "laid, placed, or exposed, during the stage, process, or progress of manufacture, in any building, field, or other place." Rex v. Hargrave, 2 Russ. C. & M. 245.

XLI. LARCENY ON NAVIGABLE RIVERS, &c.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 17.]—By the stat. 7 Geo. 4, c. 27, the stat. 24 Geo. 2, c. 45, is wholly repealed; and also the whole of the stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 53, except so far as it relates to stealing ammunition, &c.

An indictment for stealing goods on a navigable river is not satisfied by evidence of a stealing on one of its creeks. Rex v. Pike, 1 Leach, C. C. 317; 2 East, P. C. 647.

XLII. STEALING OR DESTROYING RECORDS, WRITINGS OF REAL ESTATE.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, ss. 21, 22, 23.]—By the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, the stat. 8 Hen. 6, c. 9, is repealed so far as relates to this subject.

A commission to settle the boundaries of a manor is an instrument concerning the real estate and not the subject of larceny at common law. Rex v. Westbeer, 1 Leach, C. C. 13.

Before the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, stealing rolls of parchment was a larceny, though such rolls were the records of a court of justice, unless they concerned the records of the king. Rex v. Walker, R. & M. C. C. R. 1.

but it was not so if they concerned the realty.
Rex v. Westbeer, 2 Str. 1133.

XLIII. STEALING HORSES, CATTLE OR SHEEP.

1. Horse Stealing.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 25; 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 12.]
—The stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, wholly repeals 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 33, and also repeals so much of the stat. 37 Hen. 8, c. 8; 1 Edw. 6, c. 12; and 31 Eliz. c. 12, as relates to the subject.

If a horse be purchased and delivered to the buyer, it is not felony though he immediately ride away with it without paying the purchase money. Rex v. Harvey, 1 Leach, C. C. 467. 2 East, P. C. 669.

Obtaining a horse under the pretext of hiring it for a day, and immediately selling it, is felony, if the jury find the hiring was animo furandi. Rex v. Pear, 1 Leach, C. C. 212. 2 East, P. C. 685, 697. And see Rex v. Tunnard, 2 East, P. C. 687. 1 Leach, C. C. 214, n.

If a thief go to an inn, and, intending to steal a horse, direct the hostler to bring out his horse, pointing to that of the prosecutor, and the hostler, at his desire, lead out the horse for the prisoner to mount: this is a sufficient taking by the prisoner to support an indictment for horse stealing. Rex v. Pitman, 2 C. & P. 423—Garrow.

Where the prisoners having entered a stable at night, and taking out horses, rode them thirty-two miles, and then left them at an inn, and were afterwards found pursuing their journey on foot; and the jury found that they took the horses merely with intent to ride and afterwards leave them, and not to return or make any further use of them:—Held, that this was a trespass and not a larceny. Rex v. Phillips, 2 East, P. C. 662.

If a person stealing other property take a horse, not with the intent to steal it, but only to get off more conveniently with the other property which he had stolen, such taking of the horse is not a felony. Rex v. Crump, 1 C. & P. 658—Garrow.

Foals and fillies were within the stat. 2 & 3 Edw. 6, and are included in the words horse, gelding, or mare:—Held, therefore, that evidence of stealing a mare filly supported an indictment for stealing a mare. Rex v. Welland, R. & R. C. C. 494.

An indictment for horse stealing must give the animal one of the descriptions mentioned in the statute. Therefore an indictment for stealing a colt, not saying whether it was a horse or a mare, was not sufficient to take away clergy, but the prisoner might be convicted of simple larceny. Rex v. Beaney, R. & R. C. C. 416.

A. had agisted his horse with B., and in consequence of hearing of the loss of it, A. went to the field of B., where it was not:—Held to be not sufficient proof of loss to support an indictment for horse stealing. Rex v. Yend. See the case of Rex v. Lewis, ante, tit. LARCENY, div. (4); 6 C. & P.—Gurney.

2. Cattle Stealing.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 25; 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 62.]—By the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 3, c. 27, the stat. 14 Geo. 2, c. 6, and 15 Geo. 2, c. 34, are wholly repealed.

An indictment for stealing a cow cannot be supported by evidence of stealing a heifer. Rex v. Cook, 1 Leach, C. C. 105; 2 East, P. C. 616.

The beast, however old, is a heifer until she has had a calf. Id.

3. Sheep Stealing.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 25; 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 62.]—By the stat. 7 Geo. 4, c. 27, the stat. 14 Geo. 2, c. 6, and 15 Geo. 2, c. 34, are repealed.

An indictment for stealing a sheep is not supported by proof of stealing a ewe, because the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 25, specifies sheep and ewe. Rex v. Puddifoot, M. C. C. 247.

An indictment was for stealing sheep; it appeared in evidence that the animals stolen were lambs:—Held, that the prisoner could not be convicted. Rex v. Loom, R. & M. C. C. R. 168.

If, on an indictment for stealing "one sheep," it appear that the animal stolen was under a year old, the prisoner must be acquitted, as he ought to have been indicted for stealing "one lamb." Rex v. Birket, 1 C. & P. 216—Bolland.

If a ewe is stolen it must be so called in the indictment; and so a lamb must be called a lamb; and the term "sheep" is only proper where the animal stolen is a wether. Id.

An indictment for stealing lambs is sustained by proof that the carcasses were found in the owner's ground, and only the skins taken away. Rex v. Rawlins, 2 East, P. C. 617.

In the case of Rex v. Williams, R. & M. C. C. R. 107, where the prisoner was indicted under the stat. 14 Geo. 2, c. 6, for killing sheep with intent to steal the whole carcass; it was held, that proof of killing with intent to steal part of the carcass is sufficient to support the charge.

Cutting off part of a sheep whilst it is alive with intent to steal such part, will support an indictment for killing with intent to steal part of the carcass, if the cutting off must occasion the sheep's death. Rex v. Clay, R. & R. C. C. 38.

An indictment for stealing a sheep, or any other cattle, must mention or ascribe to it some value, for, unless the value exceeds twelve pence, it would not be a capital offence. Rex v. Post, R. & R. C. C. 407; 2 Russ. C. & M. 171. And see 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 62.

XLIV. OFFENCES RELATING TO DEER.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 26.]—The stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, wholly repeals the stat. 21 Ed. 1, stat. 2; 16 Geo. 3, c. 30; 42 Geo. 3, c. 107, and 51 Geo. 3, c. 120; and also repeals so much of the Carta de Foresta, and of 3 Ed. 1, c. 20, 1 Ed. 3, stat. 1, as relates to this subject.

to destroy them, and makes the beating or wounding the keeper, &c., in the due execution of their office, felony:—Held, that an assistant-keeper has no right to seize the person of one so armed in order to get his gun, without having first demanded his gun; and consequently if such person beat the keeper it was not within the statute, the keeper not being in the due execution of his office. Rex v. Amey, R. & R. C. C. 500.

Upon an indictment for a second offence against 49 Geo. 3, c. 107, by killing deer, objections might have been taken to the conviction for the first offence, that it was not in the proper county, and that it was not correctly stated in the indictment for the second offence. Rex v. Allen, R. & R. C. C. 513.

On an indictment under the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 26, for killing a deer after a previous summary conviction, a conviction by two justices of the previous offence was put in:—Held, that such a conviction was good. This conviction, in stating the offence, did not state the place at which it was committed; but the justices, in awarding the distribution of the penalty, awarded it to the overseers of P., in the said county, "where the said offence was committed":—Held, sufficient. Rex v. Wools, 5 C. & P. 135—Park.

XLV. OFFENCES RELATIVE TO FISH.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 59, s. 34.]—The stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, wholly repeals the stat. 31 Hen. 8, c. 9; 5 Eliz. c. 21; 5 Geo. 3, c. 14, and also repeals 4 W. & M. c. 23; 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 25, so far as they relate to this subject.

Seemle, an indictment on 5 Geo. 3, c. 14, s. 1, for stealing fish out of a river running through an inclosed park, need not have stated the ways, means, or device by which the fish were taken. Rex v. Carredice, R. & R. C. C. 205.

Seemle, that it is no objection in such an indictment to allege the fact to have been done feloniously, although the offence is not a felony, nor so declared by the act. Id.

On an indictment on 5 Geo. 3, c. 14, s. 1, for entering an inclosed park, and taking fish bred, kept, and preserved there, in the river Kent, running through the park, it appeared that the park was walled round, except where the river entered and passed out, and that there were fences to keep in the deer, that there was nothing to keep in the fish, that they were not known to breed there, that nothing was done to stock the river, but that persons were never suffered to angle in the park without leave:—Held, that this was not a place where fish were to be considered as "bred, kept, or preserved" within the meaning of the act. By six judges against two. Rex v. Carredice, R. & R. C. C. 205.

1. Night-poaching.

9 Geo. 4, c. 69.]—By this stat. the stat. 57 Geo. 3, c. 90, is wholly repealed.

It was no answer to a charge on 57 Geo. 3, c. 90, for being found armed in the night in a wood, with intent to kill game, that the prisoners put down their arms and left them before they were seen, if it was perceived that some one was there armed before they were seen. Rex v. Nash, R. & R. C. C. 386; 1 Russ. C. & M. 418.

An indictment on 57 Geo. 3, c. 90, charging a party with having entered into a forest, chase, &c.; with intent to destroy game, and being found armed in the night, must, in some way or other, have particularized the place. By five against three judges. Rex v. Ridley, R. & R. C. C. 515.

On an indictment on 57 Geo. 3, c. 90, for being out armed, with intent to kill game, it appeared that several persons were out with such intent, but only one of them was armed with a gun:—Held, that the rest, who were unarmed, were liable to be convicted under that act. Rex v. Smith, R. & R. C. C. 368; 1 Russ. C. & M. 418.

For if any one of the party is armed it was sufficient to bring the whole party within the statute. Id.

On an indictment on 57 Geo. 3, c. 90, against a person for being found armed in the night, with intent to kill game:—Held, that if several went into a close in the night to kill game, and one has arms without the knowledge of the others, the other persons who are unarmed were not liable to be convicted under the above act. Rex v. Southern, R. & R. C. C. 444; 1 Russ. C. & M. 418.

A person convicted under 57 Geo. 3, c. 90, of being found armed in the night in a forest, chase, park, wood, or plantation, might have been sentenced to hard labour, with imprisonment, by 3 Geo. 4, c. 114, for all those places are either open or inclosed ground. Rex v. Parkhurst, R. & R. C. C. 503.

On an indictment on the 57 Geo. 3, c. 90, for having entered a given close with intent there to kill game, and being there found armed, it is necessary to prove an entry with that intent into the close specified. Rex v. Barham, R. & M. C. C. R. 151.

On an indictment under 57 Geo. 3, c. 90, a man might have been convicted of having entered a wood, and of being found armed there, though he was not seen in such wood. It was sufficient if there were evidence to show that he had been there armed. Rex v. Worker, R. & M. C. C. R. 165. In this case the prisoner was not seen in the wood, but a gamekeeper saw flashes in the wood and heard reports of guns, and saw the prisoner afterwards in the close adjoining the wood.

Where an indictment alleged that A. B., C. & D., on, &c., at, &c., to the number of three and more together, did by night unlawfully enter divers of destroying game:—Held, that it did not contain a sufficient averment that the defendants were by night in the close for the purpose of destroying game, and the judgment given for the crown was reversed on writ of error. Davies v. the King (in error), 10 B. & C. 89; 5 M. & R. 78.

A party out at night, in pursuit of game, carried a thick stick large enough to be called a bludgeon, but which he used at other times as a crutch, he being lame:—Held, that it was a question for the jury whether the prisoner had taken out this stick to use as an offensive weapon, or merely for the purpose to which he usually applied it; and that although it was a weapon within the statute, and might be used offensively, yet, that unless the defendant took it out with an intention of so using it, the indictment could not be sustained. Rex v. Palmer, 2 M. & M. 70—Taunton.

An indictment for night-poaching stated the offence to have been committed in a certain wood, called "the Old Walk of, and belonging to, and then in the occupation of James, Earl of W.;" and it was proved that the occupation was correctly stated, but that the name of the wood was Long Walk, and that it had never been called Old Walk:—Held, a fatal variance. Rex v. Owen, Car. Cr. L. 309; R. & M. C. C. 118.

"A certain cover in the parish of A." is too general a description to sustain an indictment for poaching, under the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 69. Rex v. Crick, 5 C. & P. 508—Vaughan.

A count in an indictment for night-poaching stated, that the prisoners were in a field called A., for the purpose of then and there taking game:—Held, that the prisoners could not be convicted on that count, unless the jury were satisfied that the prisoners had an intention of taking game in that particular field. Rex v. Capewell, 5 C. & P. 549—Parke.

A count for night-poaching may be joined with a count in sect. 2 of the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, for assaulting a gamekeeper authorized to apprehend, and with counts for assaulting a gamekeeper in the execution of his duty, and for a common assault. Rex v. Finscane, 5 C. & P. 551—Parke.

2. Offences relating to Rabbits.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 30.]—The stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, wholly repeals 3 Jac. 1, c. 13; 7 Jac. 1, c. 13, and 5 Geo. 3, c. 14, and also repeals so much of the stat. 23 & 23 Car. 2, c. 25, as relates to this subject.

Taking a rabbit in a wire was sufficient to constitute an offence within the 5 Geo. 3, c. 14, s. 6, though the rabbit was not killed, and though the party never took it away. Rex v. Glover, R. & R. C. C. 969; 2 Ross. C. & M. 189. Dum. Le Blanc.

repealed see Car. C. L. 314, 315.

In the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 30, the words "adjoining any dwelling-house" import actual contact, and therefore ground separated from a house by a narrow walk and paling with a gate in it, is not within their meaning. Rex v. Hogg, 1 M. & M. 341—Park and Parke.

Whether ground be properly described as a garden within that section, is a question for the jury. Id.

The words "plant" and "vegetable production," in sect. 42 of the same statute, do not apply to young fruit trees. Id.

On stat. 6 Geo. 3, c. 36, for stealing plants, it must have been proved that the offence was committed in the night. Rex v. Kemp, 1 Leach, C. C. 222.

XLVIII. STEALING FURNITURE.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 44.]—By the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, the stat. 4 Geo. 2, c. 32, and 3 Geo. 3, c. 68, are wholly repealed.

A window casement was not within the statutes 4 Geo. 2, c. 32, or 21 Geo. 3, c. 68. Rex v. Senior, 1 Leach, C. C. 496; 2 East, P. C. 22.

A church was within the meaning of the words "or other building," in stat. 4 Geo. 2, c. 32. Rex v. Parker, 2 East, P. C. 592; 1 Leach, C. C. 320, n.: 8 P. Rex v. Hickman, 1 Leach, C. C. 318; 2 East, P. C. 593.

Lead images, on pedestals, fixed in the ground near a summer-house, the summer-house being in an inclosed field, (but not within the inclosure as the house), were not within the 4 Geo. 2, c. 32, and consequently an indictment on that statute could not be supported for stealing them. Rex v. Richards, R. & R. C. C. 21.

"A church" was "a building" within the meaning of stat. 4 Geo. 2, c. 32, and an indictment for stealing lead affixed thereto need not have stated the person in whom the property of the freehold resided. Rex v. Hickman, 1 Leach, C. C. 318; 2 East, P. C. 593; 8 P. Rex v. Parker, 2 East, P. C. 592; 1 Leach, C. C. 320, n.

Stealing iron rails from a tomb in a churchyard, not connected by any building to the church, was not within the stat. 4 Geo. 2, c. 32, and 3 Geo. 3, c. 68. Rex v. Davis, 2 East, P. C. 22; 1 Leach, C. C. 496, n.

It is held, that the stealing of brass fixed to tombstones in a churchyard is a felony, under the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 44. Rex v. Maltby, 4 C. & P. 377—Bonanquet.

A person who procured possession of a house under a written agreement between him and the landlord, for a lease of twenty-one years, with a fraudulent intention to steal the fixtures then belonging, was, by stealing the lead affixed to the house, guilty of larceny on stat. 4 Geo. 2, c. 32. Rex v. Munday, 2 Leach, C. C. 839; 2 East, P. C. 594.

Where the yearly tenant of a house had at his own expense, during his term, hung bells, but quitted the premises without removing them:—Held, that by remaining fixed to the freehold after the expiration of the terms, they became the property of the landlord, and that the tenant could not maintain trover after the landlord had secured them from the freehold. Lyde v. Russell, 1 B. & Adol. 394.

XLIX. LARCENY BY TENANTS AND LODGERS.

7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29, s. 45.]—By the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, the stat. 3 Will. & M. c. 9, is wholly repealed.

The cases of Rex v. Bew, R. & R. C. C. 480; Rex v. Goddard, 2 Leach, C. C. 545; Rex v. Burnel, 2 Leach, C. C. 588; 2 East, P. C. 587; Rex v. Healey, 1 R. & M. C. C. 1; Rex v. Pope, 1 Leach, C. C. 336; 2 East, P. C. 587; and Rex v. Hurrell, 1 R. & M. 296, related to the form of the indictment under the stat. 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 9, s. 5, now repealed. The indictment may now be the same as for Larceny, see 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 45.

The case of Rex v. Palmer, 2 Leach, C. C. 680; 2 East, P. C. 586, decided that a tenant stealing goods from a ready-furnished house was not guilty of felony, but that is now regulated by the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 45.

L. LARCENY BY CLERKS AND SERVANTS.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 46.]—By the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, the stat. 33 Hen. 6, c. 1; 21 Hen. 8, c. 7; 5 Eliz. c. 10; and by the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, the stat. 3 Geo. 4, c. 38, are wholly repealed. See EMBEZZLEMENT.

It was no larceny in a servant, either on stat. 21 Hen. 8, c. 7, or at common law, who embezzled money delivered to him to purchase goods with. Rex v. Watson, 2 East, P. C. 562.

But it was afterwards held, that a servant going off with money which his master had given him to carry to another, and applying it to his own use, was guilty of larceny. Rex v. Lavender, 2 East, P. C. 566; 2 Russ. C. & M. 201.

A carter going away with his master's cart was holden a felony. Rex v. Robinson, 2 East, P. C. 565.

One employed as a clerk in the day time, but not residing in the house, embezzled a bill of exchange which he received from his master in the usual course of business, with directions to transmit it by the post to a correspondent:—Held larceny. Rex v. Paradise, 2 East, P. C. 565.

A merchant's or banker's clerk, who purloins money when he is sent to the place of deposit for a special purpose, is as much guilty of felony as if he were not allowed any access whatever to it. Rex v. Murray, 2 East, P. C. 683; 1 Leach, C. C. 344.

A servant clandestinely taking his master's corn, though to give to his master's horses, is guilty of larceny. Rex v. Morfit, R. & R. C. C. 307; 2 Russ. C. & M. 94.

It is larceny for a person hired for the purpose of driving sheep to a fair to convey to his own use, he having the intention at the time of receiving them from the Rex v. Stock, 1 R. & M. C. C. 87.

An indictment charged that A. B., on, &c. the servant of J. H., on the same day, & gold ring, &c., then and there being in the session of the said J. H., and being his goods and chattels, feloniously did steal:—Held, the fair import of the charge was, that A. B. was servant of J. H. at the time when the theft was committed, and that the indictment therefor warranted judgment of transportation for four years. Rex v. Somerton, 7 B. & C. 463.

If a servant, being solicited to become a complice in robbing his master's house, in his master's house, who thereupon tells him to carry on the business, and consents to his opening a door leading to the premises, and with the robbers during the robbery, and marks his property, and lays it in a place where the robbers are expected to come, with a view to apprehend the robbers; this conduct of the servant will not amount to a defence in an indictment against the robbers. Rex v. Egginton, 2 B. & C. 508; S. P. Rex v. Dannelly and Vaughan Marsh, 571.

LI. EMBEZZLEMENT BY CLERKS AND SERVANTS.

1. Of the Offence.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 47.]—By a person in public service, 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 4. The stat. 7 Geo. 4, c. 27, wholly repeals the stat. 39 Geo. 3, c. 85.

A. gave his clerk 5*l.*, out of which he was to pay for an advertisement; he paid 1*l.*, but told him he had paid 2*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.*, and accounted with him accordingly:—Held, no embezzlement; and if in such a case the indictment, besides containing a count for embezzlement, contained a count for a larceny charged to have been committed "in manner and form aforesaid," the prisoner could not be convicted on that count. Rex v. Murray, 5 C. & P. 145.

A female was within the 39 Geo. 3, c. 85, against embezzlement. Rex v. Smith, R. & C. C. 267; 2 Russ. C. & M. 213.

Seem, that the 39 Geo. 3, c. 85, did not apply to cases which were larceny at common law. Rex v. Hedge, 1 R. & R. C. C. 160; 2 Leach, C. C. 1033.

The stat. 39 Geo. 3, c. 85, extended only to such servants as were employed to receive money and to instances in which they received money by virtue of their employment. Rex v. Mellor, R. & R. C. C. 80. Russ. C. & M. 209.

The stat. 39 Geo. 3, c. 85, did not make the crime of embezzlement a new statutory felony, but only made it a larceny. Therefore, an indictment on that statute must have stated what the property embezzled was, as in other cases of larceny; stating that the prisoner took it into his possession by virtue of his employment, or account of his master, was insufficient. Rex v. McGregor, R. & R. C. C. 23; 3 B. & P. 106; 2 Leach, C. C. 932; 2 East, P. C. 576.

Semble, that the crime of embezzlement could not be made a capital felony and ousted of clergy, by laying it to have been committed in a dwelling-house, &c., first, because the money or goods embezzled could not be said to be under the protection of the dwelling-house, &c.; and, next, the statute having enabled the court to pass a heavier sentence than in common cases of larceny, it might be considered as having limited all cases within that line of punishment. Id.

Previously to the passing of stat. 39 Geo. 3, c. 85, if a banker's clerk or cashier, who was intrusted to receive bank-notes and money at the shop counter, instead of putting them into the cash or bill drawer, secreted them and converted them to his own use, it was a mere breach of trust, and not felony; for the property never was in the banker's possession: but such a taking is now felony. Rex v. Bazely, 2 Leach, C. C. 835; 2 East, P. C. 572.

It was not felony by the common law for a cashier of the bank to embezzle an India bond committed to his care, pursuant to the stat. 12 Geo. 1, c. 32. Rex v. Waite, 1 Leach, C. C. 28; 2 East, P. C. 570.

Where a person gave his servant a 5*l.* note to get changed, and the servant got it changed, and made off with the change:—Held, not to be a larceny, but an embezzlement. Rex v. Sullens, Carr. Supp. 319; R. & M. C. C. 129.

A servant in the employment of two persons, as partners, must be considered as the servant of each; and if he embezzle the private money of one, he was chargeable under the stat. 39 Geo. 3, c. 85, as the servant of that individual partner. Rex v. Leech, 3 Stark. 70—Bayley.

So, a person employed as a journeyman miller, and in the habit of receiving money on his master's account. Rex v. Barker, 1 D. & R. N. P. C. 19—Richards.

If a person receive money as steward of another, proof of that circumstance is sufficient evidence of his being a steward, to support an indictment for embezzling that money. Rex v. Beacall, 1 C. & P. 312. And Rex v. Wellings, 454, 457—Park.

Held, by the twelve judges, that if a servant receives money on his employer's account, and embezzles it, he is guilty of a felony, although they had no right to it, and were wrong-doers in receiving it. Id.

So, if the party embezzling be employed as the servant of a corporation, although not duly appointed their servant, even under their common seal. Id.

If a steward receives money for his employer, which the latter would be guilty of an illegal act in receiving, and such money is kept by the steward, and never reaches the master's hands. Quære, whether this is an embezzling of the money of his master? Id.

If a steward, when told by his employer that he has his money in his hands, admits that he had used the money, but offers to pay it over, and the master will not receive it: Quære, whether an indictment for embezzlement will lie? Rex v. Beacall, 1 C. & P. 312. And Rex v. Wellings, 454, 457—Park.

Quære, whether a servant of one body, receiving money for another, and appropriating it to his own use, is thereby guilty of embezzlement? Id.

Quære also, whether, if an act of parliament vests the property of "goods, chattels, furniture, clothing, and debts," in certain persons, the property of money, and securities for money, be in them? Id.

If a clerk receive money for his master, (it being no part of his employment to receive money), and appropriate it to his own use: Quære, whether this be an embezzlement in point of law? Id.

Where a defendant had established a saving bank, consisting of 130 members, each of whom paid a weekly subscription of 2*s.* 1*d.*, the odd penny being paid to the defendant for the trouble of managing the affairs of the bank, the funds of which were to be disposed of once a week by a lottery, consisting of 129 blanks, and one prize amounting to 13*l.*, which was to go to the holder of the fortunate ticket: and the defendant having absconded, after receiving from one of the subscribers deposits to the amount of 10*l.* 8*s.*, without receiving any benefit therefrom:—Held, that the defendant was not indictable under the 3 Geo. 3, c. 63, for embezzling the money as an "agent," or as a person having the possession of money for "safe custody." Rex v. Mason, 1 D. & R. N. P. C. 22—Park.

The stat. 3 Geo. 4, c. 38, s. 2, enacted, "that if any servant shall steal any money from his master, and shall be convicted thereof, and be entitled to the benefit of clergy, he, instead of being subjected to such punishment as may now by law be inflicted upon persons so convicted, and entitled to benefit of clergy, shall be transported for fourteen years:"—Held, that a servant convicted of petit larceny was not within the meaning of the statute, and that he was subject to be transported for seven years only. Rex v. Ellis, 5 B. & C. 35.

A clerk who received six bank-notes on his master's account, in payment of a particular debt, made a false entry in his master's book, with a fraudulent intent to conceal the payment of the sum, but afterwards paid to the master the identical notes which he received, applying them to his account, to another debt received by him from his master:—Held, that he was guilty of a felonious embezzlement, in respect of these six notes. Rex v. Hall, 3 Stark. 67—Bayley.

Where a servant was entrusted by his master to receive money for him in the county of A, which he was to bring to him in the county of B the same day, and after such receipt, instead of proceeding with the money directly, he hid it on the road till the day following, and when he got home denied having received the money:—Held, that such denial was evidence to show that his original receipt in A. was with intent to secrete and embezzle, and so to steal the money within 39 Geo. 3, c. 85, and consequently the the trial might be had in A. Rex v. Hobson, 1 East, P. C. Add. xxiv.; 2 Leach, C. C. 975; R. & R. C. C. 56.

Quære, if a servant receive money from his master to pay J. C., and does not pay it, whether he can be indicted for embezzlement? Rex v. Smith, R. R. C. C. 267; 2 Russ. C. M. 213.

Semble, not. Rex v. Peck, 2 Russ. C. & M. 213.

Where, on an indictment for embezzlement, it appeared that the servant received the money from her master to pay J. C., but did not pay:—Held, that as the fact of the money not having been paid to J. C. was not evidence of actual embezzlement, it only negatived the application of the money in the manner directed. Id.

Where the prosecutor gave the prisoner, his servant, a five-pound note to get changed, which he did, and made off with the change:—Held, that it was an embezzlement and not a larceny. Rex v. Sullens, Car. C. L. 319.

If a servant, to whom goods have been delivered by his master to carry to a customer, sell them and convert the money to his own use, he is guilty of felony; for the possession is not out of the master by such delivery. Rex v. Bass, 1 Leach, C. C. 251; 2 East, P. C. 566, 698.

Where the owner of a colliery employed the prisoner, as captain of one of his barges, to carry out and sell coal, and paid him for his labour by allowing him two-thirds of the price for which he sold the coals above the price charged at the colliery:—Held, that the prisoner was a servant within the meaning of 39 Geo. 3, c. 85; and having embezzled the price, he was guilty of larceny within the meaning of that act. Rex v. Hartley, R. & R. C. C. 139; 2 Russ. C. & M. 209.

By 24 Geo. 3, c. 15, (local act,) certain inhabitants, in seven parishes, are incorporated by the name of "The Guardians of the Poor of these Parishes," twelve directors are to be appointed out of the guardians, and the property belonging to the corporation is vested in "the directors for the time being," who are to execute the powers of the act. The prisoner was indicted for embezzling the moneys of "the directors of the poor of the said parishes:"—Held, that the moneys should have been laid as "the moneys of the guardians of the poor," by their corporate name, or of the directors for the time being in their individual names. Rex v. Beacall, 1 R. & M. C. C. 15; 2 Russ. C. & M. 166.

If a servant secrete moneys which his master has marked and sent by a friend to make a purchase at his shop, with a view to try the honesty of his servant, it is a felonious breach of trust, and an embezzling within the 39 Geo. 3, c. 85, and not a larceny at common law. Rex v. Hedge, 2 Leach, C. C. 1033; R. & R. C. C. 160.

If a servant embezzled money received from a customer, to whom his master had given it for the purpose of trying the servant's honesty, it was an offence within 39 Geo. 3, c. 85. Rex v. Whittingham, 2 Leach, C. C. 912.

A clerk, entrusted to receive money at from out-door collectors, received it abroad out-door customers:—Held, that such a use of money might be considered, "by virtue of employment," within the 39 Geo. 3, c. 85, though it was beyond the limits to which I authorized to receive money for his employment. Rex v. Beechey, R. & R. C. C. 319; 2 R. & M. 211.

If a banker's clerk be sent to the money for money on a particular occasion, and he has that opportunity of secreting money for his use, he is guilty of felony. Rex v. Mur Leach, C. C. 344; 2 East, P. C. 683.

It is felony for the confidential clerk of a merchant to take a bill of exchange, unwind from the bill box, and convert it to his own use, although he was in the habit of transacting cash concerns of the house from week to week, as it had not been delivered to him for that purpose by his employer, it is a tortious taking from the possession of the master. Rex v. Chase, 2 Leach, C. C. 699; 2 East, P. C. 56.

An apprentice could not be convicted of 39 Geo. 3, c. 85, for embezzling money received from his master's account, if it did not appear in evidence that the prisoner received the money in question, or was employed to receive money from his master, by virtue of his employment. R. v. Mellish, R. & R. C. C. 80; 2 Russ. C. & M. 209.

It was the duty of a clerk to receive moneys daily at N., to enter all such moneys so received in a book, and to remit the amount weekly to L. His entries were all correct, and admitted receipt of all the moneys; but he did not remit them to L., as was his duty:—Held, no embezzlement. Rex v. Hodgson, 3 C. & P. 45; Vaughan.

If a servant received money for his master to make an article made of his master's material, it was not an offence within the 39 Geo. 3, c. 85, if he embezzled the money, although he made the article and was to have a given proportion of the price for making it. Rex v. Hoggins, R. & R. C. C. 145; 2 Russ. C. & M. 210.

A person employed upon commission to travel for orders and collect debts, was a clerk within the 39 Geo. 3, c. 85, and might have been indicted on that statute for embezzlement, although he was employed by many different houses on each journey, and paid his own expenses out of his commission on each journey, and did not interfere with any of his employers, nor act in any of the counting-houses. Rex v. Carr, R. & R. C. C. 198; 2 Russ. C. & M. 209.

A man was sufficiently a servant within the 39 Geo. 3, c. 85, although he is only occasionally employed when he has nothing else to do. R. v. Spencer, R. & R. C. C. 299; 2 Russ. C. & M. 210.

And it is sufficient, if he was employed to receive the money he embezzled, although receiving the money may not be in his usual employment.

for his master, enters a smaller sum in his master's books, and ultimately accounts to his master for the smaller sum, he may be considered as embezzling the difference at the time he makes the entry, and it will make no difference though he received other sums for his master on the same day, and in paying those and the smaller sum to his master together he might give his master every piece of money or note he received at the time he made the false entry. Rex v. Hall, R. & R. C. C. 463; 2 Stark. 57; 2 Russ. C. & M. 216.

If a bank clerk, employed in taking account of paid notes, embezzle a paid note which he finds on the file not properly cancelled, and utters it for his own use, he might have been indicted on 15 Geo. 2, c. 13, for having embezzled certain effects belonging to the bank. Rex v. Babwell, 2 Leach, C. C. 943; R. & R. C. C. 35.

A banker's clerk taking money from the till, intending to embezzle it, is guilty of felony, although the check of a customer is left in lieu of it, if that customer has really no cash in the banker's hands, though both he and the banker may suppose he has, and if the check is drawn by the customer, not to pledge his own credit with the bank, or draw out money of his own, but to draw out money the prisoner falsely pretends to have in his name. Rex v. Henson, R. & R. C. C. 321; 2 Leach, C. C. 1063; 4 Taunt. 304.

If a servant generally employed by his master to receive sums of one description, and at one place only, is employed by him in a particular instance to receive a sum of a different description and at a different place, this latter sum was to be considered as received by him by virtue of his employment, within the meaning of 30 Geo. 2, c. 35. Rex v. Smith, R. & R. C. C. 516; 2 Russ. C. & M. 211.

A person received the sum of 7l. 2s. 6d. in his capacity of clerk to overseers, &c., and made an entry in a book of the receipt of that sum accordingly, and placed the money with other sums in his possession; the entry of 7l. 2s. 6d. was afterwards erased, and the sum of 5l. 6s. 10d. substituted for it, and the prisoner only accounted to the parish officers for 5l. 6s. 10d. On an indictment for embezzling 1l. 15s. 7d., and conviction thereon:—Held, that as the prisoner might have paid over the whole of what he received for the 7l. 12s. 6d. and have taken the 1l. 15s. 7d. from other moneys he received, he was improperly convicted. Rex v. Tyers, R. & R. C. C. 408; 2 Russ. C. & M. 215.

Where overseers of a township employed a person as their accountant and treasurer, and he receive and pay all the money receivable or payable on their account; and he receives a sum and embezzles it:—Held, that he was a clerk and servant within 30 Geo. 3, c. 35. Rex v. Squire, R. & R. C. C. 349; 2 Stark. 348.

A. was employed to lead a stallion, and he was to charge 30s. a mare, and not take less than 20s.

v. Sweeney, 4 H. & P. 296—Latham and Parke.

If a clerk receive money from his master to pay away on his master's account, and to set in his accounts that one of the payments was a greater amount than it really was, this is an embezzlement. Rex v. Murray, 5 C. & P. 145—Twelve Judges.

Where an indictment for embezzlement will not be supported because the offence is not an embezzlement but a larceny, and the jury count stated the larceny to have been committed "in manner and form aforesaid":—Held, that the prisoner could not be convicted. Rex v. Murray, 5 C. & P. 145; M. C. C. 974.

One who was employed at a yearly salary under the appellation of accountant and treasurer to the overseers of a township, whose duty it was to receive all moneys receivable or payable by them, was a clerk and servant within 30 Geo. 2, c. 35. Rex v. Squire, 2 Stark. 348—Fry.

Embezzlement by one who is neither clerk nor servant, nor in any respect under the control of the person by whom he is in a single instance only requested to receive moneys, is not punishable under the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 39, s. 4, if he does not come within the description of clerk or servant, or a person employed for the purpose, or in the capacity of a clerk or a servant. Rex v. Nettleton, R. & M. C. C. R. 238.

Embezzlement of money by a servant not authorized to receive it, is not within 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 39, s. 47. Rex v. Thorley, M. C. C. R. 362.

A servant may be found guilty of embezzlement, though he is not a general servant, and is employed to receive in a single instance only. Rex v. Hughes, M. C. C. R. 370.

A person employed to collect the offertory money from the communicants is not the servant of the minister, churchwardens, or parson, so as to be within the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 39, s. 4, if he embezzles the money. Rex v. Burt, R. & M. C. C. R. 237.

The prisoner had worked for the prisoner sometimes as a regular labourer and sometimes as a roundman; but, at the time in question, he was not being at all in the prosecutor's service, he was sent by the prosecutor to get a check made at a banker's, for doing which he was to be paid sixpence. He got the cash, and made off:—Held, no embezzlement, as the prisoner was not a servant of the prosecutor within the meaning of the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 39, s. 47. Rex v. Freeman, 5 C. & P. 538—Parke.

Exchequer bills purchased by the bank for a good consideration, but signed in the name of the auditor of the exchequer by a person not legally authorized, were securities, or at least of fact, within the meaning of the 15 Geo. 2, c. 11, s. 12; and if a servant of the bank embezzled such bills, he might be convicted of felony under that statute. Rex v. Adair, 1 H. R. 1.

son, R. & R. C. C. 56; 1 East, P. C. Add. xxiv.; 2 Leach, C. C. 975.

Where a servant was indicted on 39 Geo. 3, c. 85, for embezzling his master's money, and the indictment was laid in the county of S., a denial by the servant when in the county of B., of his having received money in the county of S., was held to be evidence to show that the receipt in the county of S. was with intent to embezzle within that statute, and therefore that the trial was properly in the county of S. Rex v. Hobson, R. & R. C. C. 56; 1 East, P. C. Add. xxiv.; 2 Leach, C. C. 975.

If a servant receive moneys in one county for the use and on account of his master, who lives in another county, and does not account for it to his master, the offence of embezzling the money may be laid to have been committed in the county in which his master lives. Rex v. Taylor, 2 Leach, C. C. 974; 3 B. & P. 596; R. & R. C. C. 63.

Even if there is evidence of the prisoner having spent the money in the county of A., it will not necessarily confine the trial of the offence to the county of A. Id.

If a servant receive money for his master in the county of A., and, being called upon to account for it in the county of B., there deny the receipt of it, he may be indicted for the embezzlement in the latter county. Rex v. Taylor, 3 B. & P. 596.

3. Particular of Charges.

If a prisoner, indicted for embezzlement, does not know the specific acts of embezzlement intended to be charged against him, he should apply to a prosecutor for a particular of the charges; and if it be refused, the judge will, on motion supported by proper affidavits, grant an order for such particular to be given, and postpone the trial, if necessary. Such particular ought at least to state the persons from whom money is alleged to have been received. Rex v. Hodgson, 3 C. & P. 422—Vaughan. S. P. Rex v. Bootyman, 5 C. & P.—Littledale.

LII. EMBEZZLEMENT BY AGENTS.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 49.]—The stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, wholly repeals the stat. 52 Geo. 3, c. 63.

The statute of the 52 Geo. 3, c. 63, for preventing the embezzlement of securities by agents, &c., applied only to persons to whom such securities, &c., were entrusted in the exercise of their function or business. Rex v. Prince, 2 C. & P. 517—Abbott.

If a stockbroker receive bank-notes for the check of his principal, and be directed to invest their whole amount in exchequer bills, but, instead of so doing, only applies part to that purpose, and runs away fraudulently with the remainder, he cannot be indicted for stealing the check, for that was delivered to and applied by him as the drawer of it intended; nor the bank-notes, for they were never in the possession of the prosecutor. Rex v. Walsh, 2 Leach, C. C. 1054; 4 Taunt. 258; R. & R. C. C. 215.

A. placed valuable securities in the hands of B., with a written direction to invest the proceeds in the funds, "in case of any unexpected accident happening to A." No accident did happen to A., and the proceeds were by B. converted to his own use:—Held, that B. was not indictable under the stat. 52 Geo. 3, c. 63, (now repealed); and it seems that he would not be so under the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 49. Rex v. White, 4 C. & P. 46—Tenterden.

An allegation in an indictment, that A. placed valuable securities in the hands of B., "with an order in writing to invest the proceeds in the government funds," is not supported by proof of an order in writing, directing B. to invest the proceeds in the government funds, in case of any unexpected accident happening to A. Id.

LIII. FALSE PRETENCES AND CHEATS.

1. The Offence.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 53.]—The stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, wholly repeals the stat. 33 Hen. 8, c. 1, and 52 Geo. 3, c. 64; and also repeals so much of the stat. 30 Geo. 2, c. 24, as relates to this subject; and so much of the hard labour act, 3 Geo. 4, c. 114, as relates to hard labour for this offence; but this last is in effect re-enacted in the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29.

Where a false pretence was contained in a letter which was lost, the prisoner may be convicted, if parol evidence be given of the contents of the letter. Rex v. Chadwick, 6 C. & P.—Tindal.

It is an indictable offence if two effect a cheat by means of one pretending to be a merchant and the other a broker, and as such bartering pretended wines for hats. Rex v. Macarty, 1 East, P. C. 823.

Knowingly exposing to sale and selling wrought gold under the sterling alloy, as and for gold of the true standard weight, which is indictable in a goldsmith, is a private imposition only in a common person. Rex v. Bower, Cowp. 323.

Delivering less beer in a cask than contracted for as the due quantity is not an indictable offence. Rex v. Wheatley, 1 W. Black. 273; 1 Burr. 1129.

Nor is delivering less oats than the quantity contracted for as the due quantity. Rex v. Damage, 2 Burr. 1130.

But pretending to have been entrusted by one to take his horses from Ireland to London, and to have been detained by contrary winds till all his money was expended, was held to be within 30 Geo. 2, c. 24. Rex v. Villeneuve, 2 East, P. C. 830.

Obtaining the goods of a tradesman under a false pretence of being sent for them to show a customer is fraud, and not felony. Rex v. Cartwaine, 1 Leach, C. C. 498.

To have constituted an offence within the 30

Geo. 2, c. 24, money or goods must have been obtained by a false pretence with an intention to defraud; but the pretence might have related to a future transaction, [see Rex v. Goodhall, post, p. 774]: and if made by one in the presence of, and in concert with, others, they may be all included jointly in the same indictment. Rex v. Young, 1 Leach, C. C. 505; 2 East, P. C. 828, 833; 3 T. R. 98.

Bank-notes were not money, goods, wares, &c., within the meaning of 30 Geo. 2, c. 24. Rex v. Hill, R. & R. C. C. 190. But see the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 53, which extends 30 Geo. 2, c. 24, to persons obtaining, by false pretences, any valuable security.

To obtain goods by false pretences from the servant of the owner, to whom they were delivered for the purpose of being carried to a customer, who had purchased them, is a taking from the possession of the master; and if so taken, with a preconcerted design to steal them, amounts to felony. Rex v. Wilkins, 1 Leach, C. C. 520; 2 East, P. C. 673.

A workman, employed by clothiers, was to keep an account of the number of shearmen employed, and the amount of their earnings and wages, which he was weekly to deliver to a clerk, in writing, who paid him to the amount; he delivered in a false account, charging for more work, and of other men, than was actually done, by which he obtained a larger sum than was actually due:—Held, that it was obtaining money under false pretences, within stat. 30 Geo. 2, c. 24, because without the false pretence he would not have obtained the credit, and is not like a case of money paid generally on account. Rex v. Witchell, 2 East, P. C. 830.

It is a false pretence if a carrier obtain the carriage-money by pretending to have delivered the goods and lost the bailee's receipt for them. Rex v. Airey, 2 East, P. C. 831; 2 East, 30.

If a prisoner, by false pretences, obtain a check on a banker on unstamped paper, payable to D. F. J., and not payable to bearer, it is not an obtaining a valuable security by false pretences. Rex v. Yates, Car. C. L. 333; R. & M. C. C. 170.

There may be a sufficient false pretence within 30 Geo. 2, c. 24, by the acts and conduct of the party, without any verbal representations of a false and fraudulent nature. Rex v. Freeth, R. & R. C. C. 127.

The fact of uttering a counterfeit note as a genuine one is tantamount to a representation that it was so; and it is a false pretence, notwithstanding the note upon the face of it would have been good for nothing in point of law, even if true. (Diss. Lawrence, J., who thought that the party taking it was not cheated if he parted with his goods for a piece of paper, which he must be presumed in law to know was worth nothing, if true.) Rex v. Freeth, R. & R. C. C. 127.

It was a false pretence within stat. 30 Geo. 2, c. 24, s. 1, where the prisoner obtained money, from the keeper of a post-office, by assuming to be the person mentioned in a money order, which he presented for payment, though he did not make any false declaration, or assertion, in order to obtain the money. Rex v. Story, R. C. C. 81.

Where a man pretending to be the servant of a person who had bought a chest of tea, deposited at the company's warehouse, got a request and permit for the chest, and took it away with the assent of a person in the East India company's service, who had the charge of it:—to be felony. Rex v. Hench, R. & R. C. C. 2 Russ. C. & M. 120.

If a banker's clerk tell a customer of the fact that he has paid in money on his account, thereby induces the customer to give him a draft for the amount, which he receives the money, and afterwards makes fictitious entries in his books, to prevent a discovery of the transaction, it is a felonious taking of the money from the banker, without his consent, and not an obtaining of it under false pretence. Rex v. Hamlyn, 2 Leach, C. C. 1083; 4 Taunt. 304.

A person who, under mere false pretences, purchases lottery tickets, bargains with the holder of them, and obtains the delivery of them by giving a draft on a banker, with whom he has no cash, for the amount of them, is not guilty of a fraud at common law; for, in order to constitute this offence, the property must be obtained either by conspiracy, or by means of a false token as well as a false pretence, and as in this case, by a mere false assertion, or naked lie. Rex v. Lara, 2 Leach, C. C. 65; 2 East, P. C. 819, 827; 6 T. R. 565.

If the owner of goods has been induced to part with them by a fraudulent representation, it is not felony in the person so obtaining them. Rex v. Adams, R. & R. C. C. 225; 2 Russ. C. & M. 160.

If there is a plan to cheat a man of his property, under colour of a bet, and he parts with possession only to deposit as a stake with one of the confederates; the taking by such confederates is felonious. Rex v. Robson, R. & R. C. C. 413; 2 Russ. C. & M. 123.

To obtain property from another by the practice of ring-dropping is felony, if the property was obtained under a preconceived design to defraud. Rex v. Patch, 1 Leach, C. C. 238; 2 East, P. C. 678; S. P. Rex v. Marsh, 1 Leach, C. C. 3.

A person who induces another to deliver bank-notes to him, by the practice of ring-dropping, on a condition that if he do not restore them in a time, the entire value of the ring shall be paid to the person delivering the notes, is guilty of felony; for, although the possession in the notes is parted with, the property still remains in the owner. Rex v. Watson, 2 Leach, C. C. 3; 2 East, P. C. 680.

To aid and assist a person to the jurors known, to obtain money by the practice of ring-dropping, is felony, if the jury find that the person was confederating with the person unknown to obtain the money by means of this practice. Rex v. Moore, 1 Leach, C. C. 314; 2 East, P. C. 679.

A pretence that a person would do an act and 30 Geo. 2, c. 24, s. 1. Rex v. Goodwin, R. & R. C. C. 461; 2 Ross. C. & M. 300.

A pretence to a parish officer, as an excuse for not working, that the party has not clothes, when he really has, although it induces the officer to give him clothes, was not obtaining goods by false pretences within the meaning of 30 Geo. 2, c. 24. Rex v. Wabbling, R. & R. C. C. 504.

The offence of obtaining money under false pretences, created by 30 Geo. 2, c. 24, was complete only where the money is obtained. Rex v. Battery, cited in Pearson v. McGowan, 5 D. & R. 616; 3 B. & C. 700.

Where a misdemeanour consists of different parts, so much of the charge as amounts to a misdemeanour in law must be proved in the venue county. Id.

To constitute an offence within stat. 30 Geo. 2, c. 24, money or goods must have been obtained by the defendant by a false pretence with intent to defraud; and it was no objection that the pretence consists in a representation as of some transaction to take place at a future time. Young v. Rex (in error), 3 T. R. 98. But see Rex v. Goodhall, supra.

An indictment will lie for fraudulently obtaining goods under pretence of a treaty of marriage. Anon. Loft, 148.

But not for a mere case of deceit. Rex v. Cornbrune, 1 Wils. 301.

If one professes to sell an interest in property, and receives the purchase-money, the vendee taking the usual covenant for title, and it turns out that the vendor has in fact previously sold his interest in the property to a third person, this is not sufficient to support an indictment for obtaining money by false pretences. Rex v. Codrington, 1 C. & P. 661—Littledale.

Obtaining goods by means of a check which the party knows will not be paid is an indictable offence. Rex v. Jackson, 3 Camp. 370—Bayley.

A person is not indictable at common law for obtaining lottery tickets under false pretences where he had drawn a draft on a banker which he knew would not be paid, as this is not a false token. Rex v. Lava, 6 T. R. 565.

Selling goods to a customer who did not like them, and then making a conditional sale to another person, and not returning the money, was not an offence within the 30 Geo. 2, c. 24, against obtaining money under false pretences. Anon. Loft, 371.

Obtaining credit in account from the party's own banker, by drawing a bill on a person on whom the party has no right to draw, and which has no chance of being paid, is not a false pretence within the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 53, though the banker pays money for him in consequence to an extent that he would not otherwise have done. Rex v. Wesell, R. & M. C. C. R. 224.

2. Indictment.

An indictment for a fraud at common law, on a different person, is not. Rex v. Lamb, 1 Leach, C. C. 647; 2 East, P. C. 819, 821; 17 R. 565.

An indictment charging the defendant with obtaining money by false pretences is insufficient if it do not show what the false pretences were; and if the defendant be convicted, the court will reverse the judgment. Rex v. Hunt, 1 T. R. 581.

An indictment on 30 Geo. 2, c. 24, for obtaining money by false pretences, need not be supported by special averment the truth of the pretences; it is not enough to charge that the defendant falsely pretended, &c., setting forth the pretences, by means of which said false pretences he obtained the money, &c.; therefore, for want of such averment in the indictment, the court reversed the judgment. Rex v. Perrell, 22 L. J. 379.

An indictment for a fraud in obtaining money under false pretences must state what the pretences were by which the fraud was effected. Rex v. Mason, 1 Leach, C. C. 487; 2 East, P. C. 837; 2 T. R. 581.

On an indictment for delivering in payment for a horse certain promissory notes, as legal and available promissory notes, which the prisoner knew to be not good, nor of any value, the notes purported to be the notes of a country bank which was supposed to have failed:—Held, that it was necessary to prove that the notes were bad, and of no value. Rex v. Pinn, 2 L. J. C. C. 460.

Indictment for false pretences, in passing a note of a bank that had stopped payment on a good note. The prisoner knew that the bank had stopped payment; but it appeared that only one of the partners of the bank had been bankrupt, and that the third had not:—Held, that the prisoner must be acquitted. Rex v. Spencer, 3 C. & P. 420—Gaskell.

Upon an indictment for obtaining money under false pretences, it is not necessary to prove the whole of the pretence charged, proof of part of the pretence, and that the money was obtained by such part, is sufficient. Rex v. Hill, 2 L. J. C. C. 190; 2 Ross. C. & M. 311.

Where an indictment charged the defendant with obtaining, by false pretences, money, the property of A., and it appeared that the money belonged to A.'s servant, who was afterwards reimbursed by his master; the variance was held fatal. Rex v. Douglas, 1 Camp. 313—Elph.

Unless the servant had at that time a sum belonging to his master in his hands.

If an indictment against a prisoner, for attempting to obtain money under false pretences, charge it to have been attempted by means of a paper writing purporting to be an order for money, and the instrument cannot be produced as stated in the indictment to be such an order, it is bad. Rex v. Cartwright, R. & R. C. C. 166.

In an indictment for obtaining goods by false pretences, it is unnecessary to aver that the defendant did knowingly and designedly pretend, &c.; it is sufficient to state that the defendant knowingly and designedly did obtain the goods by means of the false pretences. Rex v. Howorth, 3 Stark. 26—Best.

In an indictment on the stat. 30 Geo. 2, c. 24, for obtaining money on false pretences, it was sufficient to allege that the defendant unlawfully, knowingly, and designedly pretended so and so, by means of which said false pretences he obtained the money; afterwards negating such pretences to be true; though it were not in terms alleged that he falsely pretended, &c.; and it seems that it would have been sufficient to have alleged that he obtained the money by such and such pretences, averring such pretences to be false. Rex v. Airey, 2 East, 30. And see Rex v. Fuller, 1 B. & P. 184.

An indictment on that statute averred, that the defendant pretended that he had paid a certain sum of money into the Bank, and it appeared that he merely said the money had been paid at the Bank:—Held, that the variance was fatal. Rex v. Plestow, 1 Camp. 494—Ellenborough.

So, where the indictment charged the defendant with obtaining the money of the prosecutor, and it appeared that the money belonged to his servant, who was afterwards reimbursed by the prosecutor, the variance was held fatal. Rex v. Douglas, 1 Camp. 213—Ellenborough.

Where the pretence is conveyed by words spoken by one defendant in the presence of others who are acting in concert together, they may be all indicted jointly. Young v. Rex (in error), 3 T. R. 98.

LIV. TAKING REWARDS FOR RETURN OF STOLEN GOODS.

See PRINCIPAL AND ACCESSORY.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 58.]—By the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, the stat. 21 Hen. 8, c. 11, is wholly repealed.

Quære, whether a person who received money as a reward for helping another to stolen goods could be prosecuted on stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 1, s. 4, where the principal offender was dead, and therefore had never been convicted? Rex v. Drinkwater, 1 Leach, C. C. 15; 2 East, P. C. 770.

It was an offence within 4 Geo. 1, c. 11, s. 4, to take money under pretence of helping a man to goods stolen from him, though the prisoner had no acquaintance with the felon, and did not pretend that he had, and though he had no power to apprehend the felon, and though the goods were never restored, and the prisoner had not power to restore them. Rex v. Ledbitter, R. & M. C. C. 76.

LV. RESTITUTION OF GOODS.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 57.]—The stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, wholly repeals the stat. 4 Geo. 1, c. 11, except as to piracy; and stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, wholly repeals the stat. 1 Geo. 4, c. 115.

VOL. I.

4 Y

The stat. 21 Hen. 8, c. 11, which restored goods to a prosecutor on conviction of the person who took them away, extended only to a felonious and not to a fraudulent taking. Rex v. De Veaux, 2 Leach, C. C. 585; 2 East, P. C. 789; 839. By 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, a power of restitution was given where goods were obtained by any misdemeanour against that act.

LVI. RECEIVERS.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 45, 55, 56 & 76.]—The stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, wholly repeals the stats. 3 Will. & M. c. 9; 4 Geo. 2, c. 32; 25 Geo. 2, c. 10; 29 Geo. 2, c. 30; 5 Geo. 3, c. 14; 6 Geo. 3, c. 36; 10 Geo. 3, c. 48; 21 Geo. 3, c. 68; 21 Geo. 3, c. 69; 22 Geo. 3, c. 58; 51 Geo. 3, c. 41, and 3 Geo. 4, c. 24; and also repeals so much of the stats. 31 Eliz. c. 12; 1 Anne, st. 1, c. 9; 6 Anne, 31; vulgo, 5 Anne, c. 31; 4 Geo. 1, c. 11; 3 Geo. 4, c. 114, as relates to this subject.

It was not felony to receive bank-notes knowing them to have been stolen. Rex v. Sadi, 1 Leach, C. C. 468; 2 East, P. C. 748. But see 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 54.

The case of Rex v. King, 2 C. & P. 412, was on the 3 Geo. 4, c. 24, and is not applicable to the present state of the law.

A prisoner committed for knowingly receiving part of the cargo of a ship in the Thames was not entitled to be bailed; for the offence is felony, though it was not expressed so to be in the stat. 2 Geo. 3, c. 28. Rex v. Wyer, 1 Leach, C. C. 480; 2 East, P. C. 763; 2 T. R. 77.

Persons receiving goods belonging to a vessel in the Thames, knowing them to have been stolen, might be prosecuted for felony under 2 Geo. 3, c. 28. Id.

A receiver may be indicted for receiving goods stolen by persons unknown. Rex v. Thomas, 2 East, P. C. 781; S. P. Rex v. Baxter, 2 East, P. C. 781; 5 T. R. 33; 2 Leach, C. C. 578.

If the prisoner at different times receive property stolen from the prosecutor, although the substantive charge must be confined to some one receiving, yet the other receivings may be given in evidence to show a guilty knowledge that the goods were stolen. Rex v. Dunn, Car. C. L. 132; R. & M. C. C. 146.

A receiver, in the case of a sheep feloniously stolen alive, and killed, should be stated to have received mutton. Rex v. Cowell, 2 East, P. C. 617.

In an indictment for felony against a receiver of stolen goods, it is sufficient to state that the principal was "tried and duly convicted," without going on to show that judgment was passed upon him, or how he was delivered. Rex v. Hyman, 2 Leach, C. C. 925; 2 East, P. C. 782.

And an erroneous attainder against a principal is sufficient as against an accessory, until it is reversed. Rex v. Baldwin, 2 Leach, C. C. 928, n.; R. & R. C. C. 241; 3 Camp. 265.

On an indictment against a receiver of stolen goods after conviction of the principal, it is no objection to the record of conviction of the principal, that it appear therein that the principal was asked if he was (not is) guilty; that it does not state that issue was joined, or how the jurors were returned; and that the only award against the principal is that he be in mercy, &c. Id.

An indictment for a misdemeanour on 22 Geo. 3, c. 58, against a receiver of stolen goods, need not have averred that the principal had not been convicted. Rex v. Baxter, 2 Leach, C. C. 578; 2 East, P. C. 781; 5 T. R. 33.

In an indictment against a receiver of stolen goods for a misdemeanour, it was not necessary to aver that the principal had not been convicted. Rex v. Baxter, 5 T. R. 83.

An indictment against a receiver of stolen goods must aver the guilty knowledge, which is the gist of the offence, correctly; an indictment which contained a defective statement that the receiver knew the goods to have stolen, omitting the word "been," was thought bad. Rex v. Kernon, 2 Russ. C. & M. 259.

A receiver of stolen goods may be tried for the misdemeanour, though the prosecutor might have taken the principal, but neglected so to do. Rex v. Wilkes, 4 Leach, C. C. 103; 2 East, P. C. 746. But see the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 54.

A. and B. were indicted; A. for stealing six bank-notes of 100l. each, and B. for receiving "the said notes," knowing them to have been stolen. A. stole the six 100l. notes, and got them changed into 20l. notes, some of which B. received:—Held, that B. could not be convicted on this indictment. Rex v. Walkley, 4 C. & P. 132—Taddy.

If an indictment against a receiver state the principal felony to have been committed by A. B., whatever would have been evidence of the principal felony to convict A. B. is receivable to prove this allegation on the trial of the receiver, but is not conclusive. Therefore, if A. B. confessed the principal felony, that confession is admissible on the trial of the receiver, to prove the commission of the principal felony. Rex v. Blick, 4 C. & P. 377—Bosanquet.

If two are charged jointly with receiving stolen goods, a joint act of receiving must be proved. Proof that one received in the absence of the other, and afterwards delivered to him, will not suffice. Rex v. Messingham, R. & M. C. C. R. 257.

[The following points are in the marginal note, but do not appear at all in the case itself:—Successive receivers are all separate receivers, and all punishable. Quære, whether, upon a charge of receiving from T. S., the receiving from T. S. must be proved, the statute making it criminal to receive without regard to the person from whom received?]

The case of Rex v. Solomons, M. C. C. R. 292, was decided on the stat. 3 Geo. 4, c. 24, s. 8, which was repealed by the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, and does not apply to the present state of the law.

A count for a substantive felony in receiving stolen goods, which charged that the goods were stolen by "a certain evil-disposed person," is good. Rex v. Jervis, 6 C. & P. 156—Tindal.

LVII. OFFENCES BY BANKRUPTS.

1 Geo. 4, c. 115; 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, ss. 99 & 112.] —By the stat. 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, the stat. 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, and a number of other acts relating to bankrupts, are repealed.

On an indictment against a bankrupt for concealing his effects, if the evidence is, that the bankrupt on his last examination stated that a book given in by him contained an account of all his effects, it is incumbent on the prosecutor to produce the book or account for it, that it may be seen whether that book mentions the property or not. Rex v. Evans, 1 R. & M. C. C. 70.

If an indictment against a bankrupt for concealing property, in stating the property, does not sufficiently specify particular parts of it, though it may sufficiently specify others, and those specified may be of the necessary value, the indictment will be bad, because the statement as to the part specified tends to embarrass the prisoner. Rex v. Forsyth, R. & R. C. C. 274.

Seem, that if an indictment against a bankrupt for concealing property has an averment that notice of bankruptcy was put in the Gazette, such averment may be proved by the production of the Gazette, without proof of its being bought of the Gazette printer, or where it came from. Id.

An indictment against a bankrupt for secreting his effects should show that the commission was duly issued, as well as that it was awarded. Rex v. Frith, 1 Leach, C. C. 10.

Where a bankrupt surrendered to his commission, and at the time of such surrender refused to answer particular questions concerning his property, but took the oath, and assigned, as his reason for not answering, that he intended to dispute the commission; the refusal to answer such question would not have been a capital offence within the 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, s. 1. Rex v. Page, R. & R. C. C. 392; 1 B. & B. 308; 3 Moore, 456. And see 1 Geo. 4, c. 115, and 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 112.

In an indictment against a bankrupt, he was charged with feloniously making default in not submitting to be examined. Quære, whether this was sufficient, without charging him with a refusal to surrender and submit to examination? Rex v. Page, 3 Moore, 656; 1 B. & B. 308; R. & R. C. C. 392.

An indictment against a bankrupt, under stat. 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, for not making a full disclosure of his estate, should have truly set out the notice requiring him to surrender. Therefore, where the indictment averred that the notice required the bankrupt to surrender, &c., pursuant to stat. 5 Geo. 2, intitled, &c., and on the production of the notice it appeared that the title to the 49 Geo. 3 was substituted for that of the 5 Geo. 2:—Held, that the variance was fatal. Rex v. Barraston, 1 Gow, 210.

An indictment, after stating that a commission of bankruptcy had issued against A., by virtue of which the commissioners adjudged him to be a bankrupt, charged, that he and other defendants conspired to conceal a part of his personal estate:—Held, that ever since the stat. 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 112, such an indictment is defective, for not showing that the party had actually become bankrupt. Rex v. Jones, 4 B. & Adol. 345.

Bankrupt's omission to surrender is not felony, unless it is wilful. Blake v. Leigh, Amb. 307.

And where a bankrupt, who was in prison for debt, did not surrender to his commission, nor did he apply to have the time for his surrender enlarged, nor did he apply to be brought up to surrender under sect. 119 of the Bankrupt Act, 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, nor did he give notice to the commissioners that he was in prison:—Held, that under these circumstances he was not indictable under sec. 112 of the stat. 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, for not surrendering to his commission, even though the imprisonment could be shown to have been collusive. Rex v. Mitchell, 4 C. & P. 251—Little-dale.

A bankrupt is not indictable on the stat. 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 112, for concealing his books till after he has concluded his last examination. Parol evidence of anything that a bankrupt says at the time of his last examination cannot be received, although it should appear that no part of what he said was taken down in writing. Quære, whether, on such indictment, the petitioning creditor is a competent witness to prove the petitioning creditor's debt? Rex v. Walters, 5 C. & P. 138—Park.

LVIII. OFFENCES BY INSOLVENTS.

7 Geo. 4, c. 57, ss. 70 & 71.

If an insolvent debtor has sworn that his schedule contains a full, true, and perfect account of all debts owing to him at the time of his petitioning for his discharge; an assignment of perjury on that oath, stating, that "whereas in truth and in fact the said schedule did not contain a full, true, and perfect account;" &c., (in the words of the oath), is too general: it ought to state what debt he is charged with omitting. Rex v. Hepper, 1 C. & P. 608—Abbott; 1 R. & M. 210.

An insolvent debtor, omitting to state in his schedule debts due to him, is not indictable for perjury, although he has sworn to the truth of his schedule; but he must be indicted for a misdemeanour, under sect. 70 of the Insolvent Debtors' Act, 7 Geo. 4, c. 57. Perjury under sect. 71 of that act is only committed as to things falsely stated in the schedule. Rex v. Moody, 5 C. & P. 23—Tenterden: S. C. nom. Rex v. Mudie, 2 M. & M. 128.

The form of oath at the end of an insolvent's schedule is an affidavit in writing, and may be so stated in an indictment for perjury. Id.

Debts due to the insolvent are "effects or property," within sect. 70 of the Insolvent Debtors' Act. Id.

LIX. BURNING.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, ss. 2 & 17.]—The stat. 7 &

8 Geo. 4, c. 27, wholly repeals the stat. 23 Hen. 8, c. 1; 43 Eliz. c. 13; 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 7; 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, (the Black Act); 9 Geo. 3, c. 29, and 52 Geo. 3, c. 130; and the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, wholly repeals the stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, (Lord Ellenborough's Act.)

(See L. C. J. Tindal's charge, 5 C. & P. 265, n.)

The feloniously burning of a dwelling-house is arson at common law; but the burning of an out-house is a statutable felony. Rex v. Nash, 2 East, P. C. 1021.

If a person set fire to a stack, the fire from which is likely to and which does communicate to a barn, which is thereby burnt, the person is indictable for burning the barn. Rex v. Cooper, 5 C. & P. 535.

A building which never had been inhabited, but which was constructed as and intended for a dwelling-house, but which contained straw, boards, and implements of husbandry, was held neither to be a house, out-house, or barn, within the Black Act, 9 Geo. 4, c. 22, s. 7. Elmore v. Hundred of St. Briavels, 2 M. & R. 514; 8 B. & C. 461. This statute is repealed, but this case appears equally to apply to the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30 & 31, in which the same words occur.

A building separated from the house by a passage, used as a school-room, but within the curtilage was an "out-house" within the 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, s. 1, although not of the ordinary description of out-houses. Rex v. Winter, R. & R. C. C. 295.

A common jail is a house within the statute of arson. Rex v. Donovan, 2 W. Black 682.

The stat. 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, did not vary the nature of the crime of arson. Rex v. Breeme, 1 Leach, C. C. 220; 2 East, P. C. 1026. But see stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 58.

A prison or common jail was a house within the meaning of the 9 Geo. 1, c. 22. Rex v. Donovan, 1 Leach, C. C. 69; 2 East, P. C. 1020.

A tenant from year to year is not guilty of arson by burning the house of which he is in possession; but if, by firing his own house, he thereby burns the house of another, he is guilty of the crime. Rex v. Pedley, 1 Leach, C. C. 242; Cald. 218; 2 East, P. C. 1026.

A tenant in possession of a copyhold messuage is not guilty of arson by burning it, although it has been surrendered to the use of a mortgagee; for it is not the house of another while the tenant continues in possession. Rex v. Spalding, 1 Leach, C. C. 218; 2 East, P. C. 1025.

A tenant in possession, under agreement for a lease for three years from a lessee, who held under a building lease, is not guilty of arson by setting the house on fire; and the 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, did not vary the nature of this offence. Rex v. Breeme, 1 Leach, C. C. 220; 2 East, P. C. 1026. But see stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 58.

One entitled to dower only out of a house, which was leased to another, may commit arson by burning it. Rex v. Harris, 2 East, P. C. 1023.

And so it seems if the legal reversion had been in the prisoner. Id.

One put by overseers of the poor into a house to live there is merely a servant, and his possession is theirs, and therefore he may commit arson by burning it. Rex v. Gowen, 2 East, P. C. 1027; 1 Leach, C. C. 246.

Burning a man's own house contiguous to others is a misdemeanour at common law. Rex v. Probert, 2 East, P. C. 1030: S. P. Rex v. Isaac, 2 East, P. C. 1031.

A building had been built for an oven to bake bricks, but afterwards was roofed and a door put to it. In this place the prosecutor kept a cow; adjoining to it, but not under the same roof, was a lean-to, in which another person kept a horse. Neither the prosecutor, nor the person of whom he rented this building, had any house or farm-yard near it, nor did any wall connect it with any dwelling-house, the nearest dwelling being one hundred yards off, and not belonging to either the prosecutor or his landlord:—Held, that the building was neither a stable nor an out-house, and that, if a person set it on fire, (the lean-to not being burnt,) he was not indictable for arson. Rex v. Haughton, 5 C. & P. 555—Taunton.

An open building in a field at a distance from and out of sight of the owner's house, though boarded round and covered in, is not an out-house within 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 2. Rex v. Ellison, M. C. C. R. 336.

A hovel in the middle of a field, used for the shelter of cattle and occasionally for depositing implements of agriculture, was held not an out-house within the meaning of the 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, s. 1, as it was not within the curtilage. Rex v. Ecclefield, Deac. C. L. 56. And it seems also not to be within the words of the present statute, unless it could be considered as a stable.

If done with intent to defraud insurers, and other houses are burned in consequence, it is felony. Id.

On an indictment for arson on the prosecution of an insurance company, their books are not evidence of the insurance, without notice to produce the policy. Rex v. Doran, 1 Esp. 127—Kenyon.

A prisoner tried at the assizes for arson on Wednesday, the 20th of March, was on Monday, the 18th, served at the prison with a notice to produce a policy of insurance. The commission-day was Friday, the 15th, and the prisoner's home was ten miles from the assize town:—Held, that the notice was served too late. Rex v. Ellicombe, 5 C. & P. 522; M. & Rob. 260—Littledale.

Held, also, that the intent to defraud an insurance office, being charged in the indictment, was not such notice to the prisoner as would make a notice to produce the policy unnecessary. Id.

It must appear upon the face of an indictment for arson that the house was that of another; and it must state whose house, and with that the proof must agree. Rex v. Rickman, 2 East, P. C. 1034. And see Rex v. Glandfield, 2 East, P. C. 1034.

Setting fire to a parcel of unthreshed wheat was not a felony within 9 Geo. 1, c. 22. Rex v.

Judd, 2 T. R. 255; 1 Leach, C. C. 484; 2 Esp. P. C. 1018.

Though an indictment for setting fire to a barn stated it to be in the night, yet it was not material to prove that fact under stat. 9 Geo. 1, c. 22; nor was it necessary that the indictment should state that there was corn or hay therein. Rex v. Ma-ton, 2 East, P. C. 1021.

Although the word "maliciously" be not in the statute, quære, if it must not be laid in the indictment? Id.

An indictment for setting fire to an out-house was good, and sufficient to oust the offender of clergy, under stat. 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, though it might have in point of law formed part of the dwelling-house, the burning of which was arson at common law. Rex v. North, 2 East, P. C. 1021.

A house in part of which a man lives, and other parts of which he lets to lodgers, may be described in an indictment for setting fire to it as his house, though he has taken the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors' Act, and executed an assignment including the house, if the assignee has not taken possession; at least no objection can be made, if in other counts it is stated as the house of the assignee, and in others of the lodger whose room was set fire to. Rex v. Ball, 1 R. & M. C. C. 30; 2 Russ. C. & M. 495.

A cotton-mill was within stat. 9 Geo. 3, c. 22, s. 2, relating to the burning of mills. Ann? Russ. C. & M. 493.

Setting fire to paper only in a drying kiln belonging to a paper-mill, no part of which was burnt, was not setting fire to an out-house within the meaning of 9 Geo. 1, c. 22. Rex v. Taylor, 1 Leach, C. C. 49; 2 East, P. C. 1890.

It was not necessary to aver in an indictment on 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, for setting fire to a hay-stack, that the stack "was thereby burnt." Rex v. Salmon, R. & R. C. C. 26; 2 Russ. C. & M. 294.

In an indictment on the 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, for setting fire to a hay-stack, it was no answer to the charge that the prisoner had no malice or spite to the owner of the stack. Id.

Or that it stood upon his own ground, if it was not his property. Id.

On an indictment for setting fire to a mill, with intent to injure the occupiers thereof:—Held, that an injury to the mill being the necessary consequence of setting fire to it, the intent to injure might be inferred; for a man must be supposed to intend the necessary consequence of his own act. Rex v. Farrington, R. R. C. C. 291; 2 Russ. & M. 493.

Notwithstanding the stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, a person might still have been indicted within eighteen months limited by the 9 Geo. 3, c. 2, for setting fire to a mill, without alleging it to be to injure or defraud any person. Id.

And it was the same as to setting fire to a house, or barn, or rick of another. Id.

A stamped policy, on which an unstamped memorandum, importing that the goods mentioned therein were removed to another house, and which removal was thereby allowed, has been for wilfully setting fire to the house and tended to be insured. Rex v. Gillson, 2 L.

C. C. 1007; R. & R. C. C. 138; 1 Taunt. 95

On an indictment on 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, for se fire to a barn; in support of a challenge to panel, because the sheriff was an inhabitant o hundred, it was necessary to prove that the tice had been given within two days of the in and that the examination had been deliv which the statute required. Rex v. Savage, & M. C. C. 51.

An indictment on the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c.
ss. 2 & 17, for setting fire to a barn and a s of straw, charged the offences to have been c mitted "feloniously, voluntarily, and malici ly," instead of "feloniously, unlawfully, and liciously."—Held bad. The prisoners had fire to a stack of stubble, (which, in Cambri shire, is called haulm); they were indicted a first indictment for setting fire to a "s of straw:"—Held, that this was not straw.
on their being again indicted for setting fire
"stack of straw called haulm," the judge mated that to convict upon such a count w not be safe; and the verdict, in consequence, taken upon other counts, charging the setting to a barn and a wheat-stack. Rex v. Reade
C. & P. 245; R. & M. C. C. 239.

On an indictment for setting fire to a stack beans, a mistake as to the name of the p where the offence was committed, is immater the charge is transitory, not local. Rex v. W word, M. C. C. R. 323.

Upon a statute which makes it capital to set to a stack of pulse, it is sufficient to state the prisoner set fire to a stack of beans.
judges will take notice that beans are pulse.

An indictment on the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4
30, s. 17, charged a party with setting fire
"stack of barley, of the value of 100*l.*, of R W.:"—Held good, although the words of the tute creating the offence are, "any stack of c or grain:"—Held also, that the words, "of R W.," sufficiently stated the property:—Held a that if the indictment state "that the prisoner &c., at &c., feloniously, unlawfully, and m ciously did set fire to a certain stock of barley the value of 100*l.*, of R. P. W., then and there ing," this is sufficient, without stating that prisoner, on &c., at &c., feloniously, unlawfu and maliciously did then and there set fire to stack. Rex v. Swatkins, 4 C. & P. 548—Patten

Arson is an injury only to the actual poss

The breaking down the head or mound of a fish-pond was not a felony within stat. 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, if it appeared to have been the object of the offenders to steal the fish, and not to let them escape through the breach in the mound: and if it were, stat. 5 Geo. 3, c. 14, had virtually repealed it as to this offence. Rex v. Ross, R. & R. C. C. 10; 2 East, P. C. 1067.

The stat. 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, was designed to extend and not abridge the offences described in 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 7; and therefore, horses, mares, and colts were included in the word "cattle." Rex v. Patty, 2 East, P. C. 1074; 1 Leach, C. C. 72; 2 W. Black. 721; S. P. Rex v. Magle, 2 East P. C. 1076.

The act of maiming cattle, to make it a capital offence within the meaning of 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, must have proceeded from a malicious motive towards the owner. Rex v. Shepherd, 1 Leach, C. C. 539; 2 East, P. C. 1073.

To constitute the offence of maliciously maiming cattle, under the Black Act, it must appear that the maiming was committed from a malicious motive to the owner of the cattle. Rex v. Pearce, 1 Leach, C. C. 527; 2 East, P. C. 1072; S. P. Rex v. Kean, 2 East, P. C. 1073; 1 Leach, C. C. 527, n.

To support an indictment on 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, s. 1, for maliciously killing, &c., cattle, there must have been malice proved against the owner of the cattle, and not against a servant or relation of the owner. Rex v. Austen, R. & R. C. C. 490. But see 4 Geo. 4, c. 54, s. 2.

Proof of dislike by a servant to a particular horse, and the fact committed after his master's refusal to let him have another, was not sufficient to bring the case within the statute, though the prisoner had before threatened the injury if his master would not let him have the other horse. Id.

But it was not necessary to prove a previous existing malice against the owner. Rex v. Ranger, 2 East, P. C. 1074.

[Malice against the owner is not material under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 16.]

A private prosecutor on 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, had an option to prefer his indictment in such county as he thought most favourable to the ends of justice. Rex v. Mortis, 1 Leach, C. C. 73; 2 W. Black. 733.

Apple and pear trees grafted in a wild stock, and producing fruit, were trees within 9 Geo. 1, c. 22. Rex v. Taylor, R. & R. C. C. 373.

If a person be charged on oath before a magistrate with an offence amounting to felony, and he issues his warrant; on the party being brought before him the charge is substantiated, and the offender is committed to prison; the magistrate committing is not liable in trespass for false imprisonment, although the charge turns out to be unfounded. Where therefore a party was charged under the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 19, with having maliciously cut down a tree adjoining a dwelling-house, and was committed to prison as a felon, and the person who laid the information did not prosecute:—Held, that the magistrate was not liable in trespass, although it appeared on the face of the depositions under which the party was committed that he was the occupier of the land the tree grew on. Mills v. Collet, 3 M. & P. 242.

LXVII. FORGERY.

1. What is Forgery.

By the stat. 1 Will. 4, c. 66.]—The following statutes as to forgery are either wholly or partially repealed, as under-mentioned; viz:—

Statutes wholly repealed.—5 Eliz. c. 14; 21 Jac. 1, c. 26; 7 Geo. 2, c. 22; 13 Geo. 3, c. 79; 18 Geo. 3, c. 18; 33 Geo. 3, c. 30; 37 Geo. 3, c. 122; 41 Geo. 3, (U. K.) c. 39; 41 Geo. 3, c. 57; 45 Geo. 3, c. 89; 52 Geo. 3, c. 138.

Statutes partially repealed.—25 Edw. 3, stat. 5, c. 2; (the statute of treason only repealed as to the seals); 1 Mar. stat. 2, c. 6, (this statute is wholly repealed by 2 Will. 4, c. 34); 4 W. & M. c. 4; 8 & 9 W. 3, c. 20; 7 Ann. c. 21; 8 Geo. 1, c. 22; 12 Geo. 1, c. 31; 2 Geo. 2, c. 25; 15 Geo. 2, c. 13; 31 Geo. 2, c. 22; 4 Geo. 3, c. 25; 27 Geo. 3, c. 43; 43 Geo. 3, c. 139; 48 Geo. 3, c. 1; 52 Geo. 3, c. 146; 4 Geo. 4, c. 76.

1 Will. 4, c. 66; 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 123; 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 44.]—And see the statutes collected, Collier's Criminal Statutes, tit. Forgery.

Forgery is the false making of an instrument, which purports on the face of it to be good and valid for the purposes for which it was created, with a design to defraud any person or persons. Rex v. Jones, 2 East, P. C. 991.—Eyre.

It is felony to forge the name of a person, although such person never existed. Rex v. Bolland, 1 Leach, C. C. 83; 2 East, P. C. 958.

Discharging a genuine indorsement, and inserting another, is altering the indorsement, and forgery. Rex v. Birkett, and Rex v. Eigg, 101 Bills, 430.

A receipt indorsed on a bill of exchange in a fictitious name is a forgery, although it does not purport to be the name of any particular person. Rex v. Taylor, 1 Leach, C. C. 215; 2 East, P. C. 690.

Signing a wrong christian name to the person whose will a false instrument purports to be is forgery. Rex v. Fitzgerald, 1 Leach, C. C. 3; 2 East, P. C. 953.

A person who has for many years been known by a name which was not his own, and who afterwards assumes his real name, and in that name draws a bill of exchange, is not guilty of forgery, though the bill was drawn for the purposes of fraud. Rex v. Aickles, 1 Leach, C. C. 438; 2 East, P. C. 988.

Signing a money order in an assumed name is forgery, if the name was assumed to defraud the person to whom such order was given, though the prisoner had borne other names unknown to the prosecutor, who knew him only by the assumed name. Rex v. Francis, R. & R. C. C. 301.

If, on an indictment for forging a bill of exchange, it is proved that the prisoner assumed a false name for the purpose of pecuniary gain connected with the forgery, the drawing, signing, or indorsing of such bill of exchange, in such false or assumed name, is forgery. Rex v. Peacock, R. & R. C. C. 278.

Assuming and using a fictitious name, though for the purposes of concealment and fraud, will not amount to forgery, if it were not for the very fraud, or system of fraud, of which the forgery forms a part. Rex v. Bowden, R. & R. C. C. 260.

Where a name made use of by a prisoner in a forged instrument is assumed by him with the intention of defrauding the prosecutor, it is forgery, though the prisoner's real name would have carried with it as much credit as the assumed name. Rex v. Whitley, R. & R. C. C. 90; 1 M. & M. 396.

Indorsing a bill in a fictitious name is forgery, though the bill would have then been negotiable if indorsed by the prisoner in his own name, if the fictitious name was used in order to defraud. Rex v. Marshall, R. & R. C. C. 75; S. P. Rex v. Teft, 1 Leach, C. C. 13; 1 East, P. C. 959.

It is immaterial whether any additional gain be gained by the forgery, or whether the false name be assumed by the party himself for the occasion. Id.

Altering a bill from a lower to a higher sum is forging it; and a person might have been indicted on the 7 Geo. 2 c. 22, for forging such an instrument, although the statute had the word "alter" as well as "forge;" and it was not necessary to state in the indictment that defendant altered the bill. Rex v. Teague, R. & R. C. C. 39; 1 East, P. C. 979.

by altering the amount from a lower to a higher sum, it was held no defence thereto, that, before the alteration, it had been paid by the drawer and re-issued, being only stamped with the proper stamp for a re-issuable promissory note, it being the same thing as forging or uttering a forged bill with a wrong stamp. Id.

The changing the figure 2 into the figure 5, in a bank-note, (220L. to 250L.), was held to be forging and counterfeiting a bank-note. Rex v. Dawson, 1 Stra. 19; 2 East, P. C. 978.

In forgery, there need not be an exact resemblance; it is sufficient if the instrument is prima facie fitted to pass for a true instrument. Rex v. Elliott, 1 Leach, C. C. 175, 179; 2 East, P. C. 951. See Rex v. Collicott, ante, tit. OFFENCES RELATING TO STAMPS.

The case of Rex v. Mather, M. C. C. R. 291, was decided on the stat. 7 Geo. 2, c. 22, and 45 Geo. 3, c. 89, both of which are repealed by the stat. 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 66, and does not apply to the present state of the law.

Adding a false addition to a fictitious name, to delude a party to present a bill a second time, after a former presentment without success, under pretence that it was for want of that addition that the bill had been before dishonoured, is a forgery. Rex v. Francis, Bayl. Bills, 432.

A signature in an assumed name is a forgery, if the name was assumed to defraud in that particular instance, or for a system of fraud within which that signature fell. Rex v. Meredith, Rex v. Whitley, Rex v. Dunn, Rex v. Tyle, and Rex v. Pascock, Bayl. Bills, 434.

And it makes no difference that the bill or note would have been equally taken had the party used his own name. Rex v. Shepherd, Bayl. Bills, 436.

If there be two persons of the same name, but of different descriptions or additions, and one signs his name with the description or addition of the other for the purpose of fraud, it is forgery. Rex v. Webb, Bayl. Bills, 432.

But, if the signatures to a bill or note are genuine, a false pretence by a person who utters it that he bears a character he does not, will not make him liable to a prosecution for forgery. Rex v. Heery, Bayl. Bills, 433.

Where, upon an indictment for forging and uttering a forged acceptance, the bill was drawn by the prisoner, and addressed to "Mr. T. B. Baize Manufacturer, Romford," and purported to have been accepted by him, payable, when due, at No. 40, Castle-street, Holborn, and it was proved that no such person resided at Romford, and that there was no baize manufactory there, and that he did not live at No. 40, Castle-street, Holborn; and the prisoner produced witnesses to prove that the acceptance was of the handwriting of T. B., but that he had never carried on the business of a baize manufacturer at Romford, nor resided at No. 40, Castle-street, Holborn:—Held, that although this was a case of gross fraud it did not amount to forgery, as the acceptance was written by a person of the name of T. B. Rex v. Webb & Rex get into the hands of another person of the same name as the payee, and such person, knowing that he was not the real person in whose favour it was drawn, indorsed it, he is guilty of a forgery. Mead v. Young, 4 T. R. 28.

Quere, whether a false insertion in an indorsement, that the indorser has a procuration, without any other circumstances of falsehood or misrepresentation, will make such an indorsement a forgery within the statute? Rex v. Meddocke, 2 Russ. C. & M. 450.

To make a mark in the name of another person, with intent to defraud the person whose name is assumed, is forgery. Rex v. Dunn, 1 Leach, C. C. 57; 2 East, P. C. 962.

A prisoner named T. Story went to the post-office at N., and inquired for a letter directed to "T. Story, post-office, Nottingham, to be left till called for;" and a letter directed to T. Storer, post-office, &c., was given him, the postmaster supposing that the prisoner was the person to whom it was directed, not noticing the difference of names; the letter contained a money order, of which the prisoner obtained payment on signing his own name on the back of it:—Held, that this was not forgery. Rex v. Story, R. & R. C. C. 81.

If a person authorize another to sign a note in his name, dated at a particular place, and made payable at a banker's; and the person in whose name it is drawn represent it to be the name of another person, with intent to defraud, and no such person as the note and the representation import exists, this is forgery, for it is a false making of an instrument, in the name of a non-existing person. Rex v. Perkins, 2 Leach, C. C. 775; 2 East, P. C. 963, 992.

It is a forgery to alter a document, which the prisoner had previously forged himself; and he may be convicted of forging and uttering it in the state to which it was so altered. Rex v. Kinder, 2 East, P. C. 956.

If several combine to forge Bank of England notes, and each execute by himself a distinct part of the forgery, but they are not together when the notes are completed, they are nevertheless all guilty as principals. Rex v. Bingley, R. & R. C. C. 446.

If several make distinct parts of a forged instrument, each is a principal though he does not know by whom the other parts are executed, and though it is finished by one alone in the absence of the others. Rex v. Kirkwood, M. C. C. R. 304.

The makers of the paper and plate respectively, for the purpose of forging a note afterwards filled up by a third person, are principals in the forgery with that person, though each executed his part in the absence of the others, and without knowing by whom the other parts are executed. Rex v. Dade, M. C. C. R. 307.

A person may be convicted of forging with intent to defraud, although the note was found in his custody when apprehended, and never, in fact, uttered by him. Rex v. Crocker, 2 Leach, C. C. 967; 2 N. R. 67; R. & R. C. C. 97.

ed by the 1 Will. 4, c. 66.

Expunging, by a certain liquor, a notification of payment of part of the contents of a bank bill, written on the face of it, would sustain an indictment, on 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 20, s. 36, for rasing out an indorsement on such bill. Rex v. Bigg, 2 East, P. C. 862.

If the London correspondent of a country banker fail, and the notes of the country bank then in circulation be directed to be paid at another house, the altering of a paid note, (lost on its way to the country bank in order to be re-issued), as to its place of payment, is a forgery, and the drawer of it may prove that it never reached his hands or was re-issued by him. Rex v. Treble, 2 Leach, C. C. 1040; 2 Taunt. 328; R. & R. C. C. 164.

The paper and stamps of the notes of a country bank, which have been paid by the correspondent banker in London, and which the country banker may legally re-issue, are the valuable property of the country banker while in transitu for the purpose of being re-issued. Rex v. Clarke, 2 Leach, C. C. 1036.

Forging an order from one to charge certain goods contained in a schedule to his account, and to appropriate part of the proceeds to the defendant's own use, done with intent to defraud the principal, is forgery at common law, though the fraud be not effected. Rex v. Ward, 2 East, P. C. 861.

One who was committed to jail under an attachment for a contempt in a civil cause, counterfeited a pretended discharge, as from his creditor to the sheriff and jailor, under which he obtained his discharge:—Held, a misdemeanour at common law, although the attachment not being for non-payment of money, the order was in itself a mere nullity, and no warrant to the sheriff for his discharge. Rex v. Fawcett, 2 East, P. C. 862.

Semble, also, that it was indictable as a forgery. Id.

A note, in the name of an overseer of the poor, to a shopkeeper, desiring him to let the prisoner have certain goods, which he would see him paid for, is not a warrant or order for the delivery of goods within the stat. 7 Geo. 2, c. 22. Rex v. Mitchell, 2 East, P. C. 936.

2. The Instrument.

Forging a bill on the commissioners of the navy, though it is not warranted by the 35 Geo. 3, c. 94, if it have the requisites of a bill of exchange, is within the statutes against forgery. Rex v. Chisholme, Bayl. Bills, 440.

Forging a bill or note for less than 20s. or 5l., which does not comply with the requisites of 17 Geo. 3, c. 30, or any other bill or note the legislature has declared void, is not within the statutes against forgery. Rex v. Moffat, Bayl. Bills, 439.

Forging or uttering a note without a maker's name is not a capital offence. Rex v. Paleman, Bayl. Bills, 441.

Forging or uttering a bill or note, purporting to be payable to B. or to the order of B., and indorsed by A. B.'s name. Rex v. Bicket, Rex v. Hugh, and Rex v. Wicks, Bayl. Bills, 441, 442.

And forging on unstamped paper a bill or note which requires a stamp, is as much an offence as if it were on stamped paper. Rex v. Henswood, Bayl. Bills, 63, 442.

A person makes a copy of a receipt, and adds to it other words, as for example, "in full of all demands," which were not in the original; it is a forgery, if the copy is offered in evidence as the supposed loss of the original. Upfold v. Le, 5 Esp. 100—Ellenborough.

The forging and uttering a Prussian treasury note for the payment of one dollar was within the stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 139, s. 1. Rex v. Goldstein, 7 Moore, 1; 3 B. & B. 201; 10 Price, 68; Bayl. Bills, 444.

The counterfeit making of any part of a genuine note, which may give it a greater currency, is forgery; therefore, if a note be made payable to a country banker's, or at his banker's in London, who fails, it is forgery to alter the name of the London banker to the name of another London banker, with whom the maker makes his other notes payable after the failure of the first. Rex v. Treble, 2 Taunt. 328.

The stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 139, made to prevent forgery in Great Britain of foreign securities, was not to be understood to require that such securities should possess the technical properties required by the law of England, it being sufficient if they imported on the face of the whole instrument an undertaking or order for payment of money. Rex v. Goldstein, R. & R. C. C. 63—Richardson; 3 B. & B. 201.

And it was sufficient if the instrument were in fact an undertaking or order for payment of money, and operated as such, and purported to be issued by any foreign prince, or his minister. R.

An indictment charged that the prisoner feloniously had falsely made, forged, and counterfeited a certain promissory note for the payment of money, which was as follows: "On demand we promise to pay Mesdames S. W. and S. D. stewardesses for the time being of the President Daughters' Society, held at Mr. Pope's, the Hope Smithfield, or their successors in office, sixty-four pounds, with five per cent. interest for the sum value received this seventh day of February, 1815. For F. C. & Co., J. F." This was held a valid promissory note within the stat. 3 Geo. 3, c. 25, and the conviction was affirmed. Rex v. Box, 6 Taunt. 325.

An order was made under 48 Geo. 3, c. 7, s. 6, purporting on the face of it to be an order of a magistrate on the treasurer of a county, to allow one J. C. the expenses of burying a dead body cast on shore:—Held, that this was a forgery, although there was no such magistrate in the county of the name of the person who signed the order, and although J. C. was not therein stated to be a parish officer, or that the expenses incurred were necessary. Rex v. Froude, 3 Mon. 645; 7 Price, 609.

A bill upon the commissioners of the navy for pay may be a bill of exchange, although it be not such an instrument as 35 Geo. 3, c. 94, warrants. Rex v. Chisholme, R. & R. C. C. 297; 2 Russ. C. & M. 458; Bayl. Bills, 440.

If an instrument purporting, as a navy bill, to be an order for payment of money, be directed to the treasurers, instead of the commissioners of the navy, as required by statute, it will not prevent its being considered as an order for payment of money. Rex v. Richards, R. & R. C. C. 193.

Although a navy pay bill be not numbered as the 35 Geo. 3, c. 94, s. 3, requires, yet the instrument is still a bill of exchange, and an indictment for forging such instrument may lay it to be a bill of exchange. Rex v. Randall, R. & R. C. C. 195—Bayley.

Forging a magistrate's order to pay money under hand only is not a capital offence; as the 17 Geo. 2, c. 5, under which the magistrate has power to make it, requires it to be under hand and seal. Rex v. Rushworth, R. & R. C. C. 317; 1 Stark. 396.

And so, if it is addressed to the treasurer of the country, instead of the high constable, the magistrate having no power by the act to make it upon the former. Id.

By 48 Geo. 3, c. 75, a justice of the peace may order the treasurer of the county to pay every churchwarden, overseer, headborough, or constable, the expenses he has incurred in burying any dead body that has been cast on shore. A person was convicted of forging a justice's order, stating that a dead body had been cast on shore, in the parish of A.; that J. S. had made an oath before the justice, that he had laid out 3*l.* 5*s.* in the burying it, and requiring the treasurer to pay him the sum:—Held, by six against five judges, that this was a warrant or order for payment of money, within stat. 7 Geo. 2, c. 22, although it did not appear on the face of the order that J. S. was a churchwarden, &c., and that the treasurer was bound to conclude that the justice had not made an order, without satisfying himself that J. S. was churchwarden, &c., and therefore that the conviction was right. Rex v. Froud, R. & R. C. C. 389; 1 B. & B. 300. See Rex v. Harris, post, p. 797.

A forged bank-note, although the word "pounds" be omitted in the body of it, and there be no water-mark in the paper, is a counterfeit note for the payment of money. Id.

The altering a banker's one pound note, by substituting the word "ten" for the word "one," was held to be forgery, although it thereby purported to be a note for ten "pound" and not pounds. Rex v. Post, R. & R. C. C. 101.

Forging a deed was within the 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, s. 1, although there may have been subsequent directory provisions by other statutes, that instruments for the same purpose as such forged deed shall be in a particular form, or shall comply with certain requisites, and the forged deed was not in that form, and did not comply with those requisites, for the directory provisions do not make the deed (although out of the form prescribed, and without the requisites) wholly void. Diss. Graham and Bayley. Rex v. Lyon, R. & C. C. 255; 2 Russ. C. & M. 443.

Forging a power of attorney to receive prize money was a capital offence, under 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, though it was not in the form prescribed by 45 Geo. 3, c. 72, s. 92. Id.

A power of attorney to transfer government stock, signed, sealed, and delivered, was a deed within stat. 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, s. 1. Rex v. Fautleroy, 1 R. & M. C. C. 52; 2 Bing. 413; 1 C. & P. 421: S. P. Rex v. Pringle, 1 R. & M. C. C. 68, c.

An order for the payment of prize money, signed in the name of a seaman, was an order for payment of money, or bill of exchange within the stat. 7 Geo. 2, c. 22, the forgery of which was felony, although the requisites of stat. 32 Geo. 3, c. 34, s. 2, had not been complied with. Rex v. McIntosh, 2 East, P. C. 942, 956; 2 Leach, C. C. 883.

The invalidity of an instrument must appear upon the face of it, in order to found an objection to an indictment for forgery. Id.

There can be no forgery of a will of lands, attested only by two witnesses. Rex v. Wall, 2 East, P. C. 953.

To forge a will is a capital offence, although the supposed testator is living. Rex v. Sterling, 1 Leach, C. C. 99; 2 East, P. C. 950: S. P. Rex v. Coogan, 1 Leach, C. C. 449; 2 East, P. C. 1001.

Securities issued by government as exchequer bills are "effects" within the meaning of the 15 Geo. 2, c. 13, s. 12, although, from not having been signed by a person legally authorized, they are not valid and legal exchequer bills. Rex v. Astlett, R. & R. C. C. 67; 1 N. R. 1; 2 Leach, C. C. 958.

A promissory note for the payment of one guinea in cash, or bank of England note, was not a note for the payment of money within the 2 Geo. 2, c. 25. Rex v. Wilcocks, 2 Russ. C. & M. 457.

Forging a Scotch bank-note was not within the English statutes against forgery. Rex v. Dick, 1 Leach, C. C. 68; 2 East, P. C. 925. But see 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 30.

Uttering a forged promissory note, purporting to be a note of the Royal Bank of Scotland, was an offence within the meaning of stat. 2 Geo. 2, c. 25. Rex v. McKeay, Car. C. L. 190; R. & M. C. C. 130. But see Rex v. McKay, R. & R. C. C. 71.

A bill of exchange for less than 5*l.*, which is void for not being in the form required by stat. 17 Geo. 3, c. 30, cannot be the subject of a capital forgery. Rex v. Moffatt, 1 Leach, C. C. 431; 2 East, P. C. 954.

The forging or uttering a note which, for want of a signature, is incomplete, is not within the statute which makes forging notes capital. Rex v. Pateman, R. & R. C. C. 455.

A forgery may be committed of a promissory note on unstamped paper, even since the stat. 31 Geo. 3, c. 25, s. 19, which prohibits the stamp to utter a forged promissory note, knowing it to be forged, is a capital felony, although the note is not stamped. Rex v. Reculist, 2 Leach, C. C. 708; 2 East, P. C. 956.

It was not necessary that a promissory note should be negotiable in order to be a promissory note within 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, so as to be the subject of an indictment for forging or uttering it. Rex v. Bez, R. & R. C. C. 300; 6 Taunt. 325.

A bill of exchange drawn in fictitious names, where there are no such persons existing as the bill imports, may be a forgery. Rex v. Wilkes, 2 East, P. C. 957.

On an indictment for forging a promissory note, it appeared that it was not payable to the bearer on demand, or payable in money; that the maker only promised to take it in payment, and that the requisitions of the stat. 17 Geo. 3, c. 30, were not complied with:—Held, that the forgery of such an instrument was not the subject of an indictment at common law. Rex v. Burke, R. & R. C. C. 496.

Where a prisoner was indicted for forging a bill of exchange, and the bill was payable to — or order:—Held, that there must be a payee; forging an instrument payable to — or order is not sufficient. Rex v. Randall, R. & R. C. C. 195.

The prisoner drew a bill upon the treasurer of the navy, payable to — or order, and signed it in the name of a navy surgeon:—Held, that to constitute an order for payment of money there must be some payee; a direction to pay — or order is not sufficient. Rex v. Richards, R. & R. C. C. 193—Dice. Mansfield.

The words "warrant" or "order," in stat. 7 Geo. 2, c. 22, are synonymous. Rex v. Mitchell, 2 East, P. C. 936.

A forged order on a tradesman, in the name of a customer, requesting that the goods mentioned in it might be delivered to the bearer, was not within 7 Geo. 2, c. 22, if the customer has no interest in the goods mentioned. Rex v. Williams, 1 Leach, C. C. 114; 2 East, P. C. 937. But see 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 10.

The stat. 7 Geo. 2, c. 22, was not confined to commercial transactions, but would have applied to an order made by a justice to a high constable or treasurer to pay a reward. Rex v. Graham, 2 East, P. C. 945.

A bill of exchange or banker's draft might have been charged in an indictment on stat. 7 Geo. 2, c. 22, as an order for payment of money. Rex v. Willoughby, 2 East, P. C. 944; S. P. Rex v. Shepherd, 2 East, P. C. 944; 1 Leach, 236.

A stamped memorandum, importing that A. B. had paid a sum of money to C. D., but not importing any acknowledgment from C. D. of his having received it, was not such a receipt as the stat. 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, s. 1, made it capital to forge or utter. Rex v. Harvey, R. & R. C. C. 227.

Forging a paper writing, purporting to be an office copy of a report of the accountant-general's, is a felony. Rex v. Gibson, 1 Leach, C. C. 61; 1 East, P. C. 899.

An entry of the receipt of money &c. made by a cashier of the bank of England in a bank book of a creditor was an accountable receipt for the payment of money within the 7 Geo. 2, c. 22; and altering the principal sum by prefixing a figure to increase its amount was capital forgery, but that statute did not extend to cases where the offence was committed with intent to defraud a corporation, until the 18 Geo. 3, c. 18. Rex v. Harrison, 1 Leach, C. C. 119; 2 East, P. C. 927, 968.

Forging an order in the name of a clerk for the re-delivery of plate from Giltspur Hall, viz. "Please to deliver my work to the bearer," was within the 7 Geo. 2, c. 22, and 18 Geo. 3, c. 26. Rex v. Jones, 1 Leach, C. C. 2, 2 East, P. C. 941.

A note, "Please to send 10l. by horse, unless so ill I cannot wait on you," was not within the payment of money within 7 Geo. 2, c. 22. Rex v. Elliot, 1 Leach, C. C. 323; 2 East, P. C. 91.

Forging an indenture of apprenticeship or receipt for the apprenticeship fee, with intent to defraud the stewards of the Feast of the Sun of the Clergy, is within the statutes which make forgery a capital offence. Rex v. Jones, 1 Leach, C. C. 366; 2 East, P. C. 991.

The name of the holder of a navy bill, signed on a proper receipt stamp, and affixed to the bill, did not on the face of it purport to be a receipt for money within the stat. 2 Geo. 2, c. 22, and 7 Geo. 2, c. 22: but as the money was paid on such signature, and it always had been considered as a receipt at the Navy Office, it was by proper averments in the indictment, brought within the protection of those statutes as a receipt for money. Rex v. Hunter, 2 Leach, C. C. 624; 2 East, P. C. 928, 977.

The prisoner drew a bill, "Please to pay the bearer on demand 15l., and signed it with his own name, but it was not addressed to any person; there was forged upon this instrument, and entered, the words and signature, "Payable to Messrs. Masterman & Co., White Hart Lane Wm. M'Inerheney." M'Inerheney kept out of Masterman & Co.'s:—Held, by nine judges, that this was not an order for payment of money. Rex v. Ravenacreft, R. & R. C. C. 161.

If a person, employed by the execution of a public accountant to settle the account of a defunct with government, procure fabricated vouchers, and deliver them to the Navy Board, with intent to exonerate the estate of the testator from payment, it was a forging and uttering within the 2 Geo. 2, c. 25. Rex v. Thomas, 2 Leach, C. C. 877; 2 East, P. C. 934.

Quære, if the altering of one figure to read in a weighing engine ticket comes under the denomination of forgery at common law? Rex v. Wilcox, R. & R. C. C. 50.

A receipt to a cash memorandum was within the stat. 3 Geo. 3, c. 25. Rex v. Russell, 1 Leach, C. C. 9.

A scrip receipt not filled up with the name of the subscriber is not a receipt for money within the statutes against forgery. Rex v. Lyon, 2 Leach, C. C. 597; 2 East, P. C. 933.

Forging a power of attorney to receive a seaman's wages, in the name of a supposed child as administratrix of such seaman, who, in fact, died childless, is a forgery. Rex v. Lewis, 2 East, P. C. 957.

A forged draft on a banker was an order for the payment of money within 7 Geo. 2, c. 22, although the person whose name is forged never kept cash with, or was known to the banker. Rex v. Lockett, 1 Leach, C. C. 94; 2 East, P. C. 940.

A forged order for the delivery of goods was not within the stat. 7 Geo. 2, c. 22, unless it were directed to the person who had the goods; and it must have appeared in an indictment for this offence, that the person whose name was charged to be forged had an authority to make such an order as the forged order purported to be. Rex v. Clinch, 1 Leach, C. C. 540; 2 East, P. C. 938. But see 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 10.

In case of forging an order, the order charged as forged must import that the person making it has a disposing power over the subject of the order, or there ought to be proof that the person in whose name it was made had such power. Rex v. Baker, R. & M. C. C. R. 231.

A forged paper was in the following form:—"Per bearer, two 11-4 superfine counterpanes. T. Davis, E. Twell." It was not addressed to any person:—Held, by the fifteen judges, that it was neither an order nor a request within the stat. 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 10, (the forgery consolidation act). Rex v. Cullen, 5 C. & P. 116.

A forged request, to be within the stat. 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 10, must import on the face of it to be a request, and if the words have not necessarily that effect, but are so understood in the trade, there must be an innuendo to explain them. Rex v. Cullen, M. C. C. R. 300.

On an indictment on 11 Geo. 4, & 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 10, a request for the delivery of goods need not be addressed to any one. Rex v. Carney, M. C. C. R. 351.

A person who obtained goods on delivering a forged letter—"Please to let the bearer, W. T., have for J. R. four yards of linen," signed J. R., is not indictable for obtaining goods by false pretence, as this is uttering a forged request for the delivery of goods, which is a felony under sect. 10 of the stat. 1 Will. 4, c. 66. Rex v. Evans, 5 C. & P. 553—Taunton.

The practice of issuing county court processes in blank, for the attorneys to fill up after they have been issued by the county clerk, is highly irregular. And semble, that the filling up of a county court summons, or altering a distringas into a summons, after it has been so issued in blank, is a forgery at common law. Rex v. Collier, 5 C. & P. 160—Patteson.

An indictment had been found against A. for an assault, on which the clerk of the peace had granted a certificate, upon which a magistrate committed A. to the county jail till he should find sureties, or otherwise be discharged by due course of law. A. wrote a forged letter in the name of another magistrate to the governor of the county jail, stating that A. had found sureties, and authorizing the discharge of A.:—Held, that the writing and uttering of this forged letter was an indictable offence. Rex v. Harris, 6 C. & P. 129. See Rex v. Froud, ante, p. 595.

3. Uttering.

Uttering in England a forged note, payable in Ireland only, was within the forgery acts prior to the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 66. Rex v. Kirkwood, M. C. C. R. 311—Fifteen judges. [This is now regulated by s. 30 of the stat. 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 66.]

The uttering a bill with a genuine indorsement, under pretence of being the indorsor, will not subject the party to an indictment as for uttering a forged instrument, as it is only a misdemeanour. Rex v. Hevey, R. & R. C. C. 407, n.; 2 East, P. C. 556, 856; 1 Leach, C. C. 229.

Forging a bill payable to the prisoner's own order, and uttering it without an indorsement as a security for a debt, is a complete offence, if done with a fraudulent intent, the bill having been issued to obtain credit, though as a pledge only. Rex v. Birkett, R. & R. C. C. 86.

It is not sufficient to make a person a principal in uttering a forged note, that he came with the utterer to the town where it was uttered, went out with him from the inn at which they put up a little before he uttered it, and joined him again in the street a short time after the uttering, and at some little distance from the place of uttering, and ran away when the utterer was apprehended. Rex v. Davis, R. & R. C. C. 113.

If a wife, by the incitement of her husband, knowingly utters in his absence a forged order and certificate for the reception of prize money, under 43 Geo. 3, c. 123, they may be indicted together, she as a principal on the statute, and he as an accessory before the fact, at common law; and if convicted she might have been punished with death, and he by fine and imprisonment. Rex v. Morris, 2 Leach, C. C. 1096.

Persons privy to the uttering of a forged note, by previous concert with the utterer, but who were not present at the time of uttering, or so near as to be able to afford any aid or assistance, are not principals, but accessories before the fact. Rex v. Soares, R. & R. C. C. 25; 2 East, P. C. 974.

If several plan the uttering of a forged order for payment of money, and it is uttered accordingly by one in the absence of the others, the actual utterer is alone the principal. Rex v. Badcock, R. & R. C. C. 249.

Where a prisoner, charged with uttering a forged note to A. B., knowing it to be forged, gave forged notes to a boy who was ignorant of brought back the goods and the change to the prisoner:—Held, that it was an uttering by the prisoner to A. B. Rex v. Giles, Car. C. L. 191; R. & M. 166.

Persons not present, nor sufficiently near to give assistance at the time of uttering forged notes, are not principals, although they may be accessories before the fact. Rex v. Stewart, R. & R. C. C. 363.

Semble, that to have made the uttering of a forged instrument indictable under 13 Geo. 3, c. 79, it must have been parted with or tendered, or offered, or used in some way to get money or credit upon it. Rex v. Shubard, R. & R. C. C. 300.

Showing a man an instrument, the uttering of which would be criminal, though with an intent of raising a false idea in him of the party's substance, is not an uttering or publishing within the statute. Id.

Nor will the leaving it afterwards, sealed up, with the person to whom it was shown, under cover, that he may take charge of it, as being too valuable to be carried about, be an uttering or publishing. Id.

The offence of disposing and putting away forged bank-notes is complete, although the person to whom they are disposed was an agent for the bank to detect utterers, and applied to the prisoner to purchase forged notes, and had them delivered to him as forged notes, for the purpose of disposing of them. Rex v. Holden, R. & R. C. C. 154; 2 Leach, C. C. 1019; 2 Taunt. 334.

A bill was addressed to Messrs. Williams & Co., bankers, Birchin Lane, London, and there might, at that time, have been a 3 on the lower left hand corner of the bill; the prisoner was asked at the time whether the acceptors were Williams, Birch, & Co., and his answer imported that they were. Williams, Birch, & Co. lived at No. 20, Birchin Lane, and it was not their acceptance. There were no known bankers in London using the style of Williams & Co. but them; but at No. 3, Birchin Lane, the name of "Williams & Co." was on the door; and some bills addressed to Messrs. Williams & Co., bankers, Swansea, had been accepted, payable at No. 3, and had been paid there. There was no evidence who lived at No. 3, but another bill of the same tenor as that in question, drawn by the prisoner, had been accepted there:—Held, that, on these facts the prisoner was improperly convicted of uttering a forged acceptance, knowing it to be forged. Rex v. Watts, R. & R. C. C. 436; 3 R. & B. 197.

If a person knowingly deliver a forged bank-note to another, who knowingly utters it accordingly, the prisoner, who delivered such note to be put off, might have been convicted of having disposed and put away the same, on the stat. 15 Geo. 2, c. 13, s. 11. Rex v. Palmer, R. & R. C. C. 79; 1 N. R. 96; 2 Leach, C. C. 978.

Uttering a forged bill of exchange, purporting drawer's. Rex v. Wick, R. & R. C. C. 149—See Bayley.

And such an instrument is a bill of exchange, although it is not accepted or indorsed. Id.

4. Offences connected with Forgery.

1 Will. 4, c. 68.

As to procuring stockholders, see note, III.

Procuring a person to forge a bill or note is capital offence. Rex v. Morris, Bayl. 5th, 66.

Procuring to utter, a common felony only. Id.

Giving a confederate a forged bank-note, so he may utter it, is a disposing and putting away thereof. Rex v. Palmer, Bayl. 5th, 66.

Therefore if A. delivered to B. a forged bank-note, to be put off by the latter, this was "disposing of and putting away" by A. within 15 Geo. 2, c. 13, s. 11. Rex v. Palmer, 1 R. & B. 11. And see Brooks v. Warwick, 2 Stark. 381.

The intent to defraud the bank constitutes the offence of feloniously disposing of and putting away counterfeit bank-notes, and it is so in the case by the circumstance that the notes were furnished by the prisoner in consequence of an application made by an agent employed then by the bank, and that they were delivered to him as forged notes, for the purpose of being disposed of by that agent. Rex v. Holden, 2 Taunt. 334.

Semble, that without the actual possession of forged notes, if they had been put in any place under a person's control and by his direction such person might have been indicted on 45 Geo. 3, c. 69, s. 6, for having them in his custody or possession. Rex v. Rowley, R. & R. C. C. 14.

Where, on an indictment on 45 Geo. 3, c. 69, s. 6, for knowingly and wittingly having in his possession forged Bank of England notes, it appeared that the prisoner being suspected of being such in his possession was requested by A. to sell him some, which he said he would do, and A. accordingly paid him for them; the prisoner then went out as he said to fetch the notes, but on his return said, "he had put them in a particular place," which he directed A. then went to look for the notes, and the prisoner followed him, but whilst A. was looking for them, the prisoner threw a stone into the place, and said there they are; A., on looking there, found the notes in an old shoe:—Held, that the prisoner had a sufficient possession within the meaning of the statute. Id.

Semble, that every uttering of forged notes was the same as having them in actual custody and possession within the statute. Id.

Semble, that where a company carry on the business of bankers, although incorporated for totally different purposes, it was an offence under 41 Geo. 3, c. 67, s. 2, for a person to have a plan for making promissory notes in the name of such corporate company. Rex v. Gampel, R. & R. C. C. 65.

ness, which he pays to B.; the note is afterwards stopped at the bank as a forged note, and is brought by an inspector to A., who immediately pays to B. the amount of the note, and refuses to give it up to the inspector, insisting on his right to retain it, in order to recover the amount from the person from whom he received it. The inspector, in the absence of all circumstances of suspicion, is not justified in charging A. before a magistrate with feloniously having the note in his possession, knowing it to be forged, for the purpose of compelling him to give up the note. By possession under the stat. 45 Geo. 3, c. 89, was meant the original possession of a note acquired in an illegal mode, and not a subsequent possession, like the above, where the original possession was legal. Brooks v. Warwick, 2 Stark. 389—Ellenborough.

5. Indictment.

It is only necessary to aver a general intent to defraud A. B., without setting out the manner in which that fraud was to be effected. Rex v. Powell, 2 W. Black. 787.

"As follows" is a sufficient averment of the tenor of a forged receipt in an indictment. Id.

Alleging that the prisoner forged a bill or note "as follows" implies that what follows is in the very words of the bill or note, and makes it necessary to prove the bill or note verbatim. Rex v. Powell, Bayl. Bills, 445.

And if the bill or note contain figures, the indictment may follow it in that respect. Id.

In an indictment, the words, "in manner and form following, that is to say," do not bind the party to recite the instrument, &c., verbatim, nor render a mere formal omission or mistake fatal. Rex v. May, 1 Dougl. 193.

All indictments for forgery must have set out the forged instrument in words and figures. Rex v. Mason, 1 East, 180. But see the stat. 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 123, s. 3.

An indictment for forgery is bad if it describe the bill or note as signed by the person whose name is supposed to have been forged. Rex v. Carter, Bayl. Bills, 446.

An indictment for forging a paper writing purporting to be the will of A. B. is good. Rex v. Birch, 2 W. Black. 790.

A count charging a prisoner with uttering a forged bill, with intent to defraud A. B., and setting out the bill with the acceptance upon it, is not supported by proving that the prisoner uttered the bill, and that the acceptance on it was a forgery. Rex v. Horsell, 6 C. & P. 148.

A count stated that the prisoner had a bill in his possession (which was set out) with a forged acceptance on it, (which was also set out,) and that he, knowing the acceptance to be forged, uttered the bill with intent to defraud A. B.:—Held, not good. Id.

In an indictment charging that defendant having in his possession a bill of exchange, purportand description of J. King, forged the acceptance of the said J. King, &c., is bad, because the word "purport" means what appears on the face of the instrument, and the bill did not purport to be drawn on J. King. Rex v. Reading, 1 East, 180, n.: S. P. Rex v. Gilchrist, 1 East, 180, n.

So, where an indictment charged that the bill purported to be directed to Richard Down, Henry Thornton, John Freer, and John Cornwall, jun., by the name and description of Messrs. Down, Thornton, & Co. Rex v. Edsall, 1 East, 180, n.

Where the forging is by alteration, the indictment may charge that the prisoner forged the altered indorsement, or that he altered by forging, for altering is forging. Rex v. Teague, Rex v. Elsworth, Bayl. Bills, 443.

An indictment which charges a forged check to be "a warrant and order for the payment of money, which said warrant and order are in the words and figures following," is good. Rex v. Crowther, 5 C. & P. 316—Bosanquet.

Where a prisoner was convicted of forging an instrument (purporting to be a Prussian note) in a foreign language, but no count in the indictment contained an English translation of the note; judgment was ordered to be arrested. Rex v. Goldstein, 7 Moore, 1; 10 Price, 88; 3 B. & B. 201; Bayl. Bills, 444.

Upon an indictment for publishing a forged receipt for money, with the name Stephen Withers, &c., for the sum of 1*l.* 4*s.*, it was held sufficient to set forth only the receipt itself as follows: "8th March, 1773. Received the contents above by me, Stephen Withers;" without setting forth the account itself to which such receipt referred, and at the foot of which it was subscribed; that account being only evidence to make out the charge. Rex v. Testick, 1 East, 181, n.

An indictment charged that a precept had been issued to Christopher Hindle, high constable of B., to collect 2*l.* 1*l.* 4*d.*, and that a receipt for 2*l.* 1*l.* 4*d.* had been forged, by falsely cementing to the said precept, at the foot, a receipt in the handwriting of Henry Hargreaves, of the tenor following, "1825, received H. H." which had been before then written by Hargreaves for other money, and that the prisoner uttered it with intent to defraud Hargreaves. This was held bad, because there was nothing to show what the initials H. H. meant, and nothing to show what connection Hargreaves had with Hindle, or with the receipt. Rex v. Barton, R. & M. C. C. R. 141.

An indictment for forging the word "settled," at the bottom of a bill of parcels, importing that the bill had been paid, must show by proper averments that it is a receipt, although stat. 35 Geo. 3, c. 55, says that such a memorandum shall be deemed and taken to be a receipt. Rex v. Thompson, 2 Leach, C. C. 910.

An indictment for forging a scrip receipt, signed "C. Olier," stating "with the name C. Olier thereunto subscribed, purporting to have been signed by one Christopher Olier, and to be a receipt of the said Christopher Olier," is bad; for "C. Olier" does not upon the face of it purport to be Christopher Olier; but an indictment stating the tenor only, without any purporting, is good. Rex v. Reeves, 2 Leach, C. C. 808.

In an indictment for forging a bill of exchange, all the judges held that it need not be stamped before it could be received in evidence, though the 23 Geo. 3, c. 49, imposing a duty on such instruments, expressly says that no bill of exchange shall be received in evidence unless it is first duly stamped. Rex v. Hawkeswood, 2 T. R. 606 n.

In an indictment for uttering a forged bank-note, the words "purporting to be a bank-note" mean that the note upon the face of it appears to be a bank-note, and the want of such appearance cannot be supplied, so as to support the indictment, by any representation of the party when he disposed of it. Rex v. Jones, 1 Dougl. 300.

In an indictment for feloniously disposing and putting away counterfeit bank-notes, it is not necessary to aver to whom the note was so disposed of. Rex v. Holden, 2 Taunt. 334.

An indictment for forgery or for uttering a forged instrument must set it forth in words and figures. Rex v. Mason, 2 East, P. C. 975.

That the court may see whether it be an instrument within the statutes against this offence. Rex v. Lyon, 2 Leach, C. C. 597; 2 East, P. C. 933. But see the stat. 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 123, s. 3.

An indictment stating the tenor of a note is sustained by proof that the attestation of the witness, and the words "M. W. her mark," were added after the prisoner's signature, though on the same occasion. Rex v. Dunn, 2 East, P. C. 976; S. C. not S. P. 1 Leach, C. C. 57.

An indictment for forging a paper writing purporting to be a will is good. Rex v. Birch, 1 Leach, C. C. 79; 2 East, P. C. 980; 2 W. Black. 790.

Where an indictment on 41 Geo. 3, c. 57, s. 2, stated that the prisoner knowingly and without any authority from a certain corporate company called, &c., had in his custody a certain plate on which was engraved part of a promissory note, purporting to be the promissory note of the said company, and it appeared in evidence that this company carried on the business of bankers, although incorporated for a totally different purpose:—Held, that the indictment was bad, having omitted to aver that the company "carried on the business of bankers." Rex v. Catapodi, R. & R. C. C. 65.

An indictment for uttering a forged receipt for money, which sets out the receipt in terms, need not set forth the bill of items to which the receipt refers, as that is matter of evidence. Rex v. Testick, 2 East, P. C. 925; S. P. Rex v. Thompson, 2 Leach, C. C. 632, n.; 1 East, 181, n.

If any part of a true instrument be altered, the indictment may lay it to be a forgery of the whole instrument. Rex v. Dawson, 2 East, P. C. 978; 1 Str. 19.

For every alteration of a true instrument makes it a forgery of the whole. Id.

An indictment for forging a bill of exchange, stating it to be signed by H. H. instead of purporting only to be so signed, the signature itself being a forgery, is bad. Rex v. Carter, 1 Bl. P. C. 985.

A superfluous description of the instrument forged is not fatal. Therefore an indictment for forging a bond, laying it to be "a bond and writing obligatory," was good upon the stat. 9 Geo. 2, c. 25, though both terms were used in the statute; and a bond is a writing obligatory, though the converse do not hold generally. Rex v. Darnett, 2 East, P. C. 986; 2 Leach, C. C. 581.

An indictment on 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, charging that the prisoner feloniously altered a bill by making, forging, and adding a cipher, &c., was good, though the words of the statute were, "if any person shall falsely make, or forge, counterfeit, &c." Rex v. Elsworth, 2 East, P. C. 986.

And it need not be averred that the bill was tendered to the party with intent to defraud when the offence is laid to have been committed, or in what other manner he could be defrauded, though his name did not appear on the bill; for that is matter of evidence. Id.

An indictment for presenting a forged order to W. L., treasurer, &c., pretending it was genuine, and obtaining from W. L. under it 4l. 10s. 6d., after charging that the prisoner, with intent to cheat, &c., the treasurer, presented the order, and that he knowingly, &c., pretended it was a genuine order, proceeded, "and so the juror, &c., say that the prisoner, on the day and year, &c., did obtain the said sum of 4l. 10s. 6d.; but the intent to cheat and defraud W. L. was not stated in that part of the indictment, nor was the obtaining charged to have been effected knowingly and designedly; the indictment held bad. Rex v. Rushworth, R. & R. C. C. 317; 1 Stark. 36.

In an indictment for forgery, an averment of a general intent to defraud is sufficient, without setting out the particular mode by which the fraud was intended to be effected. Rex v. Pood, 1 Leach, C. C. 77; 2 East, P. C. 976; 2 W. Black. 787; Bayl. Bills, 445.

An indictment on 45 Geo. 3, c. 89, for uttering forged notes, need not have stated to whom the notes were disposed; it was sufficient to state that the prisoner disposed of the notes with intent to defraud the Bank, he knowing them at the time to be forged. Rex v. Holden, R. & R. C. C. 151; 2 Leach, C. C. 1019; 2 Taunt. 334.

Even though the person to whom they were disposed purchased them as and for, and bore them at the time to be, forged notes, and purchased them upon his own solicitation, and as agent for the bank, for the very purpose of bringing the offenders to justice. Id.

In an indictment for forgery, a description of a common intent of the person intended to be defrauded is sufficient. Rex v. Lovell, 1 Leach, C. C. 248; 2 East, P. C. 990.

In an indictment for forging, the words, "purporting to be a bank-note," mean that the instrument upon the face of it appears to be a bank-note: and the want of such appearance cannot be supplied by the representation of the party uttering it. Rex v. Jones, 1 Leach, C. C. 291; 2 East, P. C. 883; 1 Dougl. 302.

An indictment for forging a bill of exchange, stating that it purported to be directed to John King by the name and description of John Ring, Esq., is bad; for the purport of an instrument is that which appears on the face of it. Rex v. Reading, 2 Leach, C. C. 590; East, P. C. 952, 981.

A bank post-bill cannot, in an indictment for forging or uttering, be described as a bill of exchange; but it may be described as a bank bill of exchange. Rex v. Birkett, R. & R. C. C. 251.

Discharging one indorsement, and inserting another, or making it thereby a general instead of a special indorsement, may be described as altering an indorsement. Rex v. Birkett, R. & R. C. C. 251.

An indictment stating that the prisoner forged a certain paper instrument, partly printed and partly written, in the words and figures following, that is to say, &c., was held to be bad in form, as it did not state what the instrument was in respect of which the forgery was committed, nor how the party signing it had authority to sign it. Rex v. Wilcox, R. & R. C. C. 50.

An indictment for forgery stated the offence to have been committed in the county of Nottingham, and it was proved to have been committed in the county of the town:—Held, that although under the 38 Geo. 3, c. 52, it was triable in the county at large, the offence should have been laid in the county of the town. Rex v. Mellon, R. & R. C. C. 144. And see Rex v. Corah, 2 Russ. C. & M. 374.

An indictment on 43 Geo. 3, c. 139, s. 1, for forging a Prussian treasury note, stated the note, as it was, in a foreign language, but contained no English translation of it: judgment was arrested on the ground that the indictment ought to have contained such translation. Rex v. Goldstein, R. & R. C. C. 473; 3 B. & B. 201.

Semle, that the word “purporting,” in the 43 Geo. 3, c. 139, s. 1, rather referred to the person by or on whose behalf the instrument was issued than to the form of the instrument. Id.

If a statute, as 24 Geo. 3, c. 51, impose a duty on hats, and direct a stamp on paper tickets, denoting such duty, to be affixed to each hat sold; and a subsequent statute, as 36 Geo. 3, c. 125, enact, that so much of the former statute as relates to stamped paper tickets shall cease, and that a stamp denoting the duties imposed by the former act shall be affixed on the lining of each hat, an indictment expressly on the latter statute concluding in the singular number is good. Rex v. Collins, 2 Leach, C. C. 827.

An indictment for forging a transfer of stock is good, although the stock had never been accepted by the person in whose name it stood, and although the transfer was not witnessed according to the rules and directions of the bank. Rex v. Gade, 2 Leach, C. C. 732; 2 East, P. C. 874.

An indictment for forging a bill of exchange directed to Ransom, Moreland, and Hammersley, stating that it purported to be directed to George Lord Kinnauld, William Moreland, and Thomas Hammersley, by the names and description of Ransom, Moreland, and Hammersley, is bad; for the purport and tenor are repugnant. Rex v. Gilchrist, 2 Leach, C. C. 657; 2 East, P. C. 982: S. P. Rex v. Edsall, 2 East, P. C. 984.

If, on an indictment for forgery being presented to the grand jury, it appear that the forged instrument cannot be produced, either from its being in the hands of the prisoner, or from any other sufficient cause, the grand jury may receive secondary evidence of its contents. Rex v. Hunter, 3 C. & P. 591.—Park.

An indictment for forgery being presented to the grand jury, a witness declined to produce certain deeds before them:—Held, that if the deeds formed a part of the evidence of the witness's title to his own estate he was not compellable to produce them, but that if they did not the grand jury might compel their production. Rex v. Hunter, 3 C. & P. 591.—Park and Parke.

On an indictment for uttering a forged deed, it appeared that the deed alleged to have been forged was produced in evidence by the prisoner's attorney on the trial of an ejectment, in which the prisoner was lessor of the plaintiff; and that, after the trial, it was returned to the prisoner's attorney:—Held, that if the prisoner did not produce the deed, he having had notice to produce it, secondary evidence might be given of its contents, without calling his attorney to prove what he had done with the deed. If, as secondary evidence of the contents of the deed, the draft be given in evidence, and in the draft words be abbreviated, which, in the setting out of the deed in the indictment, are put in words at length, it will be for the jury to say whether they think that the words abbreviated in the draft were inserted at length in the deed itself. Rex v. Hunter, 4 C. & P. 128.—Vaughan.

If a forged deed be in the possession of a prisoner, who is indicted for forging it, the prosecutor is not entitled to give secondary evidence of its contents, unless he has, a reasonable time before the commencement of the assizes, given the prisoner notice to produce it; and a notice given to the prisoner during the assizes is too late; but if the prisoner has said that he has destroyed the deed, no notice to produce it will be necessary. A. was charged with forgery, and B. was examined on oath before the magistrate as a witness against A.; after this, B. was himself charged with a different forgery:—Held, that the deposition of B. was evidence against him on his trial for the forgery, notwithstanding that it was taken on oath. Rex v. Haworth, 4 C. & P. 254.—Parke.

6. Evidence.

Upon an indictment for disposing of and putting away a forged bank-note, knowing it to be forged, the prosecutor may give evidence of other forged notes having been uttered by the prisoner, in order to prove his knowledge of the forgery. Rex v. Wylie, 1 N. R. 92: S. P. Rex v. Tattersall, 1 N. R. 93, n.; and Rex v. Ball, 1 Camp. 324.

So, proof that a prisoner had in his possession other bills or notes of the same kind is admissible. Rex v. Hough, Bayl. Bill, 447.

So, proof that he pointed out where such others were hid. Rex v. Rowley, Bayl. Bills, 448.

And evidence may be given of the prisoner's general conduct at other utterings of the same sort of bills or notes, and that he passed by different names. Rex v. Millard, Bayl. Bills, 419.

The finding a forged bill in the custody of a person is no evidence that it was forged in the county where it was found, though under circumstances of great suspicion. Rex v. Crocker, 2 Leach, C. C. 987; 2 N. R. 87.

Where a prisoner forged a note in the county of S., and some time afterwards removed into the county of W., where he was taken into custody with the note in his possession, and where the indictment was laid. On a question that it ought to have been laid in the county of S.:—Held, that the fact of the note being found in the prisoner's possession in W., where he had resided some months, was evidence to go to the jury of his having fabricated it there. Id.

Finding a note forged by A. in the hands of B., who uttered it in the county of M., in which also A. was, though not present at the fact of uttering, is no evidence of the note having been forged by A. in that county, though other notes of the same kind were also there found upon him. Rex v. Parkes, 2 East, P. C. 992.

A forged bill was found upon A., who then resided in Wiltshire, and had resided there about a year under a false name, but which bill bore date at a time when A. lived in Somersetshire, in the neighbourhood of the person whose signature was forged, and more than two years previous to the period of the bill being found upon him. On an indictment of A. for forgery of the note in Wiltshire, this was held not to be sufficient evidence of the offence having been committed in that county. Rex v. Crocker, 2 N. R. 87.

Where a prisoner forged the name of his co-trustee, to a power of attorney for selling stock, standing in their joint names, and the forgery being discovered, the stock was not sold:—Held, that such trustee was a competent witness to prove the forgery by the prisoner. Rex v. Wait, 7 Moore, 473; 1 Bing. 121; 11 Price, 518.

Upon an indictment for forging and uttering a forged acceptance to a bill of exchange in payment for goods, which the prisoner had promised to pay for by an acceptance of a London banker, the bill was addressed to and purported to be accepted by Messrs. Williams & Co., bankers, 3, Birchin Lane, London; and it was proved that Messrs. Williams, Burgess, & Co., bankers, of No. 20 in that lane, had not accepted the bill, and that there were no other bankers of that name in London; it being proved that there was a brass plate on the door of No. 3, having the words Williams & Co. thereon; but there was no evidence to show that Messrs. Williams & Co. of 3, Birchin Lane, had not done so:—Held, that this did not amount to a proof of forgery as against the prisoner. Rex v. Watts, 6 Moore, 442; 3 B. & B. 197; 9 Price, 620.

To prove the forging of a bank-note, it is not necessary that the signing clerk at the bank should be produced, if witnesses acquainted with his hand-writing state that the signature to the note is not in his hand-writing. Bent Prescriptions, R. & R. C. C. 378.

On an indictment for forging a bank-note, a letter purporting to come from the prisoner's brother, and left by the postman pursuant to its direction, at the prisoner's lodgings, after he was apprehended and during his confinement, but never actually in his custody, cannot be read in evidence against him on his trial. Rex v. Hunt, 2 Leach, C. C. 820.

On an indictment on stat. 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, for uttering forged receipts or acquittances for money, proof that the defendant (who was the representative of one deceased, who had contracted with the Navy Board) produced forged receipts or vouchers as if from the persons employed by C. to supply the articles wanted, with intent to induce the board to pass C.'s accounts, would have made it an offence within the statute, though the persons whose receipts were so forged were only accountable to C., and not to the Navy Board. Rex v. Thomas, 2 East, P. C. 934.

On a count for uttering several of such forged receipts, the court will not put the prosecutor to his election on which receipt to proceed, if they be all uttered at the same time. Id.

Where, on the trial of a prisoner for forging a note, it appeared that he had kept the note in his possession, and never uttered or attempted to make any use of it:—Held, whether the note was made innocently, or with intent to defraud, was for the consideration of the jury, and to be collected from the facts proved. Rex v. Crocker, R. & R. C. C. 97; 2 N. R. 87; 2 Leach, C. C. 987—Le Blanc.

A jury ought to infer an intent to defraud the person who would have to pay a forged instrument if it were genuine, although from the manner of executing the forgery, or from that person's ordinary caution, it would not be likely to impose on him, and although the object was generally to defraud whoever might take the instrument, and the intention of defrauding in particular the person who would have to pay the instrument if genuine did not enter into the prisoner's contemplation. Rex v. Mazagora, R. & R. C. C. 291.

A forged check on the W. bank was presented for payment at the S. bank, where the supposed drawer never kept cash:—Held, that this was sufficient evidence of an intent to defraud the partners of the S. bank, although there was no probability of their paying the check, even if it had been genuine. Rex v. Crouther, 5 C. & P. 316—Bosanquet.

Uttering a forged order for the payment of money under a false representation is evidence of knowing it to be forged. Rex v. Sheppard, 1 Leach, C. C. 226; 2 East, P. C. 967; R. & R. C. C. 169.

Uttering a forged stock receipt to a person who employed the prisoner to buy stock to that amount, and advanced the money, is sufficient evidence of an intent to defraud that person; and the oath of the person to whom the receipt was uttered, that he believed the prisoner had no such intent, will not repel the presumption of an intention to defraud. Id.

If, on an indictment for forging a bill of exchange, it appears that the prisoner assumed a false name on such bill, and there is proof of his real name, it is for him to prove that he used the assumed name before the time he had the fraud in view, even in the absence of all proof as to what name he had used for several years before the fraud in question. Rex v. Peacock, R. & R. C. C. 278.

To support a charge of forgery by subscribing a fictitious name, there must be satisfactory evidence on the part of the prosecutor that it was not the party's real name, and that it was assumed for the purpose of fraud in that instance. Rex v. Bontien, R. & R. C. C. 260—Diss. Heath.

In an indictment for forging a bill of exchange, the bill may be given in evidence, although it be not stamped. Rex v. Hawkeswood, 1 Leach, C. C. 257; 2 East, P. C. 955; S. P. Rex v. Morton, 2 East, P. C. 955; 1 Leach, C. C. 259, n.

If a bill purporting to be accepted by J. K. be shown to him, and he declares it to be a good bill, that is a sufficient proof that he wrote the acceptance. Rex v. Hevey, 1 Leach, C. C. 232.

On an indictment for forging a seaman's will, the muster-book of the Navy-Office is good evidence to prove the identity of the supposed testator. Rex v. Rhodes, 1 Leach, C. C. 24; S. P. Rex v. Fitzgerald, 1 Leach, C. C. 20; 2 East, P. C. 953.

On an indictment for forging a scrip receipt, it must appear that the receipt was signed subsequent to the passing of the statute on which the indictment is founded; but though signed before, yet if it was uttered after the passing of the act, the prisoner may be convicted on the count for uttering it, knowing it to be forged. Rex v. Reeves, 2 Leach, C. C. 808, 814.

On an indictment for forging a will, the probate of that will unrepealed is not conclusive evidence of its validity, so as to be a bar to the prosecution. Rex v. Buttery, R. & R. C. C. 342; S. P. Rex v. Gibson, R. & R. C. 343, n.—Ellenb.

Where, on an indictment for forging a bill of exchange, it appears that other forged bills upon the same house were found upon the prisoner at the time of his apprehension, they are admissible as evidence of guilty knowledge. Rex v. Hough, R. & R. C. C. 120.

If the possession of other forged instruments is offered in evidence to prove a guilty knowledge, there must be regular evidence that such instruments were forged; proof that the prisoner returned the money on such an instrument, and received the instrument back, is not sufficient without producing the instrument or duly accounting for its non-production. Rex v. Millard, R. & R. C. C. 245.

To prove the guilty knowledge of an utterer of a forged bank-note, evidence may be given of his having previously uttered other forged notes, knowing them to be forged. Rex v. Whiley, 2 Leach, C. C. 983; 1 N. R. 92.

Semble, that on an indictment for uttering a bill of exchange with a forged acceptance, knowing the acceptance to be forged, other forged bills of exchange precisely similar, passed to the prosecutor by the prisoner, may be given in evidence to show a guilty knowledge in the prisoner, though they were not passed till about a month after the uttering for which the prisoner is tried. Rex v. Smith, 4 C. & P. 411—Gaselee.

Proof that a prisoner on uttering a note represented the maker as living at a particular place, and in a particular line of business, the evidence that it is not that person's note is sufficient to prove it a forgery, especially if the prisoner be the payee of the note; and proof that there is another person of the name in a different line of business will not make it necessary for the prosecutor to show that it was not that person's note. Rex v. Hampton, R. & M. C. C. R. 255.

Where a bill purported to be accepted by "Samuel Knight, Market-place, Birmingham," it was held, on an indictment for the forgery of the acceptance, that the result of inquiries made at Birmingham by the prosecutor, who was not acquainted with the place, was evidence for the jury, though neither the best nor the usual evidence given to prove the non-existence of a party whose name is used. Rex v. King, 5 C. & P. 126—Parke and Parke.

On an indictment for forging a check, purporting to be drawn by G. A. upon Messrs. J. L. & Co., proof that no person named G. A. keeps an account with or has any right to draw on Messrs. J. L. & Co. is prima facie evidence that G. A. is a fictitious person. Rex v. Backler, 5 C. & P. 118—Gaselee and Parke.

Upon an indictment for uttering a forged note, evidence is admissible of the prisoner's having, at a prior time, uttered another forged note of the same manufacture; and also that other notes of the same fabrication had been found on the files of the bank, with the prisoner's hand-writing on the back of them, in order to show the prisoner's knowledge of the note mentioned in the indictment being a forgery. Rex v. Ball, R. & R. C. C. 132; 1 Camp. 324—Diss. Chambre.

In order to show a guilty knowledge, on an indictment for uttering forged bank-notes, evidence of another uttering, subsequent to the one charged, is not admissible, unless the latter uttering was in some way connected with the principal case, or it can be shown that the notes were of the same manufacture; for only previous or contemporaneous acts can show quo animo a thing is done. Rex v. Taverner, Car. C. L. 195.

If a second uttering be made the subject of a distinct indictment, it cannot be given in evidence to show a guilty knowledge in a former uttering. Rex v. Smith, 2 C. & P. 633—Vaughan.

The cases of Rex v. Russell, 1 Leach, C. C. 8; Rex v. Crocker, R. & R. C. C. 97; 2 N. R. 87, 2 Leach, C. C. 987; Rex v. Smith, 2 East, P. C. 1000, 1 Leach, C. C. 333, n.; Rex v. Rhodes, 1 Leach, C. C. 26; Thornton's case, 2 Leach, C. C.

634; Rex v. Testick, 2 East, P. C. 1000; S. P. Rex v. Wells, Id.: Rex v. Dodd, 1 Leach, C. C. 157; Rex v. Wait, R. & R. C. C. 505, 1 Bing. 121, 11 R. & M. 518; Rex v. Parr, 1 Leach, C. C. 434, 438; Rex v. Wait, 7 Moore, 473, 1 Bing. 121, 11 Price, 518; Rex v. Pigeon, 1 C. & P. 98; Rex v. Mott, Bayl. Billa, 451; Rex v. Young, 1 Phil. Evid. 127; Rex v. Crocker, 2 N. R. 87; Rex v. Treble, R. & R. C. C. 164; Rex v. Usher, 1 Leach, C. C. 48, 2 East, P. C. 999; S. P. Rex v. Testick, 2 East, P. C. 925; Rex v. Akhurst, 1 Leach, C. C. 150, 2 East, P. C. 1003; Rex v. Taylor, 1 Leach, C. C. 214, 2 East, P. C. 690; Rex v. Sponsonby, 1 Leach, C. C. 332, 2 East, P. C. 996; Rex v. Mott, R. & R. C. C. 435; Rex v. Young, R. & R. C. C. 281, n.; Rex v. Peacock, R. & R. C. C. 278, are all on the question how far the party whose name was forged was a competent witness; but that is now regulated by 9 Geo. 4, c. 32, s. 2.

On an indictment for forging a bank-note, the cashier who signed "for the governor and company of the Bank of England" is a competent witness to prove the forgery. Rex v. Newland, 1 Leach, C. C. 311; 2 East, P. C. 1001; R. & R. C. C. 378.

But he is not an essential witness, as his handwriting may be disproved by other witnesses and evidence. Rex v. Hughes and Rex v. McGuire, 2 East, P. C. 1002; 1 Leach, C. C. 311, n.

If, on the trial of a prisoner for forging a note, there appears to have been found another note in the same pocket-book as the note for which the prisoner took his trial, payable to the prisoner or order, and purporting to be signed by W. G., W. G. is admissible to prove that the signature was not in his handwriting. Rex v. Crocker, R. & R. C. C. 97; 2 N. R. 87; 2 Leach, 987—Le Blanc.

The maker of a note purporting to be payable on demand at his own abode, or at a London banker's, and not paid at either place, is a competent witness to prove whether he has made it payable at the banker's where it purports to be payable. Rex v. Treble, 2 Taunt. 328.

The drawer's name appearing to be forged on a bill, as well as the indorser's, it is no objection that the former was not called to prove upon whom the bill was drawn, there being two of the name at the place; and if it be shown by other evidence who the prisoner meant by the person whose name he forged as the payee and indorser. Rex v. Downes, 2 East, P. C. 997.

In an indictment for forging a will, a variance between the will recited, by introducing the pronoun "I," and that produced in evidence is fatal. Rex v. Coogan, 1 Leach, C. C. 448.

On an indictment for forgery within the stat. 5 Eliz., a variance of Janick Park for Jawick, in the forged deed, is not material. Rex v. Crooke, 2 East, P. C. 921.

An indictment for forging an indenture of apprenticeship and a receipt for money, with intent to defraud A., B., C., &c., the stewards of the Feast of the Sons of the Clergy, is sustained by proof that the stewards had the disposition of a charitable fund raised by voluntary contributions, out of which the apprentice fee, sought to be obtained by the forgery, was to be taken. Rex v. Jones, 2 East, P. C. 991.

Where, on an indictment for forging a note, evidence has been left to the jury of forged bills uttered by the prisoner on other occasions, which were not proved to have been forged, the prisoner should be recommended to mercy. Rex v. Milard, R. & R. C. C. 245.

The Bank having preferred several indictments for uttering and having in possession, in respect of the same note, and having elected to proceed on the indictment for having in possession:—Held, that although facts sufficient to support the capital charge were made out in proof, an acquittal for the minor offence ought not to be directed, because the whole of the minor offence was proved, and it did not merge in the larger. Bank Prosecutions, R. & R. C. C. 378.

The Bank may elect to proceed on an indictment or a lesser offence, although an indictment has been found for a capital charge in respect of forging the same note. Id.

LXVIII. PERJURY AND FALSE OATHS.

1. The Offence.

5 Eliz. c. 9; 2 Geo. 2, c. 25; made perpetual by 9 Geo. 2, c. 8.]—There are a great number of perjury clauses in various acts of parliament, each relating to the oaths respecting the subject-matter of those acts respectively.

To found an indictment for perjury, the requisite circumstances are these: the oath must be taken in a judicial proceeding, before a competent jurisdiction; and it must be material to the question depending, and false. Rex v. Aylmer, 1 T. R. 63.

With respect to the falsity of an oath, it has been considered to be immaterial whether the fact which is sworn to be in itself true or false. Rex v. Edwards, 2 Russ. C. & M. 518.

No perjury can be assigned upon a foreign affidavit. Musgrave v. Medez, 19 Ves. jun. 562.

But any person making, or knowingly making, a false affidavit made abroad, is guilty of a misdemeanour in attempting to pervert public justice, and is punishable by indictment. Omely v. Newell, 8 East, 364.

Falsehood, not strictly amounting to perjury, is an indictable offence as a misdemeanour. Ex parte Overton, 2 Rose, Bkt. Cas. 257.

Inciting a witness to give particular evidence when the inciter does not know whether it is true or false, is a high misdemeanour; especially if he, being an attorney on one side, gets himself employed for that purpose on the other side; at least if the evidence is given accordingly. Id.

A man may be indicted for perjury, in swearing that he believes a fact to be true which he must know to be false, although he does not swear positively. Rex v. Pedley, 1 Leach, C. C. 335.

The taking a false oath before a surrogate, to procure a marriage license, will not support a prosecution for perjury. Rex v. Foster, R. & R. C. C. 459; 2 Russ. C. & M. 520. And see Rex v. Alexander, 1 Leach, C. C. 63.

If an indictment for taking a false oath before a surrogate, to procure a marriage license, only charges the taking the false oath, without stating it was for the purpose of procuring a license, or that a license was procured thereby, the party cannot be punished thereon as for a misdemeanor. Id.

But if the purpose is to obtain a license, and the license is obtained and the marriage had, the party may be indicted as for a misdemeanor. Id.

It must either appear upon the face of the indictment, or it must be expressly alleged, that the oath was material. Rex v. McKeron, 2 Russ. C. & M. 541: S. P. Rex v. Bignold, 2 Russ. C. & M. 541.

A cause was referred, by a judge's order, to C. D.; and by the order it was directed that the witnesses should be sworn before a judge, "or before a commissioner duly authorized." A witness was sworn before a commissioner for taking affidavits, and examined viva voce by the arbitrator:—Held, that a witness so sworn was not indictable for perjury. Rex v. Hanks, 3 C. & P. 119—Gaselee.

An indictment for perjury may be supported against a marksman, for swearing falsely in an affidavit, though it would not be receivable in the court it was sworn in, because the jurats did not state that it had been read over to the party swearing it; but the person administering the oath must prove that the party swearing it in fact understood its contents, and the perjury is complete at the time of the swearing of the affidavit; and whether it be receivable in the court or not is immaterial, if the reason why it is not receivable is, that some formal regulation is not complied with. Rex v. Hailey, 1 C. & P. 258—Littledale; 1 R. & M. 94.

A person cannot be convicted of perjury on an affidavit, if it refer to a former affidavit, which the prosecutor is not in a condition to prove. Id.

But quære whether an indictment for perjury can be sustained upon an affidavit in support of a petition in bankruptcy sworn before the petition was filed? Rex v. Dudman, 2 Glyn & J. Bkt. Cas. 389.

A party filing a bill for an injunction, and making an affidavit of matters material to it, is indictable for perjury committed in that affidavit, though no motion was ever made for the injunction. Rex v. White, 1 M. & M. 271—Tenterden.

Perjury may be assigned upon an affidavit of an attorney of the court, made in answer to a charge exhibited against him in a summary way, for having in his possession blank pieces of paper with affidavit stamps, and the signatures of a master extraordinary in Chancery and another person at the bottom of the papers. Rex v. Crossley, 7 T. R. 315.

The punishments directed by the stat. 18 Geo.

2, c. 18, to be inflicted upon perjury in falsely taking the freeholder's oath at an election of a knight of the shire, are cumulative under the stat. 5 Eliz. c. 9, s. 6, and 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, s. 2, to which the first mentioned statute refers. Rex v. Price, 6 East, 327.

In an answer in Chancery to a bill filed against the defendant for the specific performance of an agreement relating to the purchase of land, the defendant had relied on the Statute of Frauds, (the agreement not being in writing), and had also denied having entered into any such agreement. Upon this denial in his answer, the defendant was indicted for perjury:—Held, that the denial of an agreement, which, by the Statute of Frauds, was not binding on the parties, was immaterial and irrelevant, and that the defendant was entitled to his acquittal. Rex v. Dunston, 1 R. & M. 109—Abbott.

Perjury cannot form the subject of an indictment where the supposed perjury depends upon the construction of a deed. Rex v. Crespigny, 1 Esp. 280—Kenyon. And see Rex v. Pepys, Peake, 138.

Quære, whether a person giving his evidence under a commission issuing out of a court of law for the examination of witnesses in Scotland could be convicted of perjury? Calliand v. Vaughan, 1 B. & P. 210.

If the record of a cause be erroneous, no perjury can be assigned for false testimony given in the course of the trial. Rex v. Cohen, 1 Stark. 511—Ellenborough.

Where perjury was assigned on evidence given before the sheriff's secondary on an inquisition of damages, where the writ of inquiry was directed to be returned into C. P. instead of K. B.:—Held, that an indictment would lie upon the alleged perjury. Pippett v. Hearn, 1 D. & R. 266; 5 B. & A. 634.

A prisoner in custody on a charge of perjury is not dischargeable on the indictment being removed into the King's Bench; but if he had been on bail, such removal would have discharged the recognizance. Rex v. Richardson, 2 Leach, C. C. 500.

2. Indictment and Information.

23 Geo. 2, c. 11.

In an indictment for perjury committed at an Admiralty sessions, where the commission was directed to A., B., and C., and others not named, of whom A., B., and C., were amongst others to be one; the court will take it to mean, that, if either of the persons named of the quorum were present, it would be sufficient. Rex v. Dowlin, 5 T. R. 311.

In such case the commission need not be set out in the indictment. Id. 317.

For by stat. 23, Geo. 2, c. 11, the prosecutor need only set forth the substance of the offence charged, and by what court, or before whom the oath was taken, (averring such court, &c. to have competent authority to administer the same, &c.), without setting forth the commission or authority of the court, &c. Id. 318.

But where he undertakes to set out more of the proceedings than he need under the statute, he must set them forth correctly. Id. 317.

Stating that at such a court, (a Court of Admiralty Session,) J. K. was in due form of law tried upon a certain indictment then and there depending against him for murder, and that at and upon the said trial, it then and there became and was made a material question whether, &c., are sufficient averments that the perjury was committed on the trial of J. K. for the murder, and that the question on which the perjury was assigned was material on that trial. Id. 311.

It is not necessary to set forth so much of the proceedings of the former trial as will show the materiality of the question on which the perjury is assigned; it is sufficient to allege generally that the particular question became material. Id. 318.

Indictment for perjury stated that it became a material question on the occasion of a certain alleged arrest—L. touched K., &c., and the defendant's evidence as set out was, L. put his arms round him and embraced him; innuendo that L. had, on the occasion to which the said evidence applied, touched the person of K.:—Held, that the materiality of the evidence did not sufficiently appear. Rex v. Nicholl, 1 B. & A. 21.

If an indictment for perjury undertake to set out continuously the substance and effect of what the defendant swore when examined as a witness it is necessary to prove that in substance and effect he swore the whole of that which is thus set out, though the indictment contains several distinct assignments of perjury. Rex v. Leefe, 2 Camp. 134—Ellenborough.

In an indictment there must be an allegation of time and place, which are sometimes material, and necessary to be laid with precision, and sometimes not. Rex v. Aylett, 1 T. R. 63.

A complaint having been made ore tenus by a solicitor before the Chancellor in the court of Chancery, of an arrest in returning home after the hearing of a cause, the indictment stating, that, "at and upon the hearing of the said complaint," the defendant deposed, &c., is a sufficient averment that the complaint was heard. Id.

The complaint of the defendant being, that he was taken before he got to his own house in the parish of St. Martin in the Fields; innuendo his house in the Haymarket, in St. Martin's, &c.; the innuendo is only a more particular description of the same house, and good. Id.

The oath being, that the defendant was arrested upon the steps of his own door; an innuendo that it was the outer door is good. Id.

Where time is not material, it need not be positively averred, and, if under a videlicet, may be rejected. Id.

Where an indictment averred, that the cause in which the alleged perjury was committed "came on to be tried, and was duly tried by a jury of the county;" and the record of the trial stated that the jury came of the neighbourhood of Westminster, instead of at Westminster:—Held, to be no objection, as the cause was in fact so tried, and no county was mentioned in the record. Rex v. Israel, 3 D. & R. 234.

It is sufficiently certain if it is stated that the defendant was in due manner sworn. Rex v. McCarther, Peake, 155—Kenyon.

An indictment which stated a bill of Middlesex as "issuing out of the office of the chief clerk, assigned to enrol pleas in the court," &c. was held bad. Rex v. Schoole, Peake, 112—Ken.

An indictment for perjury, assigned on affidavit sworn before the court, need not state, nor is it necessary to prove, that the affidavit was filed of record, or exhibited to the court, in any manner used by the party. Rex v. Cradock, 7 T. R. 315.

It is no objection to such an indictment, that it is not stated where the court was holden when the original application was made, or when the rule was made, calling on the defendant to answer the charge; a sufficient venue being laid to the fact of taking the false oath. Id.

In an indictment for perjury, the crime was alleged to be committed in the time of the late king, but was charged to be against the peace of the now king: this error was fatal, and rendered the indictment totally insufficient. Lockup v. Be (in error), 4 Bro. P. C. 332. But see the stat. 1 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 20.

Perjury being committed in the borough within the limits of the city of Gloucester, which is a county in itself, on the trial of a cause before a jury of the county at large, the indictment may be found and tried by the jury of the county at large. Rex v. Gough, 2 Dougl. 791.

A witness committed perjury at the Worcester county quarter sessions, which are held in the Guildhall of Worcester, which is situate in the county of the city of Worcester:—Held, that an indictment for this perjury might be preferred in the county of the city of Worcester. Rex v. Jones, 6 C. & P.—Tindal.

An indictment for perjury in an affidavit laid this general allegation, "all which said matters and things so as aforesaid deposed and sworn to by the said J. D. were and are material in the matter of the said J. D., a bankrupt." Question whether the perjury was well assigned without going on to aver that the affidavit had been used, or was intended to have been used, in a judicial proceeding? Rex v. Dudson, 7 D. & R. 231; 1 B. & C. 850.

The day of filing a bill in Chancery is not material when it is not alleged as part of the record. Rex v. Hicks, 1 Stark. 521—Ellenborough.

Where the indictment alleged "that the defendant, at the time of effecting a policy, purporting to have been underwritten by A., B., C., and others, on a day specified, well known, &c., and on producing the policy it appeared that A. underwrote the policy on a different day: the defect is fatal, although it appeared that B., C., &c. did underwrite the policy on that day. Id.

An indictment for perjury, charging that the defendant "falsely and maliciously gave false testimony," without averring that the offence was "wilfully" or that it was "corruptly" committed, is bad in arrest of judgment. Rex v. Richards, 7 D. & R. 655; S. O. nom. Rex v. Stevens, 5 B. & C. 346.

Quere, whether an indictment at common law for perjury must not charge the offence to have been "wilfully" as well as corruptly committed? Id.

Another count alleged that at the trial of the prosecutor he was found guilty "by means of the false and malicious testimony of defendant in the first count mentioned;" that on a rule nisi for a new trial, the defendant knowingly, falsely, wilfully, and corruptly, made affidavit that the evidence given by him at the trial was true, "whereas it was false in the particulars in the first count assigned and set forth:"—Held, that this count also was bad, for that it should have averred distinctly that defendant was sworn as a witness, and deposed to certain facts at the trial of G. H., instead of leaving it to be taken by indictment. Id.

An information for perjury, charging that the defendant, before a committee of the House of Commons, being duly sworn, "knowingly and deliberately, and of his own act and consent, did depose and swear" to certain facts set forth in the information; and that he afterwards, at the bar of the House of Lords, being duly sworn, "knowingly, &c. did swear" to certain facts contradicting what he had previously sworn before the committee of the House of Commons; with a conclusion, "and so the defendant, in manner and form aforesaid, did commit wilful and corrupt perjury;" cannot be sustained, and is bad in arrest of judgment. Rex v. Harris, 1 D. & R. 578; 5 B. & A. 926.

Where an information for perjury, committed before a select committee of the House of Commons, appointed to try and determine the merits of an election, averred, that the committee was appointed for that purpose; and that they were sworn "to try the matter of the petition," &c.:—Held, that the situation of the committee was well described to support the averment, although described in the statute 10 Geo. 3, c. 16, s. 13, as a select committee "to try and determine the merits of the return or election." Rex v. Dunn, D. & R. 10.

Where upon an indictment for perjury, on a trial for felony, it neither appeared that the matter sworn was material, nor was it alleged to be so, it was held that if the original indictment had been set out, and the materiality could plainly have been collected, it would have been sufficient without any special averment, but that one or the other was absolutely necessary. Id.

The word "wilful" is not necessary in an indictment for perjury at common law. Rex v. Fox, 1 Leach, C. C. 71.

But it is otherwise in an indictment for perjury on stat. 5 Eliz. c. 9. Id.

An indictment for perjury committed on a trial for murder need not, in the statement of the indictment for murder, set out the means by which the murder was committed. Rex v. Lincoln, R. & R. C. C. 421; 2 Russ. C. & M. 538.

If, in an indictment for perjury, the oath is stated to have been at the assizes, before justices assigned to take the said assizes, before A. B., one of the said justices; the said justices then and there having power, &c.; it will be a fatal variance if the oath was administered when the judge was sitting under the commission of oyer and terminer and jail delivery. Id.

An indictment for perjury, laying the offence to have been committed "at the Guildhall of the city of London" is bad; for the venue must be laid in some parish or ward. Rex v. Harris, 2 Leach, C. C. 800. But see the stat 7 Geo 4, c. 64, s. 20.

It must appear or be alleged, in an indictment for perjury, that the person by whom the oath was administered had competent power to administer it. Rex v. Wood, 2 Russ. C. & M. 541—Eyre.

Therefore, where perjury was charged in swearing before a justice that S. S. had sworn twelve oaths, and it did not import that the oaths were sworn in the county for which the justice acted, judgment was arrested because it did not appear that the justice had any jurisdiction to administer the oath in question to the defendant. Id.

An indictment for perjury at an assize may allege the oath to have been taken before one of the judges in the commission, though the names of both are inserted in the caption. Rex v. Alford, 1 Leach, C. C. 150.

If an indictment for perjury charge that the defendant falsely swore to certain facts, and the deposition appear to be joint, and that his wife first deposes to the facts, and then the defendant swear that he is sure that A. B. is one of the persons who assaulted, &c., this is no variance, as it is sufficient for the indictment to state the substance of what the defendant swore. Rex v. Grindall, 2 C. & P. 563—Abbott.

In an indictment for making a false affidavit, it is sufficient to state that the defendant came before A. B. and took his corporal oath, (A. B. having power to administer an oath), without setting out the nature of A. B.'s authority. Rex v. Callanan, 6 B. & C. 102; 9 D. & R. 97.

Where perjury is assigned upon several parts of an affidavit, those parts may be set out in the indictment as if continuous, although they are in fact separated by the introduction of other matter. Id.

The assignment of perjury is not restricted to a mere negative of the very words of what the defendant swore, but may be expressed occasionally with greater amplification. Thus, where a defendant had sworn that he never did, at any time during his transactions with the commissioners of the Victualling Office, charge more than the usual sum of sixpence per quarter beyond the price he actually paid for any malt or grain purchased by him for the said commissioners as their corn-factor, and the indictment alleged that the defendant did charge more than sixpence per quarter for and in respect of such malt and grain so purchased; this was held to be a good assignment of perjury, though it was objected that the words, "in respect of," might include collateral and incidental expenses attending the corn and grain jointly with the charge for the corn and grain: and that, bearing that sense, the assignment of perjury was not positive and direct. Rex v. Atkinson, Dea. C. L. 1017.

The evidence of one witness is not sufficient to convict of perjury, as in such case there would be only one oath against another. Rex v. Lee, 2 Russ. C. & M. 545.

But two witnesses are not essentially necessary to disprove the fact sworn to; for if any material circumstance be proved by other witnesses, in confirmation of the witness who gives the direct testimony of perjury, it may turn the scale and warrant a conviction. Id.

And the rule does not apply where the evidence consists of the contradictory oath of the party accused. Rex v. Knill, 5 B. & A. 929, n.: S. P. Anon. 2 Russ. C. & M. 545.

3. Evidence.

In perjury committed in an answer in Chancery, it is sufficient proof of the fact of swearing and the identity of the defendant, to prove the hand-writing subscribed to the answer, and that the jurat was subscribed by the Master as being sworn before him. Rex v. Morris, 1 Leach, C. C. 50.

If the perjury be assigned in an answer in Chancery, evidence of the defendant's signature, and of that of the Master before whom the answer purports to be sworn, is sufficient proof of the defendant's having sworn, without calling the person who wrote the jurat. Rex v. Benson, 2 Camp. 508—Ellenborough.

In perjury upon an answer in Chancery, no need to prove the identity of the person, or the actual swearing. Rex v. Morris, 2 Burr. 1189.

On an indictment for perjury, in an answer to a bill in Chancery, the proving the hand-writing of the signature of the person who administered the oath is sufficient proof that it was sworn; and if the place at which such answer purported to have been sworn is in the jurat, it is sufficient evidence that the oath was administered at that place. Rex v. Spencer, 1 C. & P. 260—Abbott; 1 R. & M. 97.

Upon an indictment for perjury, in falsely taking the freeholder's oath at an election of a knight of the shire in the name of J. W.; it appearing by competent evidence that the freeholder's oath was administered to a person who polled on the second day of the election by the name of J. W., who swore to his freehold and place of abode; and that there was no such person, and that the defendant voted on the second day, and was no freeholder, and some time after boasted that he had done the trick, and was not paid enough for the job, and was afraid he should be pulled up for his bad vote; and it not appearing that more than one false vote was given on the second day's poll, or that the defendant voted in his own name, or in any other than the name of J. W.;—Held, that there was sufficient evidence for the jury to presume that the defendant voted in the name of J. W., and consequently to find him guilty of the charge as alleged in the indictment. Rex v. Price, 6 East. 323; 2 Smith, 525. And see Rex v. Lee, 2 Camp. 139, and Purcell v. M'Namara, 9 East. 157.

If the perjury be committed at the trial of a cause, the prosecutor must prove the whole of the defendant's testimony. Rex v. Jones, Peake, 3—Kenyon.

Unless the point upon which the perjury is assigned arose upon the defendant's cross-examination. Rex v. Dowling, Peake, 170—Kenyon: S. C. not S. P. 5 T. R. 311.

In an indictment for perjury committed on the trial of a cause, it is sufficient for the prosecutor to prove all the evidence given by the defendant referable to the fact on which perjury is assigned. Proof of the evidence set out by a witness who speaks from memory, but will not swear that he has given the whole of the defendant's former testimony, but says that he has stated to the best of his recollection all that was material to the present inquiry, and relating to the transaction in question, and is positive nothing was said qualifying that proved, is sufficient to go to the jury. Rex v. Rowley, 1 R. & M. 299—Littledale.

In an indictment for perjury, in a proceeding before a surrogate, it is, prima facie, sufficient to prove that he has generally acted in that capacity. Rex v. Verelst, 3 Camp. 432—Ellenb.

An affidavit purporting to be sworn before a public commissioner is admissible on the trial of an indictment for perjury without proof of the commission; proof of the commissioner's acts as such is sufficient. Rex v. Howard, M. & L. 187—Patterson.

To support an indictment for perjury committed on a trial at the quarter sessions, three witnesses who heard the party examined state that he swore on that trial, and the party was convicted, although neither of the witnesses set down the evidence as it was given, and neither of them professed to state the whole of the evidence that he gave. Rex v. Munton, 3 C. & P. 498—Tenterden.

To show that perjury was wilful and corrupt evidence may be given of expressions of malice used by the party towards the person against whom he gave the false evidence. Id.

If A. be indicted for perjury, in swearing that he did not enter into a verbal agreement with B. and C. for them to become joint-dealers and co-partners in the trade or business of druggists, and it appear that, in fact, B. was a druggist keeping a shop with which A. had nothing to do, but that A. and C., being sworn brokers, could not trade, and therefore made speculations in drugs in B.'s name with his consent, he agreeing to divide profits and loss with A. and C.; this will not support the indictment, as this is not the sort of partnership denied by A. upon oath. Rex v. Tucker, 2 C. & P. 500—Abbott.

On an indictment for perjury in a cause at law

Prisus, it is no variance that the Nisi Prisus record states the trial to have been on a day different from that stated in the indictment. Rex v. Copland, 3 Q. & P. 59—Tenterden; 1 M. & M. 118.

If an indictment for perjury in a cause at Nisi Prisus state the trial to have been before one of the judges, (who, in fact, sat for the lord chief justice), and the Nisi Prisus record state the trial to have been before the lord chief justice himself; semble, that this is no variance. Id.

If an indictment for perjury in a cause at Nisi Prisus, in setting out the substance of the oral evidence charged to be false, put "Mr." for "Mister," and "Mrs." for "Mistress," this is no variance, though it should appear that the witness said "Mister" and "Mistress," and not "Mr." and "Mrs." Id.

If the indictment incorrectly set out the judgment-roll of the cause, at the trial of which the perjury is alleged to have been committed, the variance is fatal. Rex v. Eden, 1 Esp. 97—Ken.

An indictment for perjury alleged to have been committed by a bankrupt set forth a petition to supersede the commission, and stated that at several meetings before the commission the defendant makes certain declarations. At the trial the petition was produced, and the allegation in it was, that, at several meetings before the commissioners, the defendant made those declarations:—Held, no variance. Rex v. Dubman, 7 D. & R. 24; 4 B. & C. 850.

In an indictment for perjury it was alleged, that F. C. Aberdeen and others exhibited their bill in the Exchequer, &c., and on the production of the bill it purported to be the bill of A. C. Aberdeen and others:—Held, that there was no variance, if it were proved that it was in fact the bill of F. C. Aberdeen. Rex v. Roper, 1 Stark. 18—Ellenborough.

An indictment for perjury stating that A. B. gave certain justices to understand and be informed that C. D., being a brewer of beer and ale for sale, did neglect, &c., is not supported by an information containing no allegation that C. D. was a brewer of beer or ale for sale, together with proof aliunde of his being a brewer. Rex v. Leach, 2 M. & R. 119.

So, also, that it was no variance, although after the allegation, and after setting out such parts of the bill as were necessary, the words "as appears by the said bill filed of record," were added. Id.

Proof that the defendant was "sworn and examined as a witness," supports an averment that the defendant was sworn on the Holy Gospel, that being the ordinary mode of swearing. Rex v. Rowley, 1 R. & M. 302—Littledale. But see Rex v. McCarther, Peake, 155.

In an indictment for perjury committed on the trial of a former cause, the postea alone is sufficient evidence to prove that there was a trial without showing a copy of the final judgment. Anon. Bull. N. P. 243.

An indictment for perjury tried before the Lord Chief Justice at Westminster charged the perjury to have been committed on a trial at Nisi Prisus, although at the King's Bench sittings at Westminster. The prosecutor, to prove the trial at Nisi Prisus, put in the Nisi Prisus record, with the minute of the verdict indorsed on it by the associate. There was no postea drawn up, and the associate stated that none would be drawn up, as a rule for a new trial was pending:—Held, to be sufficient proof of the trial at Nisi Prisus. Rex v. Browne, 5 C. & P. 562—Tenterden; 1 M. & M. 315.

The Nisi Prisus record of a cause, with a minute of the verdict indorsed by the officer of the court, is good evidence that the cause came on for trial, though no regular postea is indorsed. Rex v. Browne, 1 M. & M. 315—Tenterden, Bayley, Littledale, and Parke.

In an indictment for perjury, the supposed perjury arose upon evidence given in reply to the testimony of one of the defendants on the former trial, who was acquitted and examined as a witness. The indictment did not state his acquittal, nor did the minute of the verdict show it:—Held, that this was immaterial, parol evidence being given that he was in fact examined. Id.

Perjury was assigned on an answer in Chancery to a bill before it was amended:—Held, that, to support the allegations respecting the bill, it was sufficient to put in the amended bill, and prove that the amendments were in the handwriting of a clerk in the Six Clerks' Office, whose duty it would be to make them; but that it was not necessary to call the person who wrote the amendments. Rex v. Laycock, 4 C. & P. 326—Tenterden.

Semble, that, on an indictment against a bankrupt for perjury before the commissioners, it is necessary to give strict evidence of the trading petitioning creditor's debt, and act of bankruptcy. Rex v. Punshon, 1 Rose, Bkt. Cas. 22—Ellenborough; 3 Camp. 96.

But, if the perjury be alleged in an answer to an allegation exhibited before a surrogate, it is prima facie sufficient to prove that the surrogate has generally acted in that capacity. Rex v. Verelst, 3 Camp. 432—Ellenborough.

A witness is not incompetent because, in his answer to a cross bill in Chancery, he has sworn to the same fact which he is now called to prove. Rex v. Pepys, Peake, 138—Kenyon.

But, on an indictment for perjury committed on a trial, the party who was injured by the verdict, and who had filed a bill for relief, is an incompetent witness. Rex v. Dalby, Peake, 12—Kenyon.

But the party who succeeded at the trial is not. Rex v. De Faria, Peake, 104—Kenyon.

A defendant who has not paid debt and costs, though his bail are fixed, is not competent to prove perjury committed at the trial of his cause. Rex v. Eden, 1 Esp. 97—Kenyon.

A. having brought an action against B., the latter filed a bill in equity against him for a discovery and injunction, and for an account; to which A. having put in his answer, denying the allegations of B., which involved the merits of the suit at law, the injunction was dissolved; on which answer B. indicted A. for perjury; and the indictment and action coming on to be tried at the same assizes, the indictment standing first:—Held, that B. was a competent witness to prove the perjury, as he could not avail himself of the conviction of A. in any civil proceeding between them, either in law or equity. Rex v. Boston, 4 East, 572; 1 Smith, 202.

Declarations in actiones mortis are not admissible in evidence on the trial of an indictment for perjury. Rex v. Mead, 4 D. & R. 120.

If an indictment for perjury contain several assignments of perjury, on one of which no evidence is given on the part of the prosecution, the defendant cannot go into proof to show that the evidence charge by that assignment of perjury to be false, was in reality true. Rex v. Hemp, 5 C. & P. 468—Denman.

On the trial of an indictment for perjury, the witnesses to character were asked, "What is the character of the defendant for veracity and honour?"—and, "Do you consider him a man likely to commit perjury?" Id.

LXIX. CONSPIRACY.

1. The Offence.

An indictment for conspiracy at common law, will lie for enticing a young woman under age to leave her father's house, and live in fornication with one of the defendants; and concerting measures, with her own approbation, to carry her off and conceal her for that purpose. Rex v. Grey (Lord), 1 East, P. C. 460.

If a man and woman marry in the name of another, for the purpose of raising a specious title to the estate of the person whose name is assumed, it is a conspiracy. Rex v. Robinson, 1 Leach, C. C. 37; 2 East, P. C. 1010.

Where it appeared on an indictment for a conspiracy to procure the marriage of paupers, against the parish officers, that a man of one parish had gotten a woman belonging to another with child, and the defendants had agreed with the man to give him two guineas if he would marry the woman, which he did, and received the money, and both swore that they were willing to be married:—Held, that the indictment could not be supported, as there was no violence, threat, contrivance, or sinister means used to procure the marriage without the consent of the parties. Rex v. Fowler, 1 East, P. C. 461—Buller.

The indictment need not aver in terms, that the marriage was against the will or consent of the parties, although that must be meant, if it state that it was procured by threats and menaces against the peace, &c. Rex v. Parkhouse, 1 East, P. C. 462.

It is not ground of an indictment to procure a marriage between a person not actually chargeable to the parish and a pauper of another parish. Rex v. Tanner, 1 Esp. 204—Ashhurst.

On motion for a criminal information against two persons for endeavouring to raise the price of oil, it must distinctly appear that they combined together, as it is no offence for an individual separately so to endeavour. Rex v. Hillier, 2 Chit. 163.

An indictment will not lie for conspiring to commit a civil trespass upon property, by agreeing to go, and by going into a preserve for hares, the property of another, for the purpose of snaring them, though alleged to be done in the night by the defendants, armed with offensive weapons, for the purpose of opposing resistance to any endeavors to apprehend or obstruct them. Rex v. Turner, 13 East, 228.

It was held an indictable offence to conspire on a particular day by false rumours to raise the price of the public government funds, with intent to injure the subjects who should purchase on that day. Rex v. De Berenger, 3 M. & S. 68.

Getting money out of a man by conspiring to charge him with a false fact is indictable as a conspiracy, whether the fact charged be criminal or not in itself. Rex v. Rippeal, 1 W. Black. 35.

A., having been bail for D., went, accompanied by B. and C., to the lodgings of D., telling her that B. and C. were officers, who would take her to jail if she did not give him security for his debt: B. and C. were not officers, and had no authority to take D. D. gave B. a number of articles, and signed a paper, stating them to be a security, and that A. might sell them if he was not put in forty-two days:—Sembles, that A., B., and C. might be indicted for a conspiracy. Blount v. Blake, 6 C. & P. 75—Lyndhurst.

A conspiracy to extort money is per se an offence at common law, and need not be charged to be attempted by unlawful means. Rex v. Hillingberry, 6 D. & R. 345; 4 B. & C. 329.

Information will be granted for a conspiracy by a master, an attorney, and a gentleman, to assign over a female apprentice, by her own consent, for the purpose of prostitution. Rex v. Delaval, 3 Burr. 1434; 1 W. Black, 410, 43.

So, for a combination to fix the price of oil. Rex v. Norris, 2 Ld. Ken. 300.

An indictment will lie for a conspiracy to obtain money as a reward for an appointment to an office under government. Rex v. Pollard, 1 Camp. 229—Ellenborough.

A concerted arrangement to issue a commission of bankruptcy, for the mere purpose of giving a certificate, is a conspiracy liable to indictment or information. Ex parte Crutcher, 1 Ves. jun. 260. See tit. OFFENCES BY BANKRUPTS, ante, p. 786.

An indictment for conspiring, &c., "to prevent the workmen of J. G. from continuing to work, &c.," is supported by evidence of a conspiracy to prevent any from continuing, &c. Rex v. Spaldike, M. & Rob. 179—Patteson.

A combination of workmen, for the purpose of dictating to masters whom they shall employ, is indictable. Id.

If brokers agree together, before a sale by au-tion, that one only of them shall bid for each article sold, and that all articles thus bought by any of them shall be sold again among themselves at a fair price, and the difference between the auction price and the fair price divided among them: this is a conspiracy, for which they are indictable. Levi v. Levi, 6 C. & P. 239—Gurney.

An indictment for a conspiracy to impoverish a man, by preventing him from working at his trade, need not state the overt acts used to effect the intended mischief. Rex v. Eccles, 1 Leach, C. C. 274.

Where two conspire, and one dies, the other may still be indicted for the conspiracy. Rex v. Nichols, 13 East, 412, n.

2. Indictment.

Semble, that an indictment charging the defendants with conspiring "to cheat and defraud the just and lawful creditors of W. F.," without any further statement of the conspiracy, or of any overt act, is bad, as being too general. Rex v. Fowle, 4 C. & P. 592—Tenterden.

Indictment for a conspiracy to indict for a capital offence good, though the word "falsely," is not added to the first charge of this conspiracy, nor the particular crime there specified; and although it is not laid that the said W. G. was acquitted of it. Rex v. Spragg, 2 Burr. 993.

Indictment for a conspiracy to extort money, one count averred that defendant, in pursuance of a conspiracy to extort money from the prosecutor, falsely exhibited certain indictments against him; another count averred that defendant, in pursuance of the like conspiracy, offered to suppress an indictment pending against the prosecutor, if he would give them money or so doing. The jury found the defendant guilty, but found, specially, that the indictments preferred by them against the prosecutor were not false:—Held, that the averment in the former count was immaterial, and that the latter count would support the conviction. Rex v. Hollingberry, 6 D. & R. 345; 4 B. & C. 229.

Held, that an indictment to conspire to raise the price of funds with intent to injure the persons who should purchase was well enough, without specifying the particular persons who purchased as the persons intended to be injured, and that the public government funds of this kingdom might mean either British or Irish funds, which, since the union, were each a part of the funds of the United Kingdom. Rex v. De Beenger, 3 M. & S. 67.

An indictment charged that defendants conspired, by divers false pretences and subtle means and devices, to obtain from A. divers large sums of money, and to cheat and defraud him thereof:—Held, that the gist of the offence being the conspiracy, it was quite sufficient only to state that fact and its object, and not necessary to set out the specific pretences. Rex v. Gill, 2 B. & A. 204.

In an indictment for a conspiracy, in producing a false certificate in evidence, it is not necessary to set forth that the defendants knew at the time of the conspiracy that the contents of the certificate were false; it is sufficient that for such purpose they agreed to certify the fact as true, without knowing that it was so. Rex v. Mawbey (Bart.), 6 T. R. 619.

3. Evidence.

On an information for conspiracy, the fact of conspiring need not be proved, but may be collected from other circumstances. Rex v. Parsons, 1 W. Black. 393.

Upon an indictment for a conspiracy, general evidence of the conspiracy charged may be received in the first instance, although it cannot affect the defendant unless afterwards brought home to him, or to an agent employed by him. And the same rule applies where a defendant seeks by such general evidence in the first instance to affect the prosecutor with a conspiracy to suborn witnesses for the destruction of the defence, provided the proposed evidence be previously opened to the court, as in the case of a prosecution to be proved by a conspiracy. The Queen's case, 2 B. & B. 302.

On an indictment for conspiring and unlawfully meeting for the purpose of exciting discontent and disaffection:—Held, first, that resolutions passed at a former meeting, in another place, and at which one of the defendants presided, the professed object of which meeting was to fix the meeting mentioned in the indictment, were admissible in evidence, to show the intention of such defendant in assembling and attending the meeting in question, at which he also presided: secondly, that a copy of these resolutions, delivered by such defendant, to a witness at the time of the former meeting, as the resolutions then intended to be proposed, and which corresponded with those which the witness had heard read from a written paper, is admissible without producing the original: thirdly, that large bodies of men having come to the latter meeting from a distance, marching in regular order, it was admissible in evidence to show the character and intention of the meeting, that within two days of the same great numbers of men were seen training and drilling before day-break, at a place from which one of these bodies had come to the meeting, and that, on discovering the persons who saw them, they ill-treated them, and forced one of them to take an oath never to be a king's man again: fourthly, that it was admissible in evidence, for the same purpose, to show that another body of men, in their progress to the meeting, on passing the house of one of the persons who had been so ill-treated, expressed their disapprobation at his conduct by hissing, &c.: fifthly, parol evidence of inscriptions and devices on banners and flags displayed at a meeting is admissible without producing the originals: and lastly, on such an indictment, evidence of the supposed misconduct of the military and others who dispersed the meeting was not admissible.

Rex v. Hunt, 3 B. & A. 566; 3 B. & A. 444. And see Rex v. Bowes, 4 East, 171, n.

An indictment for a conspiracy contained several counts, alleging several misdemeanours on the same day:—Held, that the prosecutor might give evidence of similar misdemeanours on different days. Rex v. Levy, 2 Stark. 458—Abbott.

An indictment for conspiracy to cheat in the sale of a horse is not maintainable without proof of concert between the parties. Rex v. Pywell, 1 Stark. 402—Ellenborough.

An indictment against journeymen for a conspiracy against their employers, to prevent them from taking any apprentices, is proved by evidence of their having quitted their employment with an intention to compel such employers to dismiss any person as an apprentice. Rex v. Ferguson, 2 Stark. 489—Wood.

On an indictment for a conspiracy, the letters of one of the defendants to the other are, under certain circumstances, admissible in evidence in his favour, to show that he was the dupe of the other, and was not himself a participator in the fraud. Rex v. Whitehead, 1 C. & P. 67—Best.

Where two defendants were indicted for a conspiracy to commit a fraud, and one defended himself on the ground that he had himself been deceived by the representations of his co-defendant, and part of a written correspondence between both the defendants having been received in evidence for the crown:—Held, that the whole of the correspondence between the defendants, up to the time of the overt act of the conspiracy, was admissible in evidence for the defence. Rex v. Whitehead, 1 D. & R. N. P. C. 61—Abbott.

On an indictment for conspiracy, where there is evidence of several persons having engaged therein, what is said by any of them at another time and place respecting the object of the conspiracy is evidence against the others. Rex v. Salter, 5 Esp. 125—Hotham. And see Rex v. Hammond, 2 Esp. 719.

So, in an indictment for a conspiracy to cause themselves to be believed persons of large property, for the purpose of defrauding tradesmen, the prosecutor may give various instances of their giving a false representation of their circumstances, as overt acts of the conspiracy. Rex v. Roberts, 1 Camp. 399—Ellenborough.

But the wife of one defendant cannot be called on behalf of a co-defendant, though the parties appear and defend separately. Rex v. Locker, 5 Esp. 107—Ellenborough.

Nor one defendant who suffers judgment by default. Rex v. Lafone, 5 Esp. 155—Ellenb.

LXX. LIBEL.

1. Liability for.

See title LIBEL, in Civil Cases.

60 Geo. 3, c. 8.

The proprietor of a newspaper is answerable continually as well as civilly for misconduct in the conducting of the paper, as for the publication of a libel, though he has nothing to do with the publication, and the whole is conducted by his servants. Rex v. Walter, 3 Esp. 21—Ken.

The proprietor of a newspaper who is not shown to take, or who shows that he did not take, any part in the publication, is criminally answerable for a libel that appears in it. Rex v. Alexander, 1 M. & M. 437—Tenterden.

Generally speaking, the proprietor of a newspaper is criminally answerable for what appears in it; but some possible case might occur in which he would be exempt. Id.

A member of the House of Commons may be convicted upon an indictment for a libel, in publishing in a newspaper the report of a speech delivered by him in that house, if it contains libellous matter, although the publication be a correct report of such speech, and be made in consequence of an incorrect publication having appeared in that and other newspapers. Rex v. Creevey, 1 M. & S. 273.

An advertisement published in the newspaper concerning any person, though conveying with it an imputation injurious to the character of the party about whom it is published, is not a libel if done bona fide, and with a view of obtaining information on the subject alluded to in the advertisement by a person really interested in the discovery. Delany v. Jones, 4 Esp. 191—Ellenborough. And see Maloney v. Bartley, 3 Camp. 210—Wood.

Publications tending to degrade and defame persons in considerable stations of power and dignity in foreign countries may be treated as libels, on the ground that they may tend to involve this country in disputes and warfare. Rex v. Gordon (Lord), 1 Russ. C. & M. 233: & P. Rex v. Vint, Id.

An indictment for publishing libellous matter reflecting on the memory of a dead person, and alleging that it was done with a design to bring contempt on the family of the deceased, to stir up the hatred of the king's subjects against them, and to excite his relations to a breach of the peace, cannot be supported. Rex v. Topham, 1 T. R. 126.

It is libellous and a misdemeanour to publish in a newspaper the depositions taken before a justice of the peace on a criminal charge before the party is tried; and the printer, on an information against him for a libel, cannot give them in evidence to show that they were truly published. Rex v. Lee, 5 Esp. 123—Heath: & P. Rex v. Fisher, 2 Camp. 563. And see Sikes v. Nunn, 7 East, 493; Carr v. Jones, 3 Smith, 491.

Expulsion from a Quaker's meeting, and reasons assigned in their books, not a libel. Rex v. Hart, 1 W. Black. 386.

It is not libellous fairly and honestly to criticise a painting publicly exhibited, though the terms of censure used may be strong, such as calling the painting a daub. Thompson v. Shadell, 1 M. & M. 187—Best.

A written or printed publication, stating the has been guilty of gross misconduct in insulting persons in a barefaced manner, is libellous. Flament v. Chives, 4 M. & R. 127; 9 B. & C. 72.

Quere, whether the writing and composing a libel, with an intent to publish, but not followed by publication, be an offence? Rex v. Burdett, (Bart.), 4 B. & A. 95.

Quere, also, whether the mere writing a libel, with intent to excite hatred and contempt of the king's government, be an indictable offence. Rex v. Burdett, (Bart.), 3 B. & A. 717.

An indictment will not lie for words spoken of justice of the peace in his absence. Rex v. Veltje, 2 Camp. 142—Ellenborough.

Where there was a general verdict against the defendant on a count in an information, rule for arresting judgment was discharged, though partly of the matter was perhaps libellous; but it might be a cause for lessening the punishment. Rex v. Binfield, 2 Burr. 985.

The statute 53 Geo. 3, c. 160, does not alter the common law respecting a blasphemous libel, but only removes the penalties imposed upon persons denying the doctrine of the Trinity by 9 & 10 W. 3, c. 32, and extends to such persons the benefits conferred upon all other Protestant dissenters by 1 W. & M. sess. 1, c. 18. Rex v. Waddington, 1 B. & C. 26.

The stat 9 & 10 W. 3, c. 32, does not take away the common-law proceeding against libellers of the Christian religion. Rex v. Paine, 1 East, P. C. 5.

2. Information when granted.

It is an invariable rule not to grant an information for a libel, without an exculpatory affidavit, unless where the party libelled is abroad at a great distance, or the subject-matter of the charge is general imputation, or an accusation of criminal language held in parliament. Rex v. Haswell, and Rex v. Bate, 1 Dougl. 387.

An affidavit to found a motion for a criminal information for a libel must distinctly negative the charge, unless the party libelled be abroad, or the charge be general. Rex v. Wright, 2 Chit. 62.

It is a general rule that the court will not grant an information for a private libel, charging a particular offence, unless the prosecutor will deny the charge upon oath. Rex v. Miles, 1 Dougl. 284.

An information lies for a libel reflecting on the character of a justice of the peace. Anon. Lofft, 162.

A criminal information was granted for these words, in a letter to a mayor: "I am sure you will not be persuaded from doing justice by any little acts of your town clerk, whose consummate malice and wickedness against me and my family will make him do anything, be it ever so vile." Rex v. Waite, 1 Wils. 22.

So, for sending a letter, charging complainant with an unnatural crime, although in very guarded and general terms, and the complainant did not positively swear to his innocence. Rex v. Denison, Lofft, 148.

So, for printing an account of a ludicrous marriage between an actress and a married man. Rex v. Kinnersley, 1 W. Black. 294.

An information held good, though the matter published merely held the prosecutor up to ridicule. Rex v. Benfield, 2 Burr. 985.

An information lies for singing songs in the streets, reflecting on the prosecutor's children, with intent to destroy his domestic happiness. Id.

A criminal information having been granted against the defendant, he, before the trial at Nisi Prius, distributed hand-bills in the assize town, vindicating his own conduct, and reflecting on the prosecutor's; this matter being disclosed to the judge at Nisi Prius by an affidavit, was held a sufficient ground to put off the trial; and that affidavit being returned to the court of K. B., they granted another information on it against the defendant, considering the affidavit taken at Nisi Prius as taken under the authority of this court. Rex v. Juliffe, 4 T. R. 285.

On an information against the defendants for falsely and maliciously publishing a libel concerning the king, by stating in a newspaper that his majesty was afflicted with mental derangement, the jury found them guilty of so doing:—Held, on a motion for a new trial, first, that to assert falsely of his majesty, or of any individual, that he labours under the affliction of mental derangement, is a criminal act, and a malicious intention may be inferred from the mere fact of publication, unless evidence is given by the defendant to rebut such inference: secondly, that such an assertion concerning the king, being in itself mischievous to the public, is an indictable offence, without any allegation or direct proof of a malicious intention: thirdly, that where the jury desired to know "whether in order to convict a defendant for the publication of a libel, a malicious intention must not have existed in his mind," they were correctly answered by the judge presiding at the trial, who informed them, that "a person who publishes that which is calumnious concerning the character of another must be presumed to have intended to do that which the publication is necessarily and obviously calculated to effect, unless he can show the contrary, and that the onus of proving the contrary lies upon him: and, fourthly, that where the publisher of a libel states that the fact which he communicates is "from authority," and it appears that the fact is untrue, he is guilty of a false assertion, in the criminal sense of the word. Rex v. Harvey, 3 D. & R. 464; 2 B. & C. 257.

An information lies against a member of parliament for publishing a speech in a newspaper, containing slanderous matter. Rex v. Abingdon (Lord), 1 Esp. 226—Kenyon.

It is not a libel barely to reflect on government, if it be done in such a manner as not likely to excite sedition. Rex v. Woodfall, Lofft, 776.

The impotence of a libel, either in the writing itself, or the strength or goodness of the characters it attacks, is no excuse for it. Id.

If a libellous meaning be clear to the jury, misdating facts, or the omission of letters in words, will not make it less a libel. Id.

A libel on King William and Queen Mary, especially as instruments of the revolution, held punishable now. Id.

The court refused to grant a criminal information against a bookseller, for printing a report of the House of Commons, though it reflected on the character of an individual. Rex v. Wright, 8 T. R. 293.

A publication stating Jesus Christ to be an impostor and a murderer in principle is a libel at common law, for which an information will lie. Rex v. Waddington, 1 B. & C. 26.

The court will grant a criminal information for publishing in a newspaper a statement of the evidence given before a coroner's jury, accompanied with comments, although the statement be correct, and the party has no malicious motive in the publication. Rex v. Fleet, 1 B. & A. 379.

It is not a libel to express regret that the king has taken an erroneous and incorrect view of policy. Rex v. Lambert, 2 Camp. 398—Ellenb.

The court will grant a criminal information against the publisher of a newspaper for a libel reflecting on the clergy of a particular diocese, and generally upon the clergy of the church of England, though no individual prosecutor was named, and though the libellous matter was not negatived on affidavit: it is sufficient to state the publication of the libel by the defendant. Rex v. Williams, 1 D. & R. 197; 5 B. & A. 595.

An order made by a corporation and entered in their books, stating that A. B. (against whom a jury had found a verdict with large damages in an action for a malicious prosecution for perjury, which verdict had been confirmed in C. P.) was actuated by motives of public justice, &c., in preferring the indictment, is such a libel reflecting on the administration of justice, for which the court will grant an information against the members making that order. Rex v. Watson, 2 T. R. 199.

So, an information will lie for publishing a reflection on a judge and jury for acquitting a prisoner. Rex v. White, 1 Camp. 359, n.—Grose.

It is an offence at common law to publish a blasphemous libel, as the stat. 9 & 10 W. 3, c. 32, has not altered such law, as to the offence of blasphemy, but only given a cumulative punishment, and a defendant may be convicted on an information for such an offence. Rex v. Carlile, 3 B. & A. 161.

A correct account of the proceedings in a court of justice cannot be published, if such an account contain matter of a scandalous, blasphemous, or immoral tendency; and it is a ground for a criminal information. Id.

Every copy of a libel sold by a defendant is a separate publication, and subjects him to a dis-tingent prosecution, and therefore the defendant may be prosecuted by an information filed by the attorney-general, although an indictment has been brought on the prosecution of a different person, for publishing different copies of the same libel. Rex v. Carlile, 1 Chit. 451.

Semble, although the truth of a publication is no justification, yet, if the court see that it is true, or probably may be true, it may be good cause why the court should not interfere by granting a criminal information. Rex v. Drape, 3 Smith, 391.

Semble, that a defendant, in an information for a libel, may prove the truth of the matter alleged to be false and libellous. Rex v. Brady, 2 M. & R. 152.

No excuse against an information against a printer of a newspaper for a libel that he did not know that it was printed; that he was sorry, and had, immediately on discovery, stopped the sheet. Anon. Lofft, 544, 780.

Although it will go in mitigation. Rex v. Williams, Lofft, 759.

But being in such close custody as not possibly to know what was doing might be a justification under circumstances. Id.

3. Indictment and Information, Form of.

In an indictment for a libel, reflecting on the prosecutor in his profession as a solicitor, and which has been addressed and sent to him only, it must be alleged to have been written and sent with intent to provoke the prosecutor to a breach of the peace, and not with an intent to injure him in his profession. Rex v. Wegener, 2 Stark. 245—Abbott.

An information for a libel need not charge the offence to have been committed vi et armis, or allege that the libellous matter is false. Rex v. Burke, 7 T. R. 4.

Information held good for publishing a libel against two persons, where the publishing was one single offence. Rex v. Benfield, 2 Barr. 303.

And where several persons were charged in the same information, it was held good, the offences arising out of one joint act. Id.

Semble, that a count, charging the defendant with having an obscene libel in his possession, with an intent to publish it, is not good. Rex v. Rosenstein, 2 C. & P. 414—Park.

Where an information for a libel alleged that the defendant, intending to insinuate and cause it to be believed that divers liege subjects of the king had been inhumanly cut down, maimed, and killed, by certain troops of our lord the king, unlawfully and maliciously published a libel of and concerning the government of the realm, and of and concerning the said troops, and the only innuendo in the libel was applied to the word "dragoons," meaning the said troops of our said lord the king, and meaning thereby that divers liege subjects of our lord the king had been inhumanly cut down and killed by the said troops of our said lord the king :—Held, an arrest of judgment, that this was sufficiently certain, without defining what particular troops were meant. Rex v. Burdett (Bart.), 4 B. & A. 314.

So, where an information alleged that a libel was published of and concerning the government, and the libel did not in express terms charge the acts to have been done by the government or its order, the whole of the libel must be looked at, in order that the court may interpret it in the way in which ordinary persons would understand it, and judge from the whole tenor of it whether it be written of and concerning the government; therefore such an information was held good after verdict, although the record did not contain any averment of extrinsic facts, in order to show that the libel was written of and concerning the government. Id.

In an indictment for a libel against W. S., omitting to allege that the defendant published it "of and concerning W. S.:"—Held, that such omission was not supplied by its being alleged, in the introductory part, "that the defendant intended to vilify W. S., he having been mayor of, &c., and to cause it to be believed that as such mayor he had practised corruption, and been guilty of abuse in respect to granting a license to one J. L., to retail beer," &c., and concluding "to the injury and disgrace of W. S.," &c., although the innuendos pointed the different parts of the libel to W. S. and to J. L., and to the granting the license. Rex v. Marsden, 4 M. & S. 164.

Upon an information against the defendant for a libel, for that he, &c., wickedly, maliciously, and seditiously did write and publish, &c., a certain false, scandalous, and seditious libel "of and concerning his majesty's government and the employment of his troops, according to the tenor and effect following," (setting forth the libel verbatim): the words "of and concerning" are a sufficient introduction of the matter contained in the libel, and a sufficient averment that it was written "of and concerning the king's government, and the employment of his troops." Rex v. Home, Cowp. 672.

How far an innuendo or averment is or is not necessary to support a charge of a libel, consisting in opprobrious words or signs. Home v. Rex in error, 4 Bro. P. C. 368.

The charge in an information should be of an intention to excite the prosecutor to break the peace. Rex v. Wegener, 1 Stark. 543—Abbott.

4. Evidence.

38 Geo. 3, c. 78.

[And see EVIDENCE, in Civil Cases of Libel.]

On the trial of an indictment for a libel, the only questions for the jury are the fact of publishing, and the truth of the innuendoes. Rex v. St. Asaph (Dean), 3 T. R. 428, n.; S. P. Rex v. Withers, 3 T. R. 428: But see stat. 32 Geo. 3, c. 60, and Rex v. Holt, 5 T. R. 443; Rex v. Woodfall, Burr. 2667, and 32 Geo. 3, c. 60.

Where a libel imputes to others the commission of an indictable offence, evidence of the truth of it is inadmissible; and where the judge told the jury, in summing up, that the intention was to be collected from the paper itself, unless explained by the mode of publication or other circumstances, and that, if its contents were likely to excite sedition, the defendant must be presumed to intend that which his act was likely to produce, and that, if they found such to be the intent, he was of opinion that it was a libel, and that they were to take the law from him, unless they were satisfied that he was wrong:—Held, that this was a correct mode of leaving the question to the jury, under 32 Geo. 3, c. 60, s. 1. Rex v. Burdett (Bart.), 4 B. & A. 95; 3 B. & A. 717.

The copy of a newspaper delivered at the Stamp-Office under the provisions of the stat. 38 Geo. 3, c. 78, is conclusive evidence of publication to sustain an indictment against the proprietor for a libel contained in such copy. Rex v. Amphlit, 6 D. & R. 125; 4 B. & C. 35.

An affidavit made and signed by the printer and publisher and proprietor of a newspaper, as required by stat. 38 Geo. 3, c. 78, which affidavit contained the names of the parties, the place where the paper was printed, and the title of it: together with the production of a newspaper, tallying in every respect with the description of it in the affidavit, is not only evidence, by that act, of the publication of such paper by the parties named, but is also evidence of its publication in the county where the printing of it is described to be; and this upon the trial of an information for a libel contained in such newspaper. Rex v. Hart, and Rex v. White, 10 East, 95; 3 Camp. 99. And see Rex v. Hunt, 2 Camp. 583.

Production of the affidavit filed at the Stamp-Office, and of a newspaper corresponding with that therein mentioned, is sufficient proof of publication in an action or indictment against the proprietor for a libel. Mayne v. Fletcher, 4 M. & R. 311; 9 B. & C. 382.

Proof that the defendant gave a bond to the Stamp-Office for the duties on the advertisements in a newspaper, and had occasionally applied at the Stamp-Office respecting the duties, is evidence that he is the publisher. Rex v. Topham, 4 T. R. 126.

Quære, whether a libel be triable in any county but that where the publication took place? Rex v. Burdett (Bart.), 3 B. & A. 717; 4 B. & A. 95.

But it is now held, that where a defendant writes and composes a libel in one county, with an intent to publish, and afterwards publishes it in another, he may be indicted in either. Id.

A delivery of a sealed letter, enclosing a libel, at a post-office in L., is a publication of the libel there. Id.

In an information for publishing a libel contained in a letter in the county of L., from which it was dated, and the defendant was seen there on the day of the date and following day, and the letter was enclosed in an envelope, and received in the county of M. open, accompanied with written directions for publication, as expressed in the envelope. Quære, whether this was evidence to go to a jury of a publication in L.? Id.

But it was afterwards held on such information, for composing and publishing a libel in the county of L., and it was proved that the defendant, on the 22nd of August, wrote the libel there, and that he was seen there on that and the following day; that on the 24th of the same month the libel was delivered in the county of M. by A. to B., enclosed in an envelope, addressed to A., containing written directions to him to forward the libel to B., by whom it was subsequently published in M., and the envelope was open, and it was not proved that there was any trace of a seal or post-mark on it, and A. was not called at the trial as a witness by either party, nor was it proved that he was a resident, or had been about that time in L.: that this was evidence on which the jury might presume that the libel was delivered open to A. in the county of L. Id.

The publisher of a public register receives an anonymous letter, tendering certain political information on Irish affairs, and requiring to know to whom his letters should be directed; to which an answer is returned in the register; after which he receives two letters in the same hand-writing, directed as mentioned, and having the Irish post-mark on the envelopes; which two letters were proved to be in the hand-writing of the defendant; the previous letter having been destroyed: this is a sufficient ground for the court to have the letters read; and the letters themselves containing expressions of the writer indicative of his having sent them to the publisher of the register in Middlesex, for the purpose of publication, the whole is evidence sufficient for the jury to find a publication by the procurement of the defendant in Middlesex. Rex v. Johnson, 7 East, 65; 3 Smith, 94. And see Rex v. Watson, 1 Camp. 215; and Rex v. Williams, 2 Camp. 507.

An allegation that a letter was written with intent to injure the prosecutor in his profession cannot be supported if the letter were sent only to the prosecutor. Rex v. Wegener, 1 Stark. 543—Abbott.

But delivery to the party libelled is a sufficient publication to support an indictment. Phillips v. Jansen, 2 Esp. 624—Kenyon.

It is not competent to a defendant, charged with having published a libel, to prove that a paper similar to that for the publication of which he is prosecuted was published on a former occasion by other persons, who have never been prosecuted for it. Rex v. Holt, 5 T. R. 436.

Where the libel is contained in a newspaper, the defendant has a right to have read in evidence extracts from a different part of the same paper connected with the subject of the libellous passage. Rex v. Lambert, 2 Camp. 398—Ellenb.

Evidence of buying a libel in the shop of a known bookseller is sufficient prima facie evidence to convict him of publication." Rex v. Almon, 5 Burr. 2686.

Where a number of placards are printed, and a party adopts and uses some of them, all the rest are duplicate originals, and one of them may be read against such party, without notice to produce. Rex v. Watson, 2 Stark. 190.

Other compositions of the defendant on the same subject may be produced in confirmation. Rex v. Pearce, Peake, 75—Kenyon.

A defendant may be acquitted of printing, and found guilty of publishing a libel. Rex v. Williams, 2 Camp. 546—Lawrence.

If a libel is alleged in an indictment to have been published with intent to defame certain magistrates, and also bring the administration of justice into contempt, it is sufficient to prove a publication with either of those intentions. Rex v. Evans, 3 Stark. 35—Bayley.

Where a libel refers to certain other papers, and is not intelligible without those papers being read, the prosecutor on the trial of an information may have those papers read to explain the libel. Rex v. Slaney, 5 C. & P. 213—Tenterden.

An indictment for a libel on the treasurer of the parish of Greenwich, contained unnecessarily an averment that he was duly appointed treasurer:—Held, that an entry in the vestry book, stating that the prosecutor was elected at a vestry duly held in pursuance of notice, was evidence that notice had been given, without which, by a particular statute, the election would have been void. Rex v. Martin, 2 Camp. 100—Mackinnon.

In an information for a libel, imputing improper conduct to A., as town-clerk of H., it was alleged that he was town-clerk, and that it was his duty to issue his precept for summoning the grand jury. The precept was signed both by the mayor and town clerk:—Held, that this established the allegation that he issued his precept, and that the fact that he was an alderman of the borough at the time when he was elected town-clerk made no difference. Rex v. Hatfield, 4 C. & P. 24—Vaughan.

Proof of words spoken to a person will not support an indictment charging that the defendant spoke them of such a person. Rex v. Bury, 4 T. R. 217.

A defendant, brought up for judgment after being convicted of publishing a libel imputing indictable offences to the prosecutor, cannot be allowed in mitigation of punishment to put in affidavits to prove the truth of the libel, but he may put in his own affidavit, stating that at the time of publishing the libel he believed its contents to be true, and setting out reasonable grounds for such belief. Rex v. Holpin, 4 M. & R. 8; 9 B. & C. 65.

After judgment on the defendant for a libel the court refused to make an order on the prosecutor to deposit the original libellous papers with the officer of the court. Rex v. Cator, 2 East, 361.

LXXI. SEDITION PRACTICES AND UNLAWFUL OATHS.

37 Geo. 3, c. 123; 52 Geo. 3, c. 104.

In an indictment on 37 Geo. 3, c. 70, it is sufficient to charge an endeavour, &c., without specifying the means employed. Rex v. Fuller, 1 B. & P. 180.

The unlawful administering, by an associated body of men, of an oath to any person, purporting to bind him not to reveal or discover such unlawful combination or conspiracy, nor any illegal act done by them, &c. is felony within the statute 37 Geo. 3, c. 123, though the object of such association were a conspiracy to raise wages and make regulations in a certain trade, and not to stir up mutiny or sedition. Rex v. Marks, 3 East, 157.

By s. 4 of 37 Geo. 3, c. 123, it shall not be necessary, in an indictment for any offence under that statute, to set forth the words of the oath, but it shall be sufficient to set forth the purport of it, or some material part thereof:—Held, that an indictment charging that the defendants administered to J. H. an oath, intended to bind him not to inform or give evidence against any member of a certain society formed to disturb the public peace, for any act or expression of his or theirs, &c., is good, without alleging the tenor or purport of the oath to be set forth, and without showing in what manner the public peace was meant to be disturbed by such society. Rex v. Moore, 6 East, 419.

Where the witness, swearing to the words spoken by way of oath by the prisoner when he administered the same, said that he held a paper in his hand at the same time when he administered the oath, from which it was supposed that he read the words; yet held, that parol evidence of what he in fact said, was sufficient without giving him notice to produce such paper. Id.

Where the oath on the face of it did not purport to be for a seditious purpose; yet held, that evidence might be given to show that the brotherhood therein referred to was a seditious society. Id.

LXXII. THREATENING TO SUE FOR PENALTIES.

Threatening by letter, or otherwise, to put in motion a prosecution by a public officer, to recover penalties for selling Fryer's Balsam without stamp, (which by stat. 42 Geo. 3, c. 36, is prohibited to be vended without a stamped label), for the purpose of obtaining money to stay the prosecution, is not such a threat as a firm and prudent man may not be expected to resist, and therefore is not in itself an indictable offence at common law, although it be alleged that the money was obtained; no reference being made to any statute which prohibits such attempt. Rex v. Southerton, 6 East, 126; 2 Smith, 305.

But it seems that such an offence is indictable upon the stat. 18 Eliz. c. 5, s. 4, for regulating common informers, which prohibits the taking of money, without consent of court, under colour of process, or without process, from any person, upon pretence of any offence against a penal law. Id.

But no indictment for any attempt to commit such a statutable misdemeanour can be sustained as a misdemeanour at common law, without at least bringing the offence intended within, and laying it to be against, the statute. Id.

Though if the party so threatened had been alleged to be guilty of the offence imputed within the statute imposing the duty and creating the penalty, such an attempt to compound and stifle a public prosecution for the sake of private lucre, in fraud of the revenue, and against the policy of the statute, which gives the penalty as auxiliary to the revenue, and in furtherance of public justice for example sake, might also, upon general principles, have been deemed a sufficient ground to sustain the indictment at common law. Id.

LXXIII. COMPOUNDING FELONY.

If, in an indictment for compounding felony, it be averred that the defendant did desist, and from that time hitherto had desisted, from all further prosecution; and it appear, that, after the alleged compounding, he prosecuted the offender to conviction, the judge will direct an acquittal. Rex v. Stone and Others, 4 C. & P. 379—Bolland.

LXXIV. COMPOUNDING INFORMATIONS.

The stat. 18 Eliz. c. 5, which prohibits the compounding of any offence upon colour or pretence of process, or without process upon colour of any offence, against any penal law, does not apply to offences cognizable only before magistrates; and an indictment for compounding such an offence was holden bad in arrest of judgment. Rex v. Crisp, 1 B. & A. 282.

A popular indictment must not be compounded after conviction. Bury q. t. v. Levy, 1 W. Black. 443.

On an indictment on the 51 Eliz. c. 5, s. 4, for compounding an offence against the Highway Act, 13 Geo. 3, c. 84, s. 13, and taking money without process to prevent an action being brought:—Held, that the party so doing was liable to the punishment prescribed by the former act for taking such penalty without leave of a court at Westminster, or without judgment or conviction. Rex v. Gotley, R. & R. C. C. 81.

LXXV. OFFENCES BY PUBLIC OFFICERS, AND EXTORTION.

See Rex v. Bembridge, 6 East, 136, n.; and Rex v. Munton, 6 East, 590, n.; and the cases of Rex v. Kennett, and Rex v. Pinney, ante, tit. RIOR, 751.

In an indictment against a public officer for breach of duty, it is sufficient to state generally that he is such officer, without showing his appointment. Rex v. Holland, 5 T. R. 607.

Where a duty is thrown on a body consisting of several persons, each is individually liable for a breach of duty, as well as for acts of commission as of omission. Id.

In an indictment against a servant of the East India Company for offences in India, it is sufficient to charge him with a wilful breach of duty, without adding that it was corrupt. Id.

In an indictment against an officer for disobedience of orders, it is not necessary to aver that the orders have not been revoked, or that they are in force. Id.

Where a public officer is charged with a breach of duty, which duty arises from certain acts within the limits of his government, it is not necessary to aver, in an indictment against him, that he had notice of those acts; he is presumed from his situation to know them. Id.

A charge in an indictment against an officer, with a breach of orders in not prosecuting a war "with all possible vigour and decision," is too uncertain, even though the charge be made in the very words of the order given to him. Id.

Where two sets of magistrates have a concurrent jurisdiction, and one appoints a meeting to grant ale licenses, their jurisdiction attaches so as to exclude the other appointing a subsequent meeting; but they may all meet together on the first day, and if, after such appointment, the other set of magistrates meet on a subsequent day and grant other licenses, their proceedings are illegal and the subject of an indictment. Rex v. Sainsbury, 4 T. R. 451.

The stat. 42 Geo. 3, c. 85, giving jurisdiction for trying and punishing in this country, persons holding public offices or employments, for offences committed abroad, does not extend to felonies. Rex v. Shaw, 5 M. & S. 403.

On an indictment on stat. 17 Geo. 3, c. 26, s. 7, for taking more than 10s. in the 100l. for brokerage, &c., it is not necessary to prove that the defendant took the exact sum laid in the indictment, though it be not laid under a videlicet. Rex v. Gillham, 6 T. R. 265; 1 Esp. 285.

And on the trial of such indictment, it must be left to the jury to consider whether the excess above 10s. in the 100l. were really taken as a fair charge for drawing the writings, &c., or whether it were not so taken as a device to avoid the statute. Rex v. Gillham, 6 T. R. 265; 1 Esp. 285.

One who was appointed collector of certain duties by the proper constituted authorities, and who considered himself, and was considered by the commissioners to be such collector, but whose appointment turned out to have been informally made, cannot be indicted at common law for the receipt of duties, by colour and pretence of being collector of such duties, though the money were fraudulently collected and misapplied by him, because he was in fact appointed collector, and in that character received the money. Rex v. Dobson, 7 East, 218.

A collector of post-horse duty demanded of A. a sum of money, alleging that A. had let out horses for hire without payment of the duty. A. denied that he had done so, and gave the collector a promissory note for 5l., the amount of which, after it became due, was paid by A. to the collector, who handed it over to his principal, the farmer of the post-horse duties:—Held, that this was extortion in the collector, and that his having paid the money over to his principal made no difference. Rex v. Higgins, 4 C. & P. 261—Vaughan.

On the trial of an indictment for a fraud against an agent of government, under the control of the Treasury, a letter of instructions addressed to the defendant by the Lords of the Treasury may be read in evidence without proving the commission by which they were appointed. Rex v. Jones, 2 Camp. 131—Ellenborough.

An indictment does not lie against a turnpike-keeper to try the question of exemption from toll, unless the ground of exemption was specified at the time the toll was taken. Rex v. Hamlyn, 4 Camp. 379—Ellenborough.

LXXVI. DISOBEYING ORDERS.

An indictment lies for disobedience to an order of sessions. Rex v. Robinson, 2 Barr. 739; 2 Ld. Ken. 513.

But an indictment does not lie for disobeying an order to pay money to a surgeon, &c. Rex v. Smith, 1 Bott's P. L. 403.

A. was indicted for not paying 20s. costs on the discussion of his appeal to the poor's rate; and it was held that an indictment might be brought. Rex v. Byce, 1 Bott's P. L. 324.

An indictment against certain commissioners for a contempt of an order of sessions, in not paying such costs, stating generally, that the party appealed to the sessions against such notice in writing, under the hands of five commissioners acting in the execution of the statute, and which notice was made, or purported to be made, under the powers to them given by the act, seems sufficient; for the court will presume, as against the persons issuing such notice, that it was signed by them when lawfully assembled at a public meeting holden by virtue of the act. Rex v. Kingston, 8 East, 41.

Counts in the indictment stating an appeal against a notice in writing, signed by A., B., C., D., and E., five of the commissioners, and an order by the sessions that the commissioners acting under the statute, and being the respondents in the said appeal, on service of the said order, should pay the appellant 10l. costs of appeal; and alleging service of the order on those five, and others acting as commissioners, &c.; and then charging, that, at a subsequent meeting held by virtue of the act, A., B., (omitting C.,) D., and E., and also F. and G., commissioners, were present and acting, and formed a majority, a demand of the 10l. costs was made on those six, which they refused to pay; and other like counts charging service of the order upon part only of those who were indicted for a contempt of it, were on general demurrer holden bad: and the offence being laid jointly against the several acts of the defendants in each count, the court could not give judgment, on such an indictment, even against the four who were parties to the appeal, and on whom service of the order was alleged, there being no one count including those only. Id.

In an indictment on 22 Car. 2, c. 12, s. 9, for not sending a cart and men to the six days' highway labour, pursuant to an order from the overseers, the particular remedy given by the act is cumulative, because it was an offence indictable at common law. It is not necessary to allege by whom or when the surveyors were appointed; a statement of "being the surveyors" is a sufficient inducement that they are so. Rex v. Boyall, 2 Burr. 832; 2 Ld. Ken. 549.

If on an indictment for disobeying an order of justices, in not abating a nuisance under the Building Act, it appears to have been founded on an order made in a case in which the justices had no jurisdiction, the judge at Nisi Prius will direct an acquittal, although the defect appeared on the record. Rex v. Hollis, 2 Stark, 536—Abbott.

If there is a positive averment of disobedience to the order of a court of competent jurisdiction, an indictment is good, without a direct allegation of that which is the foundation of such jurisdiction; nor can a defendant otherwise avail himself either at the trial or elsewhere, but by showing a want of jurisdiction in the court. Rex v. Mytton, Cald. 536.

Such previous orders as are the foundation of the magistrate's authority must be recited, or at least referred to in an indictment for disobedience of such authority. Rex v. White, Cald. 183.

The service upon the party of an order, which is charged to have been disobeyed, must be directly and pointedly alleged, or the indictment cannot be supported. Rex v. Moorhouse, Cald. 154.

Where an indictment for a conspiracy to charge a parish under an order to be made by two justices describes the one as an esquire, and in producing the order he is described as clerk, it is a fatal variance. Rex v. Tanner, 1 Esp. 104—Ashhurst.

An indictment lies against the stewards of a friendly society whose rules have been allowed by the magistrates and registered in London, but who afterwards held their meetings in Middlesex, for disobeying an order of Middlesex justices. Rex v. Gash, 1 Stark. 441—Ellenborough.

On an indictment against the stewards, &c., of a benefit society for disobeying an order of two justices, commanding them to re-admit A. B. to be a member of that society, is no defence that A. B. was a person who, by the rules of the society, was ineligible to be a member of it, as that was matter of defence before the justices. Rex v. Gilkes, 3 C. & P. 52—Tenterden.

On an indictment against the stewards, &c., of a benefit society for disobeying an order of two justices, commanding them to re-admit A. B. to be a member of that society, if it be proved that the order was served on one of the defendants, and that the others, when A. B. applied to be re-admitted, said, that they would not admit him, and did not care for the justices' order, that is presumptive evidence of a service of the order upon them. Id.

Upon the trial of an indictment for disobeying an order of justices, the recital upon the face of the order of the facts giving the magistrates jurisdiction is not evidence of the existence of such facts; nor is the setting out of the order in hæc verba in the indictment a sufficient allegation of the truth of the facts recited therein. Rex v. Gilkes, 2 M. & R. 454; 8 B. & C. 439.

Indictment lies against the president and stewards of a friendly society for disobeying an order of justices addressed to them to re-admit a member, though it be sworn that the power of doing so is not in the president and stewards, but in a committee. Rex v. Wade, 1 B. & A. 861.

By the Friendly Society Act, 33 Geo. 3, c. 54, s. 2, it was provided that the rules of every such society should be exhibited in writing to the justices at sessions to be by them confirmed, after which they should be signed by the clerk of the peace, and a duplicate should be deposited with and filed by him at such sessions, and that no such society should be deemed to be within the act till good rules for its government should have been so confirmed and filed. By sec. 15 it was enacted, if any member of such society, established by virtue of the act, should think himself aggrieved by any act of the society, two justices of the county, &c., should determine the matter in a summary way, according to the rules of the society, confirmed pursuant to the act, and make such order therein as they should think just. There was no mention of filing in this section. On an indictment for disobeying an order so made to re-admit a member:—Held to be no objection that the clerk of the peace signed the rules exhibited to the justices, but not the duplicates deposited with him:—Held, also, that the indictment which stated by way of introduction, that the society had been established by virtue of the act, and the rules duly confirmed, but omitted to say that they had been filed, was sufficient, as pursuing the 15th section, on which the jurisdiction to make the order was grounded. Id.

But quære, whether depositing the rules with the clerk of the peace, to be by him filed, would not satisfy the act so as to render the establishment of the society valid, though he omitted to file them? Id.

A. was prosecuted by parish officers for disobeying an order of maintenance, and convicted, and sentence deferred by the court with a view to an arrangement; in the meantime he was committed to prison, and the officers demanded of him a sum considerably exceeding the amount of the maintenance; but part of which was to cover costs. A. paid part, and gave a note for the remainder. He was then brought before the court, and fined 1s. and discharged. It did not appear whether the particulars of the arrangement were communicated to the court; but A. made no complaint when brought up. In an action afterwards brought upon the note:—Held, that no irregularity appeared in the compromise, and that the note was legal. Kirk v. Stickwood, 4 B. & Adol. 421.

LXXVII. REFUSING ORDERS.

Indictment that defendant was appointed overseer of the poor of the parish of A., "and that he afterwards refused to take the said office of overseer of the parish to which he was so appointed:" good on demurrer. Rex v. Burder, 4 T. R. 778; Nolan, 111.

In an indictment against the defendant for refusing to serve the office of overseer of the poor of a parish:—Held, that he was a substantial householder within the statute 43 Eliz. c. 2, and liable to serve such office, although he occupied a house, and paid the rent and taxes in the parish by means of a clerk only, but slept in another parish. Rex v. Poynder, 2 D. & R. 258; 1 B. & C. 178. And see Rex v. Hall, 2 D. & R. 241; 1 B. & C. 123.

The voluntary absence of a chief officer of a corporation, upon the charter day of election of his successor, is not indictable upon the stat. 11 Geo. 1, c. 4, s. 6, unless his presence as such chief officer be necessary by the constitution of the corporation to constitute a legal corporate assembly for such purpose. Rex v. Corry, 5 East, 372; 1 Smith, 538.

LXXVIII. UNLAWFUL TRADING.

It is not an indictable offence to exercise a trade in a borough, contrary to the by-laws of that borough. Rex v. Sharples, 4 T. R. 777.

The case of Rex v. Pemberton, 2 Burr. 1035, relates to using a trade without having served an apprenticeship, but the stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4, on which it was founded, is repealed.

LXXIX. ARTIFICERS GOING ABROAD.

5 Geo. 4, c. 97.

The cases of Rex v. Myddleton, 6 T. R. 739, and Rex v. Hewitt, R. & R. C. C. 158, are on the stat. 23 Geo. 2, c. 13, which is wholly repealed by 5 Geo. 4, c. 97.

LXXX. PUTTING GUNPOWDER ON BOARD SHIPS.

It would seem that if persons put on board a ship an unknown article of a combustible and dangerous nature, without giving due notice of its contents, so as to enable the master to use proper precautions in the stowing of it, they are guilty of a misdemeanour. Williams v. E. I. Company, 3 East, 192, 201.

LXXXI. ADULTERATING FOOD.

Mixing alum with bread in such manner that crude lumps were found in the bread was holden to be indictable. Rex v. Dixon, 3 M. & S. 11.

Indictment against the defendant, who was employed to make bread for the Military Asylum, which charged that he delivered to J. H. Dixon (ss.) 297 loaves, as and for good household bread, for the use and supply of the said asylum and the children belonging thereto, whereas the said loaves were not good household bread, but contained divers noxious and unwholesome materials not fit for the food of man, was held sufficiently certain, without showing what the noxious materials were, or that the defendant intended to injure the children's health. Rex v. Dixon, 3 M. & S. 11; 4 Camp. 12—Ellenborough.

Indictment does not lie against a miller for receiving good barley to grind at his mill, and delivering a mixture of oat and barley meal different from the produce of the barley, and which is musty and unwholesome. Rex v. Haynes, 1 M. & S. 214.

Indictment against a miller, charging in the same count that he received two separate parcels of barley, each of four bushels, to be ground at his mill, and that he delivered three bushels 4 lbs. of oat-meal and barley-meal mixed, other and different than the produce of the said four bushels is ill, for the uncertainty to which of the four bushels it relates: the indictment is also ill if it do not show a certain place where the defendant received the barley to grind. Id. See ante, OVERTING TO GIVE SUFFICIENT FOOD TO APPRENTICES, &c. 754.

LXXXII. INDECENT EXPOSURE.

Bathing in the sea on the beach near inhabited houses, from which the person may be distinctly seen, is an indictable offence, although the house may have been recently erected, and till then it may have been usual for men to bathe in great numbers at the place in question. Rex v. Cruden, 3 Camp. 89—Macdonald. See the case of Rex v. Nicol, and Rex v. Rosinski, ante, 751.

LXXXIII. OBSTRUCTING BURIAL.

Indictment charging "that defendant, in a churchyard, interrupted and obstructed W. C. clerk, in reading the order for the burial of the dead, and interring a corpse, and unlawfully, and by threats and menaces, hindered the burial of the corpse:"—Held bad in arrest of judgment: 1st, for not averring that W. C. was a clerk in holy orders, and lawfully acting as such in the burial of the corpse; and 2nd, for not setting out the particular threats and menaces used by the defendant. Rex v. Chace, 7 D. & R. 461; 4 B. & C. 902.

LXXXIV. OFFENCES RELATING TO DEAD BODIES.

2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 75.

Taking up dead bodies, even though for the purpose of dissection, is an indictable offence. Rex v. Lynn, 2 T. R. 733; 1 Leach, C. C. 497.

Selling the dead body of a person capitally convicted for dissection, where dissection is no part of the sentence, is a misdemeanour at common law; and in order to support an indictment for such offence, it is not necessary that there should be direct evidence that the defendant had sold the body for lucre and gain, and for the purpose of being dissected. Rex v. Cundick, 1 D. & R. N. P. C. 13—Graham.

It is an indictable offence against decency to take a person's dead body with intent to sell or dispose of it for gain and profit. Rex v. Gilles, 1 Russ. C. & M. 415; R. & R. C. C. 366, n. (b.)

Quære, if the apprehension of a person in the act of stealing a body from a churchyard is a lawful apprehension, so as to subject such person to an indictment on the 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, for cutting, &c., a sexton, in order to obstruct and resist such apprehension? Rex v. Duffin, R. & R. C. C. 365.

Where an indictment averred that one E. L. was publicly executed at, &c.; and that one G. C. of, &c., undertaker, was retained and employed by W. W., the keeper of the jail in and for the county, to bury the body of the said person so executed, for certain reward, to be therefore paid to the said G. C., by and on behalf of the said county; and in pursuance of the said retainer and employment, the body of the said person so executed was then and there delivered to the said G. C. for the purpose of being so by him buried as aforesaid; and it then and there became the duty of the said G. C. to bury the same accordingly, but that the said G. C. being, &c., and having no regard to his said duty, nor to, &c., did not, nor would bury the said body; but on the contrary thereof, unlawfully, &c., and for the sake of wicked lucre and gain, did take and carry away the said body, and did sell and dispose of the same for the purpose of being dissected, &c., to the great scandal, &c.:—Held, that the indictment was well framed, though apparently drawn in the language of a declaration in assumpsit. Rex v. Cundick, 1 D. & R. N. P. C. 13—Graham.

LXXXV. DISTURBING DISSENTING CONGREGATIONS.

A congregation of Lutherans, using the German language in their service, are within the protection of the Toleration Act. Rex v. Hube, Peake, 132; 5 T. R. 542.

Methodists and dissenters have a right to the protection of the court, if disturbed in their decent and quiet devotions. Rex v. Wroughton, 3 Burr. 1686.

It is no defence to an indictment on that act for disturbing a congregation of Protestant dissenters, that the violence was committed in the defendant's asserting his right to the clerk's reading desk. Rex v. Hube, Peake, 132; 5 T. R. 542.

It need not be proved that the minister has taken the toleration oaths. Id.

LXXXVI. GAMING HOUSES, DISORDERLY HOUSES, AND GAMING.

Keeping and maintaining a common gaming-house for lucre and gain, and causing and procuring idle and evil disposed persons to come there to play together at "Rouge et Noir," and permitting such persons to play at such game for large sums of money, is indictable at common law; and it seems that an indictment for such an offence, merely charging the defendant with keeping a common gaming-house, would be good. Rex v. Rogier, 2 D. & R. 431; 1 B. & C. 272.

An indictment lies for keeping a disorderly house. Rex v. Higginson, 2 Burr. 1232.

Under an indictment on the stat. 9 Anne, c. 14, s. 5, for gaming, a smaller sum than that named in the indictment under a videlicet may be proved. Rex v. Hill, 1 Stark. 359—Ellenborough.

Bills of exchange must be proved precisely as stated. Id.

An indictment for a nuisance in keeping a common gaming-house was preferred by a private prosecutor, who, after removing it by certiorari, proceeded no further. Another party then caused a venire to be issued, and other steps taken for bringing the case to trial, though desired by the original prosecutor to forbear. On motion by the latter for a stay of proceedings, (he alleging that the offence had been discontinued), the court refused to interfere, the prosecution being for a public nuisance. Rex v. Wood, 3 B. & Adol. 657.

LXXXVII. JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES.

A great number of persons at Birmingham (2500), admitting of an extension to 20,000, covenanted by deed of co-partnership to raise a large capital (20,000*l.*) by small subscriptions of 1*l.* for each share, for the purpose of buying corn, grinding it, making bread, and dealing in and distributing flour or bread amongst the partners, under the name and firm of "The Birmingham Flour and Bread Company," and under the management of a committee; and covenanted that no partner should hold more than 20 shares, &c. Upon an indictment against several of the partners, charging them, upon the stat. 6 Geo. 1, c. 18, ss. 18 & 19, as for a public nuisance, with intending to prejudice and aggrieve divers of the king's subjects in their trade and commerce, under false pretences of the public good, by subscribing, collecting, and raising, and also by making subscriptions towards raising a large sum for establishing a new and unlawful undertaking, tending to the common grievance, &c. of great numbers of the king's subjects in their trade and commerce, i. e. making subscriptions towards raising 20,000*l.* in 20,000 shares, for the purpose of buying corn, and grinding and making it into flour and bread, and dealing in and distributing the same; and also with presuming to act as a corporate body, and pretending to raise a transferable and assignable stock for the same purposes. The jury having found specially, that the company was originally (during the high price of provisions) instituted from laudable motives, and for the purpose of more regularly supplying the town of B. and the neighbourhood with flour and bread, and that the same was originally and still is beneficial to the inhabitants at large, but is (i. e. at the time of finding the special verdict, which does not include the time of the offence charged in the indictment) prejudicial to the bakers and millers of the town and neighbourhood in their trades: the court gave judgment for the defendants, considering the case not to be within the stat. 6 Geo. 1, c. 18, ss. 18 & 19, on which the indictment was framed. Rex v. Webb, 14 East, 406. And see Rex v. Dodd, 9 East, 516, and Rex v. Hawkins, 3 M. & S. 488.

The court of C. P. refused to decide the question whether the Golden-Lane brewery were a nuisance within 6 Geo. 1, c. 18, upon a motion to set aside judgment confessed to them. Brown v. Holt, 4 Taunt. 587.

LXXXVIII. NUISANCE.

The corporation of the city of London, being conservators of the river Thames, and owners of the soil between high and low water mark, cannot authorize a lessee to erect a wharf thereon, which produces inconvenience to the public in the use of the river for the purposes of navigation. Rex v. Grosvenor (Lord), 2 Stark. 511—Abbott. And see Rex v. Hollis, 2 Stark. 536.

When on the trial of an indictment for a nuisance in a river, by erecting staiths for loading ships with coal, the judge left the following points to the jury; whether they were erected in a reasonable part of the river; whether reasonable space was left for navigation; whether loading the vessels by means of them was a public benefit; whether they extended farther than was required, and whether the public benefit produced was greater than the public injury sustained, and he pointed out to the jury, among other benefits, that by means of the staiths the coals were supplied at a cheaper rate, and in better condition, than they otherwise could be:—Held, to be a proper direction—Diss. Tenterden, C. J. Rex v. Russell, 6 B. & C. 566.

It is not conclusive against the defendant that there had not been a writ ad quod damnum and inquiry thereon previous to the defendant making the erection. Id.

By an act, reciting that a railway between certain points would be of great public utility, and would materially assist the agricultural interest and the general traffic of the country, power was given to a company to make such railway according to a plan deposited with the clerk of the peace, from which they were not to deviate more than 100 yards. By a subsequent act, the company or persons authorized by them were empowered to use locomotive engines upon the railway. The railway was made parallel and adjacent to an ancient public highway, and in some places came within five yards of it. It did not appear whether or not the line could have been made, in those instances, to pass at a greater distance. The locomotive engines frightened the horses of persons using the highway as a carriage road. An indictment against the company for a nuisance:—Held, that this interference with the rights of the public must be taken to have been contemplated and sanctioned by the legislature, since the words authorizing the use of engines were unqualified, and the public benefit derived from the railway (whether it would have excused the alleged nuisance at common law or not) showed at least that there was nothing unreasonable in a clause of an act of parliament giving such unqualified authority. Rex v. Pease, 4 B. & Ad. 30.

Defendant, being proprietor of a colliery, made a rail-road from it to a sea-port town. The rail-road was 400 yards long, and was laid upon a turnpike road, which it narrowed so far that in some places there was not a clear space for two carriages to pass. Defendant allowed the public to use his rail-road, paying a toll:—Held, that the facility thereby given to the general traffic with the sea-port, and particularly to the conveyance of coals, &c. thither, was not such a convenience as justified the obstruction of the highway. Rex v. Morris, 1 B. & Ad. 441.

By an act, 45 Geo. 3, c. 74, authority was given to all persons to lay wagon-ways along or across any of the roads mentioned in the act, (of which the turnpike road in question was one), but the parties so doing were to keep such roads in repair for twenty yards on each side of the wagon-way so laid down:—Held, that the act did not authorize the laying of such wagon-way, where there were not twenty yards of road on each side. Id.

The above act was temporary, and was repealed before its expiration. Quære, if the wagon-way, supposing it otherwise legal, would have continued so after the repeal or expiration of the act? Id.

By stat. 44 Geo. 3, c. 55, a company was incorporated and empowered to make a rail-way through certain districts. By sect. 5, they were directed to form new roads in lieu of any existing ones that might be injured by their railway. Sect. 70 empowered proprietors of lands, mines, &c., to make railways through their own lands and those of other persons consenting, and across and along any road or roads, to communicate with the principal railway. And no reference was made to any former limitation of powers:—Held, nevertheless, that the power in this clause was not absolutely given, but must be subject to the provision of sect. 5, or to the condition of leaving space enough, independent of the railway, for the public to pass. Id.

On indictment for nuisance to a public canal navigation established by act of parliament, it appeared that the canal was carried across a river and the adjoining valley by means of an aqueduct and embankment, in which were several arches and culverts: that a brook fell into the river above its point of intersection with the canal; and that at times of flood the water which was then penned back into the brook overflowed its banks, and was carried by the natural level of the country to the above-mentioned arches, and through them to the river, doing however much mischief to the lands over which it passed: that, except for the nuisance after mentioned, the aqueduct would be sufficiently wide for the passage of the river at all times, but those of high flood, notwithstanding the improved drainage of the country which had increased the body of water: that the defendants, occupiers of lands adjoining the river and brook, and for the protection of their lands, subsequently to the making of the canal, aqueduct, and embankment, erected or heightened certain artificial banks called fenders on their respective properties, so as to prevent the flood-water from escaping as above-mentioned; and that the water had consequently in time of flood come down in so large a body against the aqueduct and canal banks as to endanger them and obstruct the navigation; that the fenders were not unnecessarily high, and that if they were reduced many hundred acres of land would again be exposed to inundation:—Held, that the defendants were not justified under these circumstances in altering, for their own benefit, the course in which the flood-water had been accustomed to run; that there was no difference in this respect between flood-water and an ordinary stream; that an action on the case would have lain at the suit of an individual for such diversion, and consequently that an indictment will lay where the act affected the public. The jury found that the acts creating the nuisance were done by the defendants severally:—Held, nevertheless, that, as the nuisance was the result of all those acts jointly, the defendants were rightly joined in one indictment, which stated the acts to have been several. Rex v. Trafford, B. & Adol. 874.

An indictment does not lie against the owner of a vessel, sunk by accident or misfortune in a navigable river, for not removing it. Rex v. Watts, 2 Esp. 675—Kenyon.

Nor for obstructing a highway by the holding of a fair or market, if there have been an uninterrupted custom for twenty years. Rex v. Smith, 1 Esp. 109—Ellenborough. And see Rex v. Canfield, 6 Esp. 136.

But it does for setting a person in the footway of the public streets, in London, to deliver out printed bills of defendant's occupation, where the footway was greatly obstructed. Rex v. Garmon, 1 Burr. 516.

An indictment lies for keeping stage-coaches in the street beyond a reasonable time necessary for loading and unloading. Rex v. Cross, 3 Camp. 224—Ellenborough.

A wagoner, occupying one side of a public street in a city, before his warehouses, in loading and unloading his wagons, for several hours at a time, both day and night, and having one wagon at least usually standing before his warehouses, so that no carriage could pass on that side of the street, and sometimes even foot-passengers were incommoded by cumbersome goods lying on the ground, on the same side, ready for loading, is indictable for a public nuisance; though there were room for two carriages to pass on the opposite side of the street. Rex v. Russell, 6 East, 427; 2 Smith, 424.

An indictment lies for sawing timber in the public street, though it was solely done for the purpose of enabling the defendant to get it into his yard. Rex v. Jones, 3 Camp. 230—Ellenbo.

So, for a nuisance in erecting buildings near the highway and dwelling-houses, and there making acid spirit of sulphur, whereby the air was impregnated with noisome and offensive stinks, to the common nuisance of all inhabiting and passing. Rex v. White, 1 Burr. 333.

But the merely carrying on of an offensive trade is not an indictable offence, unless it be destructive to the health of the neighbourhood, or render the houses uncomfortable or untenable. Rex v. Davey, 5 Esp. 217—Heath.

And if it only affect the inhabitants of three houses, it is not sufficient. Rex v. Lloyd, 4 Esp. 200—Ellenborough.

If, by a private act of parliament, all houses for the slaughtering of horses within 1000 yards of a certain workhouse are to be deemed public nuisances and removed; but, if they existed before the act, the owners are to receive a compensation:—Held, that if an indictment be found at common law with counts on that act, the defendant may be convicted if he so carried on the trade as to make it a public nuisance, and that he is not then entitled to any compensation. Rex v. Watts, 2 C. & P. 486—Abbott.

If a party set up a noxious trade remote from habitations and public roads, and after that new houses are built, and new roads constructed near it, the party may continue his trade although it be a nuisance to persons inhabiting such houses or passing along such roads. Rex v. Cross, 2 C. & P. 483—Abbott.

To support an indictment for a nuisance, it is not necessary that the smells produced by it should be injurious to the health, it is sufficient if they be offensive to the senses. Rex v. Neil, 2 C. & P. 485—Abbott.

An acquiescence for fifty years by the neighbourhood will prevent an indictment for continuing a noxious trade. Rex v. Neville, Peake, 93—Kenyon.

So, for setting up a noxious manufactory in a neighbourhood in which other offensive trades have long been borne with; unless the inconvenience to the public be greatly increased. Rex v. Neville, Peake, 91—Kenyon.

Indictment charged the defendant with keeping certain inclosed lands, near the king's highway, for the purpose of persons frequenting the same to practise rifle shooting, and to shoot at pigeons with fire-arms, and that he unlawfully and injuriously caused divers persons to meet there for that purpose, and suffered and caused a great number of idle and disorderly persons armed with fire-arms to meet in the highways, &c., near the said inclosed grounds, discharging fire-arms, making a great noise, &c., by which the king's subjects were disturbed and put in peril. At the trial it was proved that the defendant had converted his premises, which were situate at Bayswater, in the county of Middlesex, near a public highway there, into a shooting ground, where persons came to shoot with rifles at a target, and also at pigeons, and that as the pigeons which were fired at frequently escaped, persons collected outside of the ground and in the neighbouring fields to shoot at them as they strayed, causing a great noise and disturbance, and doing mischief by the shot:—Held, that the evidence supported the allegation, that the defendant caused such persons to assemble, discharging fire-arms, inasmuch as their doing so was a probable consequence of his keeping ground for shooting pigeons in such a place. Rex v. Moore, 3 B. & Adol. 184.

A man carrying on a noxious business in a place where it has been long established is indictable for a nuisance, if the mischief is increased by the manner or extent of carrying it on; but if the business is increased, but with no additional mischief by reason of a better mode of carrying on the business, it is otherwise. Rex v. Watts, 1 M. & M. 283—Tenterden.

LXXXIX. HIGHWAYS AND BRIDGES.

An indictment for not repairing a common highway, leading from the parish of A. to the parish of B., is exclusive of B., although it afterwards allege that the part of the said road, which was out of repair, is in the parish of B. Rex v. Gamlingay, 1 Leach, C. C. 528; 3 T. R. 513.

An indictment charged that the defendants removed a culvert in the parish of S., opposite to a mill there, in a highway there, leading from S. to H.:—Held, on motion, in arrest of judgment, that it sufficiently appeared that the culvert removed was in the parish of S. Rex v. Knight, 7 B. & C. 413; 1 M. & R. 217.

A road had been repaired by a parish, and persons on horseback had used it; but there was no evidence that any carriage had ever gone along the whole length of it:—Held, that the parish could not be convicted of non-repair of it on an indictment stating it to be a way for carriages; and that there should have been a count in the indictment charging it to be a way for horses. Rex v. St. Weonard, 5 C. & P. 579—Parke.

The intention of stat. 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 24, is, that the surveyor, giving the information to the presenting magistrate, must be the surveyor of the district where the road presented is situated. Rex v. Pylingdales, 7 B. & C. 428; 1 M. & R. 176.

The presentation must state that the information was upon oath given to the presenting magistrate. Id.

Where a magistrate presented a road in the township of F., "upon the information of A. B., surveyor of the highways for the township of C., which is 35 miles distant from the township of F.:"—Held, in arrest of judgment, that this presentment was bad, for that it did not appear that the information upon oath was given to the presenting magistrate, and the surveyor of the highways in C. had no authority under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 24, to give information as to the road in F. Id.

A high constable cannot present for a nuisance to a highway like a magistrate, but must go before a grand jury and give his evidence upon oath. Rex v. Bridgwater and Taunton Coal Company, 7 B. & C. 514.

The description of a road, in a presentment of a justice, must allege that it lies in the parish, or they are not bound to repair. Rex v. Hartford, Cowp. 111.

But an indictment stating a road to lead from the hamlet of H. was held good. Rex v. Harrow, 4 Burr. 2090.

In an indictment for the non-repair of a highway, it must be affirmatively stated that the road is within the district which is bound to repair. Rex v. Upton, 6 C. & P. 133—Tindal.

Stating a road to be out of repair, "from end through" a place, excludes the terminus. Id.

An indictment against a parish for not repairing one side of a road should state a liability to repair it to the middle. Rex v. St. Peter, Peake, 219—Kenyon. And see Rex v. Bredland, 2 Camp. 494.

If a parish be situate, part in one county and the rest in another, and a highway lying in one part be out of repair, an indictment against the inhabitants of that part only is bad; the indictment must be against the whole parish. Rex v. Clifton, 5 T. R. 498.

If a parish lie in two distinct counties, an indictment for not repairing the highway may be brought against that part of the parish in which the ruinous road lies. Rex v. Weston, 4 Burr. 2507. And see 5 Burr. 2700.

An objection, that the description of a road in an indictment is too general, can only be taken by a plea in abatement. Rex v. Haverham, 1 Stark. 357—Ellenborough.

An indictment against the parish of B., for not repairing a road leading from A. to B., is exclusive of B., and therefore bad; and it is not cured by a subsequent allegation that a certain part of the same highway situate in B. is in decay. Rex v. Gamlingay, 3 T. R. 513.

If the commissioners, under an inclosure act, set out a private road for the use of the inclosed ants of nine parishes, directing the inhabitants of six of those parishes to keep it in repair, no indictment can be supported against the latter for not repairing, it not concerning the public. Rex v. Richards, 8 T. R. 634.

Indictment for non-repair of a highway within certain limits, charging the corporation of Liverpool with a prescriptive liability to repair all common highways, &c., within such limits, "excepting such as ought to be repaired according to the form of the several statutes in such case made," is bad, for want of showing that the highway in question was not within any of the exceptions. Rex v. Liverpool (Mayor), 3 East, 86.

A count, stating the defendant's liability to arise by virtue of an agreement with the owners of houses alongside of it, is also bad; for the parish, who are prima facie bound to the repair of all highways within their boundaries, cannot be discharged from such liability by any agreement with others. Id.

In an indictment for obstructing a common highway, the highway may be laid as a common highway for carts, carriages, &c., although it has always been arched over, provided that it is capable of being used by all ordinary carriages, and notwithstanding the archway be not sufficiently high to permit road waggons and other carriages of unusual dimensions to pass under it. Rex v. Lynn, 1 C. & P. 527—Littledale; 1 R. & M. 150.

The inhabitants of a parish are not bound to repair a way used by the public, and repaired by the parish for more than 20 years, if there be no owner who could dedicate the way to the public, and the repairs by the parish be shown to have been begun and continued under a mistaken notion of the liability of the inhabitants to repair. Rex v. Edmonton, 2 M. & M. 24.

The inhabitants are bound by such repairs, if made with a full knowledge of the facts, and with the intention of taking upon themselves the public duty. Id.

Semble, that roads set out under an inclosure act do not by a presumption of law belong to the owners of the adjoining land. Id.

To an indictment against a parish for non-repair of a highway lying within it, a plea that the inhabitants of another parish have repaired, and been used and accustomed to repair, and of right ought to have repaired:—Held ill, as it did not show any consideration. Rex v. St. Giles, Cambridge, 5 M. & S. 260.

But in a plea by the inhabitants of a county, that the inhabitants of a particular township have immemorially repaired the highway at the end of a county bridge, situate within the township, it is not necessary to state any consideration for such prescription. Rex v. W. R. Yorkshire, 4 B. & A. 623.

Indictment against the inhabitants of a parish for not repairing a road: plea, that the inhabitants of a particular district within the parish have immemorially repaired all the roads within that district, of which the road indicted was one:—Held, that this was a good plea, although it did not state any consideration for the liability of the inhabitants of the district. Rex v. Ecclefield, 1 B. & A. 348; 1 Stark. 393.

To an indictment against the inhabitants of a parish for non-repair of a highway within it, a plea, stating that the parish was immemorially divided into seven townships, the inhabitants of which respectively were immemorially bound to repair the highways within their respective townships; and that part of the highway indicted was within the township of G. B., &c., and that the residue, &c., was within the township of L. B., &c.; and that the respective parts ought to be repaired by the inhabitants of the respective townships, &c., is bad; without specifying what part of the highway lay within one township, and what part within the other. Rex v. Bridekirk, 11 East, 304. And see Rex v. Taunton, 3 M. & S. 465.

Where a local turnpike act, after empowering the trustees under it to take tolls, directed that the roads should from time to time be repaired by the trustees out of the money arising by virtue of the act:—Held, that this only made the tolls an auxiliary fund in the hands of the trustees, and that the inhabitants of the township where the road was situate, who by prescription were bound to repair all roads within it, were nevertheless liable to be indicted for non-repair of the road:—Held, also, that such inhabitants may, after conviction, apply by motion for relief against the trustees under 13 Geo. 3, c. 84, s. 33:—Held, also, that 13 Geo. 3, c. 84, s. 63, only refers to diversions under writs of ad quod damnum, and under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 19. Rex v. Netherthong, 2 B. & A. 179.

In order to be discharged from an indictment for not repairing a highway, the parties must produce an affidavit that the road is now actually repaired since the conviction, and is likely to continue so. Rex v. Loughton, 3 Smith, 575.

An indictment against a parish for not repairing a highway cannot be quashed on an affidavit that the way was then in repair; but the defendant must plead guilty, and pay a nominal fine. Rex v. Lincombe, 2 Chit. 214.

The court will not entertain an application for setting aside an award founded on an indictment at the assizes for not repairing a road, though the question in dispute be of a civil nature. Rex v. Cotesbatch, 2 D. & R. 265.

Where one inhabitant of a parish has removed an indictment against it for the non-repair of a road into K. B., and has entered into the usual recognizance for costs, in case a verdict of guilty should pass, the other inhabitants of the parish will not be permitted to plead guilty to the indictment. Rex v. Laxborough, 1 Dowl. Pr. R. 527.

A bridge built in a public way, without public utility, is indictable as a nuisance; and so it is if built colourably in an imperfect or inconvenient manner, with a view to throw the onus of rebuilding or repairing it immediately on the county. Rex v. W. R. Yorkshire, 2 East, 342. And see Rex v. Glamorgan, 2 East, 356, n.

An indictment, charging an individual with the repair of a bridge by reason of his being owner and proprietor of a certain navigation, is not equivalent to charging him ratione tenuræ, but is erroneous; and if judgment be given thereon, upon error brought it will be reversed. It seems that a count charging him by reason of being owner of a navigation under a private act of parliament must set forth the act. Rex v. Kerrison, 1 M. & S. 435.

The inhabitants of a county are bound to repair every public bridge within it, unless, when indicted for the non-repair of it, they can show by their plea, that some other person, or body politic or corporate, is liable; and every bridge in a highway is by the statute of Bridges, 22 Hen. 8, c. 5, taken to be a public bridge for this purpose; therefore where Queen Anne, in 1708, for her greater convenience in passing to and from Windsor Castle, built a bridge on the Thames at Datchet, in the common highway leading from London to Windsor, in lieu of an ancient ferry which belonged to the crown, and she and her successors maintained and repaired the bridge till 1796, when being in part broken down, the whole was removed, and the materials converted to the use of the King, by whom the ferry was re-established as before; the court held that the inhabitants of the county of Bucks, who, in answer to an indictment for the non-repair of that part of the bridge lying in the county of Bucks, pleaded these matters, and showed that the bridge was a common public bridge, were nevertheless bound to rebuild and repair it. Rex v. Buckinghamshire, 12 East, 192.

By the stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 5, no bridge thereafter to be erected or built is to be repairable at the expense of the county, unless erected under the directions of the county surveyor, &c. This applies only to bridges newly built, not to a bridge merely widened or repaired since the passing of the act. Rex v. Lancashire (Justices), 2 B. & Adol. 813.

Trustees under a turnpike act having built a bridge across a stream where a culvert would have been sufficient, but a bridge is better for the public, the county cannot refuse to repair such bridge, on the ground that it was not absolutely necessary. Id.

By the stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 5, no bridge thereafter to be built in any county by or at the expense of any individual or private person, body politic or corporate, shall be deemed a county bridge, unless erected in a substantial and commodious manner, under the direction or to the satisfaction of the county surveyor, &c. Rex v. Derby, 2 B. & Adol. 147.

Trustees appointed by a local turnpike act are individuals or private persons within the meaning of this statute; and therefore a bridge erected by such trustees after the passing of the statute, but not under the direction or to the satisfaction of the county surveyor, &c., is not a bridge which the inhabitants of the county are liable to repair. Id.

To an indictment against the inhabitants of a county for the non-repair of a foot bridge, they pleaded that it was parcel of a carriage bridge, which A. B. was bound to repair ratione tenuræ. Replication admitted the liability of A. B. to repair the carriage way, but denied that the foot bridge was parcel of the same; whereupon issue was joined. The evidence was, that the carriage bridge mentioned in the pleadings had been built before 1119, and that certain abbey lands had been ordained for the repairs of the same, and the proprietors of those lands (of which those mentioned to be held by A. B. were part) had always repaired the bridge so built. In 1736 the trustees of a turnpike road, with the consent of a certain number of the proprietors of the abbey lands, constructed a wooden foot bridge along the outside of the parapet of the carriage bridge, partly connected with it by brickwork and iron pins, and partly resting on the stone-work of the bridge:—Held, that this (being the foot bridge mentioned in the indictment) was not parcel of the carriage bridge, which A. B. was bound by tenure to repair, and consequently that the county was liable to repair the foot bridge. Rex v. Middlesex, 3 B. & Adol. 201.

Though a charter of Edw. 6, granted upon the recited prayer of the inhabitants of the borough of Stratford-upon-Avon, that the king would esteem them, the inhabitants, worthy to be made, reduced, and erected into a body "corporate and politic," and thereupon proceeding to "grant (without any word of confirmation) unto the inhabitants of the borough, that the same borough should be a free borough for ever thereafter," and then proceeding to incorporate them by the name of the bailiffs and burgesses, &c., would, without more, imply a new incorporation; yet, where the same charter recited that it was an ancient borough, in which a guild was theretofore founded and endowed with lands, out of the rents, revenues, and profits of which a school and an almshouse were maintained, and a bridge was from time to time kept up and repaired; which guild was then dissolved, and its lands lately come into the king's hands; and further reciting, that the inhabitants of the borough, from time immemorial, had enjoyed franchises, liberties, free customs, jurisdictions, privileges, exemptions, and immunities, by reason and pretence of the guild, and of charters, grants, and confirmations to the guild and otherwise, which the inhabitants could not then hold and enjoy by the dissolution of the guild, and for other causes, by means whereof it was likely that the borough and its government would fall into a worse state without speedy remedy: and thereupon the inhabitants of the borough had prayed the king's favour for bettering the borough and government thereof, and for supporting the great charges which from time to time they were bound to sustain, to be deemed worthy to be made, &c., a body corporate, &c.; and thereupon the king, after granting to the inhabitants of the borough to be a corporation, as before stated, granted them the same bounds and limits as the borough and the jurisdiction thereof from time immemorial had extended to: and then the king, "willing that the almshouse and school should be kept up and maintained" theretofore, (without naming the bridge,) and that the great charges to the borough and its inhabitants from time to time incident might be thereafter the better sustained and supported, granted to the corporation the lands of the late guild: and it further appearing by parol testimony, as far back as living memory went, that the corporation had always repaired the bridge:—Held, that taking the whole of the charter and the parol testimony together, the preponderance of the evidence was, 1st, that this was a corporation by prescription, though words of creation only were used in the incorporating part of the charter of Edw. 6; 2dly, that the burthen of repairing the bridge was upon such prescriptive corporation during the existence of the guild before that charter; though the guild, out of their revenues, had in fact repaired the bridge; which was only in case of the corporation, and not ratione tenuræ, and that the corporation were still bound by prescription, and not merely by tenure; and therefore that a verdict against them upon an indictment for the non-repair of the bridge, charging them as immemorially bound to the repair of it, was sustainable. Rex v. Stratford-upon-Avon (Mayor, &c.), 14 East, 348.

Where, by an act of parliament, trustees are authorized to make a road from one point to another, the making of the entire road is a condition precedent to any part becoming a highway repairable by the public, and therefore where trustees empowered by act of parliament to make a road from A. to B., (being in length twelve miles), had completed eleven miles and a half of such road, to a point where it intersected a public highway, it was held that the district in which the part so completed lay was not bound to repair it. Rex v. Cumberworth, 3 B. & Adol. 108.

On an indictment for encroaching on a public highway, it appeared that in 1771 commissioners under an inclosure act had been empowered to set out public and private roads, the former to be repaired by the township, the latter by such persons as the commissioners should direct. The public roads were to be sixty feet wide between the fences. The commissioners in their award described a road as private and eight yards wide; but in setting it out they left a space of sixty feet between the fences; and they directed both the public and private roads to be repaired by the township. The centre only of the sixty feet was ordinarily used as a carriage road, and the township repaired it. The space said to be encroached upon was at the side of this road, and there was a diversity of evidence as to the use made of this space by the public and its condition since the time of the award:—Held, that the commissioners had exceeded their authority in awarding that private roads should be repaired by the township; but that on the whole of this evidence it was a proper question for the jury whether or not the road in question, though originally intended to be private, had been dedicated to and adopted by the public. Semble, per Lord Denning, C. J., that when a road runs through a space of fifty or sixty feet between inclosures set out by act of parliament, it is prima facie to be presumed that the whole of that space is public, though it may not all be used or kept in repair as a road. Rex v. Wright, 3 B. & Adol. 681.

The inhabitants of a county are bound by common law to repair bridges erected over such water only as answers the description of flumen vel cursus aquæ, that is, water flowing in a channel between banks more or less defined, although such channel may be occasionally dry. And therefore where the road by which a bridge was approached passed between meadows which were occasionally flooded by a river, and for convenient access to the bridge a raised causeway had been made, having arches or culverts at intervals for the passage of the flood-water, which were equally necessary to the safety of the main bridge and the causeway:—It was held, that the inhabitants of the county were not bound to repair such arches, being at the distance of more than 300 feet from the end of the main bridge. Rex v. Oxfordshire, 1 B. & Adol. 289.

An indictment for not repairing an ancient bridge, described it as being situate within the parish of P. and M., and averred that the inhabitants of P., and those of the township of M. aforesaid, were liable to repair such bridges, without proceeding to state what part of it was situate in the township of M., and that the inhabitants thereof were liable to repair it:—Held, bad upon error, as no special or sufficient consideration was shown to render the inhabitants of the township liable to repair, as they could not hold land, and consequently could not be liable ratione tenuræ. Rex v. Penegoes and Mac-hynlleth (in error), 3 D. & R. 388; 2 B. & C. 166.

Indictment against a county for not repairing a bridge: plea, that J. S. is liable ratione tenuræ. The plea not sustained by evidence that the estate of J. S. was part of a larger estate, which part J. S. purchased of the former owner, who retained the rest in his own hands, and as well before the purchase as since has repaired the bridge; but where in such case the county was found guilty, the court gave leave to stay the judgment upon payment of costs until another indictment was preferred, in order to try the liability. Rex v. Oxfordshire, 16 East, 223.

An indictment for non-repair of a road or bridge on a liability ratione tenuræ cannot be sustained where it appears that the tenement on which the liability is charged originated within time of legal memory. Rex v. Hayman, 1 M. & M. 401—Tindal.

On such an indictment rated inhabitants are admissible as witnesses for the prosecution. Id.

An indictment had been preferred against a county for not repairing a bridge at the instance of the inhabitants of a parish, and the question intended to be tried was, whether the inhabitants of the parish or of the county were liable to repair it. The court refused to compel the inhabitants of the parish to allow the parties indicted to inspect the parish books and documents relating to the bridge. Rex v. Buckingham (Justices), 8 B. & C. 375; 2 M. & R. 412.

Upon not guilty to an indictment against the inhabitants of a county for not repairing a public bridge, it is competent to the defendants to give evidence of the bridge having been repaired by private individuals. Rex v. Northampton, 2 M. & S. 262.

The court is reluctant to stay judgment on an indictment for not repairing a bridge, and will not stay it generally, but only till further order; and, if the trial of another indictment is not proceeded in with all despatch, judgment will be given. Rex v. Southampton, 2 Chit. 215.

The court of quarter sessions cannot impose more than one fine for the non-repair of a bridge. Rex v. Machynlleth, 4 B. & A. 469.

A presentment under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 4, against a smaller district than a parish, must state expressly how they are liable to the repair of roads. Rex v. Penderryn, 2 T. R. 513.

A presentment by a magistrate under the stat. 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 24, of a nuisance in a highway, must allege the offence to be done against the form of the statute. Rex v. Winter, 13 East, 258.

The fact of non-repair is triable, when a justice presents a highway upon his own view. Rex v. Wiltshire (Justices), 1 W. Black. 467; 3 Burr. 1530.

Pending an information at the instance of a parish against a county for not repairing a bridge, the object being to try whether the parish or the county were liable to repair the bridge, the court refused to grant the defendants an inspection of the parish books relating to former repairs of the bridge. Rex v. Bucks, 2 M. & R. 412.

XC. RETURNING FROM TRANSPORTATION.

5 Geo. 4, c. 84.

An indictment, for being at large after an order of transportation, stated that the prisoner was capitally convicted at the assizes of 1818; and that mercy was extended to him on condition of his being transported for life to some parts beyond the seas; and that he was thereupon ordered to be transported to New South Wales, or to some of the islands adjacent; and it appeared that the condition on which mercy was granted was not general, but specific, that he should be transported to New South Wales, or some of the islands adjacent:—Held, a fatal variance. Rex v. Fitzpatrick, R. & R. C. C. 512.

An indictment on 56 Geo. 3, c. 27, s. 8, for being at large after sentence of transportation, should set forth the effect and substance of the former conviction; so likewise should the certificate of the former conviction. Therefore an indictment or certificate, under this section of the statute, stating the former conviction to have been for felony only, is insufficient. Rex v. Watson, R. & R. C. C. 468; 1 Russ. C. & M. 368.

So, an indictment and certificate stating that the prisoner was convicted of grand larceny without the benefit of clergy, without setting out the effect and substance of such former conviction, were held insufficient. Rex v. Sutcliffe, R. & R. C. C. 469, n.; 1 Russ. C. & M. 402.

The king's sign manual may be given in evidence on an indictment for returning from transportation; and if the condition of it has not been substantially, though literally complied with, the prisoner shall be remitted to his former sentence. Rex v. Miller, 1 Leach, C. C. 74; 2 W. Black. 797.

A prisoner convicted of a capital crime, whose sentence is respited during the king's pleasure, and who, on having received pardon on condition of transportation for life, is afterwards found at large in Great Britain, without lawful cause, shall be referred back to his original sentence. Rex v. Madan, 1 Leach, C. C. 223.

Quære, whether a person who is convicted of a single felony, and receives judgment of transportation to America, but is pardoned on condition of transporting himself, and giving security so to do, can be convicted of the capital felony, or ought to be remitted to his former sentence, on his breaking the subsequent conditions on which the pardon was granted? Rex v. Aickles, 1 Leach, C. C. 390. And see Rex v. Thorpe, 1 Leach, C. C. 396, n.

XCI. ESCAPE, RESCUE, AND PRISON-BREACH.

[See the statutes collected, Collier's Crim. Stat., tit. ESCAPE, RESCUE, AND PRISON-BREACH.]

A prison-breach, or rescue, is a common-law felony, if the person breaking out of prison, or rescued, is a convicted felon; and it is punishable as a common-law felony by imprisonment, and, under 19 Geo. 2, c. 74, s. 4, by not more than three times whipping in addition. Rex v. Haswell, R. & R. C. C. 458.

The offence of aiding a prisoner at war to escape is not complete, if such prisoner is acting in concert with those under whose charge he is, merely to detect the defendant, and has no intention to escape. Rex v. Martin, R. & R. C. C. 196.

A person who has been convicted of grand larceny, sentenced to transportation for seven years, but confined in the hulks and discharged at the end of seven years, is a competent witness, such confinement operating as a statute pardon; and that having escaped twice during such confinement, for a few hours each time, did not destroy the effect of it. Rex v. Badcock, R. & R. C. C. 248.

An indictment at common law, for aiding a prisoner's escape, should state that the party knew of his offence. Rex v. Young, 1 Russ. C. & M. 391.

Where a capital convict had a conditional pardon, and escaped, and the indictment against him stated that the king's pleasure was notified to the court, and the court thereupon ordered, &c., according to the terms of the pardon, and it appeared that the notification was to the judge after the assizes were over, and that he made the order:—Held, that the variance was fatal. Rex v. Treadwell, 1 Russ. C. & M. 402.

The stat. 16 Geo. 2, c. 31, which makes it felony to aid and assist any prisoner in an attempt to make his escape, does not extend to a case of such aiding where an actual escape ensues. Rex v. Tilley, 2 Leach, C. C. 662.

An indictment on that statute, charging the prisoner with having aided and assisted in such an attempt, need not state that the party aided did attempt to make the escape; for he could not have been aided if no such an attempt had been made. Id.

A prisoner cannot be convicted on the 16 Geo. 2, c. 31, for facilitating an escape, if it appear, either by the indictment or on evidence, that the commitment was for suspicion only. Rex v. Walker, 1 Leach, C. C. 97; S. P. Rex v. Greeniff, 1 Leach, C. C. 363.

A delivery of instruments to a prisoner to facilitate his escape from jail is within stat. 16 Geo. 2, c. 31, although the prisoner has been pardoned of the offence of which he was convicted on conviction of transportation. Rex v. Shaw, R. & R. C. C. 526.

A party may be convicted of delivering instruments to a prisoner to facilitate his escape from jail, although there is no evidence that he knew of what specific offence the person he assisted had been convicted. Id.

On an indictment on 16 Geo. 2, c. 31, for delivering instruments to a prisoner to facilitate his escape from jail:—Held, that if the record of the conviction of the prisoner, whose escape was to have been effected, is produced by the proper officer, no evidence is admissible to dispute what it states, or to show that it has never been filed amongst the other records of the county, although the indictment refers to it with a prout patet as remaining amongst the records. Id.

Throwing down, in attempting to escape, loose bricks at the top of a prison wall, placed there to impede escape and give alarm, is a prison-breach, though they are thrown down by accident. Rex v. Haswell, R. & R. C. C. 458.

It would seem that the giving assistance to a person suspected of felony, and pursued by the officers of justice, in order to enable such person to avoid being arrested, is a misdemeanour, as being an obstruction to the course of public justice. Rex v. Buckle, 1 Russ. C. & M. 361—narrow.

Before the passing of the 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 88, rescuing a person under a commitment for burglary, was not a transportable offence, but punishable only as a felony within clergy at common law. Rex v. Stanley, R. & R. C. C. 432.

A person committed as a rogue and vagabond under the 23 Geo. 3, c. 88, who breaks jail, and on being committed as an incorrigible rogue under 17 Geo. 2, c. 5, breaks jail a second time, and then commits a new act of vagrancy as a rogue and vagabond, may be indicted for felony and transported under the Vagrant Act. Rex v. Baillie, 1 Leach, C. C. 396.

The certificate of the clerk of assize of a former conviction was held not to be evidence on an indictment for an escape before stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 44, as such a document was only evidence in cases when expressly made so by statute. Rex v. Smith, 1 Russ. C. & M. 368.

Such certificate should set forth the effect and substance of the conviction, and a mere statement that it was for felony, without anything more, is not sufficient. Rex v. Watson, 1 Russ. C. & M. 368; R. & R. C. C. 468; S. P. Rex v. Sutcliffe, 1 Russ. C. & M. 402; R. & R. C. C. 469.

A constable of the night is guilty of an indictable misdemeanour in suffering a street-walker, delivered to his custody by one of the nightly watch, to escape. Rex v. Bootie, 2 Burr. 864; 2 Ld. Ken. 575.

A warrant of a justice of the peace to apprehend a party, founded on a certificate of the clerk of the peace that an indictment for a misdemeanour had been found against such party, is good, and therefore if upon such a warrant the party be arrested and afterwards rescued, those who are guilty of the rescue may be convicted of a misdemeanour. Rex v. Stokes, 5 C. & P. 148—Park.

XCII. ATTEMPT TO COMMIT MISDEMEANOUR.

An attempt to commit a statutable misdemeanour is as much indictable as an attempt to commit a common-law misdemeanour. Rex v. —, R. & R. C. C. 107—Le Blanc.

XCIII. OFFENCES AT SEA.

7 Geo. 4, c. 38; 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, ss. 9, 10 & 11; 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 12; 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 32.]

Accessories before the fact on shore, to the wilful destruction of a ship on the high seas, were not triable by the Admiralty jurisdiction under stat. 11 Geo. 1, c. 29, s. 7. Rex v. Easterby, 2 Leach, C. C. 947; 1 East, P. C. Add. xxvi. But see stat. cited supra.

The commissioners under the 28 Hen. 8, c. 15, for the trial of murders committed on the high seas, &c., were not restricted to places which were without the body of any county. Rex v. Bruce, R. & R. C. C. 243; 2 Leach, C. C. 1093.

When the haven, &c., is within the body of a county, the common-law tribunals have also a concurrent jurisdiction with the Admiralty. Id.

If a loaded pistol be fired from the land at a distance of one hundred yards from the sea, and a man is maliciously killed in the water one hundred yards from the shore, the offender shall be tried by the Admiralty jurisdiction; for the offence is committed where the death happened, and not at the place from whence the cause of death proceeds. Rex v. Coombes, 1 Leach, C. C. 388; 1 East, P. C. 369.

The Admiralty had no jurisdiction to try an offence against stat. 11 Geo. 1, c. 29, in procuring the destruction of a ship, of which the prisoners were the owners, there being no evidence of any act of procurement done upon the high seas within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty. Rex v. Easterby, R. & R. C. C. 37; 1 East, P. C. Add.

xxvi.; 2 Leach, C. C. 947. But see the stats. cited supra.

Where a prisoner was convicted capitally at the Admiralty sessions for maliciously stabbing, upon the 43 Geo. 3, c. 58:—Held, that as that statute only made the offence capital if committed in England or Ireland, it was not so if committed at sea, and therefore not triable under the 39 Geo. 3, c. 37. Rex v. Amarro, R. & R. C. C. 286. But see the stats. cited supra.

XCIV. APPREHENSION OF OFFENDERS.

7 Geo. 4, c. 142; 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 63; 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 28; 10 Geo. 4, c. 44, s. 7; 11 Geo. 4, c. 27; 3 & 4 Will. 4, s. 19.

General warrants are illegal, and void. Money v. Leach, 1 W. Black. 555.

If the putative father of a bastard child is taken up under a warrant, and brought before a magistrate to find sureties to indemnify the parish, and is let go on promise to find such, quære whether, in case he neglects to do so, he can be again taken up under the same warrant? Dickinson v. Brown, Peake, 234—Kenyon; 1 Esp. 218.

A warrant to arrest the party "to the end that he may become bound, &c., at the next sessions," means the next session after the arrest, therefore the officer may justify an arrest after the sessions next ensuing the date of the warrant. Mayhew v. Parker, 8 T. R. 110; 2 Esp. 683.

A constable is not justified in taking a person into custody for a mere assault, unless he is present at the time. Coupey v. Henley, 2 Esp. 540—Eyre.

Using loud words in the street, though disorderly, is not an offence for which a party should be taken into custody. Hardy v. Murphy and Wedge, 1 Esp. 294—Eyre.

If a party be turning towards the wall in a street on a particular occasion, a watchman is not justified in collaring him to prevent his so doing. Booth v. Hanley, 2 C. & P. 288.

If a constable is preventing a breach of the peace, and any person stands in his way to hinder him from so doing, the constable is justified in taking such person into custody, but not in giving him a blow. Levi v. Edwards, 1 C. & P. 40.

A peace-officer may justify an arrest on a reasonable charge of felony without a warrant, although it should afterwards appear that no felony had been committed; but a private individual cannot. Samuel v. Payne, 1 Dougl. 359.

Where a felony has actually been committed, a constable, or even a private person, acting bona fide and in pursuit of the offender, upon such information as amounts to a reasonable and probable ground of suspicion, may justify an arrest. Ledwith v. Catchpole, Cald. 291.

A constable having reasonable cause to suspect a person of felony may arrest him, though it appears no felony was committed. Beckwith v.

Philby, 6 B. & C. 35; Hobbs v. Broadbent, 1 Camp. 420—Ellenborough.

A constable is justified in apprehending a person charged on suspicion of felony, if he have reasonable or probable cause to believe that the party charged is the felon; and it having been left to the jury to say whether, on all the facts before them, they thought that the constable had reasonable ground to suppose that the party charged was guilty of felony, and whether they would have acted as the constable did:—Held, that this direction was right in substance, and that the constable did not exercise an undue degree of coercion, although he apprehended the party (a female) at night, without any warrant, and conveyed her to prison previously to taking her before a magistrate. Davis v. Russell, 11 & P. 590.

When a private person apprehends another on suspicion of felony he does it at his peril, and is liable to an action unless he can establish in proof that the party has actually been guilty of felony. Adams v. Moore, 2 Selw. N. P. 910—Heath.

If a reasonable charge of felony be made against a person who is given in charge to a constable, the constable is bound to take him, and he will be justified in so doing, although the charge may turn out to be unfounded. Cowley v. Debar, 2 C. & P. 565.

If a person be taken by a private individual without warrant on suspicion of felony, and conduct himself in a manner to excite suspicion, this only goes in mitigation of damages, if it turn out that no felony was committed. Id.

A constable arresting one on suspicion of felony is bound to take him before a magistrate as soon as he reasonably can, and he cannot justify detaining him three days without going before a magistrate in order that evidence may be collected in support of the prosecution. Wright v. Court, 6 D. & R. 623.

A constable, having taken a prisoner on suspicion of felony, has no right to handcuff him, except he has attempted to escape, or except it is necessary in order to prevent his escaping. Id.

Watchmen and beadle have authority at common law to arrest and detain in prison, for excommunication, persons walking the streets at night whom there is reasonable ground to suspect of felony, although there is no proof of a felony having been committed. Lawrence v. Ridge, 3 Taunt. 14.

Watchmen may imprison any person who encourages prisoners in their custody to mutiny. White v. Edmunds, Peake, 89—Kenyon.

Suspicion that a party has on a former occasion committed a misdemeanour, is no justification for giving him in charge to a constable without a justice's warrant; and there is no distinction in this respect between one kind of misdemeanour and another, as breach of the peace and fraud. Fox v. Gaunt, 3 B. & Ad. 798.

A woman died after a very short illness; rumours were generally in circulation in the neighbourhood where she had lived that her husband had poisoned her, and a great crowd was collected in front of his house; upon which the constable of the parish, without any warrant, took him into custody, and conveyed him before a magistrate, who detained him till medical men had reported the cause of death, and then discharged him:—Held, that, if the jury were of opinion that the constable had reasonable ground of suspicion to justify the apprehension, the action could not be maintained. Nicholson v. Hardwick, 5 C. & P. 495—Gurney.

A British subject arrested abroad under a warrant upon an indictment for a misdemeanour, brought in custody to England, and there committed to prison, is not entitled to be discharged—Per Lord Tenterden, C. J., and Parke, J.; dubitante, Littledale, J. Ex parte Scott, 4 M. & R. 361; 9 B. & C. 446.

Where the crew of a Dutch ship had mastered the vessel and run away with her, and brought her into Deal, it was held that they might be seized and sent back to Holland. Mure v. Kay, 4 Taunt. 43.

A wilful trespass on another person's property, without doing any real damage, is not sufficient to justify the apprehension of the parties under 1 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 3, (since repealed, but re-enacted by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30); and in an action of trespass for the apprehension, the jury cannot presume damage. Butler v. Turley, 2 C. & P. 585—Best; 1 M. & M. 54.

If a man be found attempting to commit a felony in the night, any one may apprehend and detain him until he can be carried before a magistrate. Rex v. Hunt, 1 R. & M. C. C. 93.

A charge to a constable, on taking a person into custody, that he has a forged note in his possession, without anything more, is defective, though the defect is immaterial, it not being necessary that the charge should contain the same accurate description of the offence as an indictment. Rex v. Ford, R. & R. C. C. 329.

A constable is not justified in apprehending a person as a receiver of stolen goods on the mere assertion of the principal felon. Isaacs v. Brand, Stark. 167—Ellenborough.

A., a hawker, went to the house of B. to sell goods, and a dog of B. coming out of the house, knocked out one of its eyes, for which B.'s wife caused A. to be apprehended:—Held, that it was for the jury to say whether A. had struck the dog for his own preservation, and fairly to protect himself; or whether it was a wilful and malicious trespass on his part. To justify the apprehension of an offender under the Malicious Injuries' Act, 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, the offender must be taken in fact, or on a quick pursuit. Janway v. Boulton, 4 C. & P. 350—Tindal; 2 L. & M. 15.

The owner of property arresting a person in the bona fide belief that he was acting in pursuance of 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 28, is entitled to the notice of action required by sect. 41 of that statute. Beechey v. Sides, 4 M. & R. 634; 9 B. & C. 806.

A went to a house at night, demanding to see the servant. He was told to depart, and would not. A constable was sent for, and A. went from the house to the garden. When the constable arrived, A. said that if a light appeared at the windows he would break them; upon which the constable took him into custody:—Held, that the constable was not justified in so doing. Rex v. Bright, 4 C. & P. 387—Parke.

Magistrates have no authority to detain a person known to them till some other person makes a charge against him. Before they detain a known person, they should have a charge actually made. Rex v. Birnie, 5 C. & P. 206; 1 M. & Rob. 160—Tenterden.

XCV. EXAMINATION.

On an investigation of a charge of felony before a justice of the peace, an attorney is only permitted to be present as a matter of courtesy; nor can he comment on the evidence, so as to apply the law to it, unless he be desired by such justice to give his opinion and advice on the case. Rex v. Borron, 3 B. & A. 432; S. P. Cox v. Coleridge, 2 D. & R. 86; 8 B. & C. 37. And see Rex v. Staffordshire (Justices), 1 Chit. 218; see Collier v. Hicks (Bart.), 2 B. & Adol. 663.

XCVI. COMMITMENT FOR RE-EXAMINATION.

Trespass will lie against a magistrate for committing a party charged with felony for re-examination for an unreasonable time, but without any improper motive. Davis v. Capper, 10 B. & C. 28; 5 M. & R. 53.

Semble, that a warrant of commitment for an unreasonable time is wholly void. Id.

On charges of felony, a magistrate has a power to commit for re-examination for a reasonable time. What is a reasonable time will greatly depend upon the circumstances of each case—fifteen days is an unreasonable time unless there be circumstances to account for it, and those circumstances it will be incumbent on the magistrate to show. The fact, that a letter addressed to the prisoner, (but which was intercepted, and never was in the hands of the prisoner), mentioned the prisoner as a particeps in the felony, and stated that the writer of it would write again in a fortnight, is not sufficient to warrant such a commitment. The question of reasonable time is a mixed question of law and fact. It will be for the jury to say what the facts are, but the judge will direct them upon those facts, whether the time was reasonable or not, as matter of law. If a magistrate commits a party till a certain day for re-examination, it is his bounden duty to be in attendance on that day, to take the further examination, and to discharge the party, if there be not evidence sufficient to warrant a further commitment. If a party is committed for further examination for an unreasonable time, his remedy is by action of trespass against the committing magistrate. If a magistrate commits a prisoner for fifteen days, for further examination, to make the prisoner tell who wrote a letter which was addressed to the prisoner, but which was intercepted, and never was in the hands of the prisoner, such commitment will be illegal. Davis v. Capper, 4 C. & P. 134—Vaughan.

XCVII. SEARCH WARRANTS.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 63; 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 19.

A positive oath that a felony is actually committed is not necessary to justify a magistrate in granting his warrant to search the premises and apprehend the person of a party suspected of felony. Elsee v. Smith, 1 D. & R. 97.

Where a constable, having a warrant to search for certain specific goods alleged to have been stolen, found and took away those goods, and certain others also supposed to have been stolen, but which were not mentioned in the warrant, and were not likely to be of use in substantiating the charge of stealing the goods mentioned in the warrant:—Held, that the constable was liable in an action of trespass. Crozier v. Cundey, 6 B. & C. 232; 9 D. & R. 224.

Excise officers went with a search warrant, and, at the desire of the party, gave it him to peruse, when he refused to return it:—Held, that they had a right to take it from him, and even to coerce his person to obtain the possession of it, provided they used no more violence than was necessary. Rex v. Mitton, 3 C. & P. 31—Tenterden: S. C. nom. Rex v. Milton, 1 M. & M. 107.

As to the proper mode of executing search warrants, see Entick v. Carrington, 19 St. Tr. 1067.

XCVIII. BAIL.

1. In Felony.

7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 1.]—By stat. 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, the stats. 3 Edw. 1, c. 15, 23 Hen. 6, c. 9, 3 Hen. 7, c. 3, are partially, and 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13, is wholly repealed.

A prisoner is not entitled to bail when committed on an express charge of felony, unless particular circumstances can be shown. Anon. Loft, 281.

Though a warrant of commitment for felony be informal, yet if the corpus delicti appear in the depositions returned to the court, they will not bail, but remand, the prisoner. Rex v. Marks, 3 East, 157.

Although it is not necessary to state in a warrant of commitment on a charge of felony that the act was done "feloniously," yet, unless it sufficiently appear to the court that a felony has been committed, they are bound to bail the defendant. Rex v. Judd, 2 T. R. 255.

In one case, on a charge of rape, the accused was held to bail by himself and three sureties. Rex v. Booth, 2 Ld. Ken. 170.

So, in another, bail was taken by the court on a charge of rape both from the principal and accessories, on special affidavits, and particular circumstances. Rex v. Grieffenburgh, 4 Bz. 2179.

A prisoner brought up on the charge of house-stealing was admitted to bail. Rex v. —, 2 Chit. 110.

A prisoner committed for manslaughter was allowed to give bail before a magistrate in the country by reason of his poverty, which rendered him unable to appear with bail in court. Rex v. Massey, 6 M. & S. 108.

After defendants have been admitted to bail on a criminal charge, the court will not, on account of aggravating facts, increase the bail. Rex v. Salter, 2 Chit. 109.

Now it is an invariable rule to require bail in cases of felony. Rex v. Shaw, 6 D. & R. 154.

An accomplice in felony was held to be bailable, the principal not being taken. Anon. Loft, 554.

An accomplice entitled to a pardon, 1. by approval; 2. by stats. 10 & 11 Will. 3, and 1 Anne, c. 4; 3. by proclamation: whenever he has a right to it, the court will bail him, that he may apply for it. Rex v. Rudd, Cowp. 334.

So, they will if he has only an equitable claim to a recommendation for mercy gained by being admitted evidence for the crown under the practice allowed. Id.

Upon an application to bail, the court of K. B. requires to see the depositions, and will see thence, if they see just cause, discharge bail, or detain the prisoner, without regarding the regularity or irregularity of the commitment. Rex v. Homer, Cald. 295.

The court of K. B. in admitting to bail will look into the depositions, and guide their discretion by the circumstances of the case. Rex v. Horner, 1 Leach, C. C. 270.

In a commitment for felony it is not necessary to allege that the offence was feloniously done; it is sufficient if enough appear for the court to collect whether the charge be felony or not, and they will accordingly bail or remand the prisoner. Rex v. Judd, 1 Leach, C. C. 484; 2 East, P. C. 1018.

A prisoner committed to Newgate for high treason in North America, who is only tried before the King's Bench, or under a special commission, cannot be admitted to bail, under the habeas corpus act, by justices of jail delivery, or discharged by their proclamation for want of prosecution. Rex v. Platt, 1 Leach, C. C. 151.

Where the court thought that a prisoner ought to be bailed for felony, if he be unable to defray the expense of being brought to Westminster for that purpose, they will grant a rule to show cause why he should not be bailed by a magistrate in the country. Rex v. Jones, 1 B. & A. 381.

2. In Misdemeanours and other Cases.

A defendant, brought up for judgment after conviction, stands committed, unless the procurator consents to bail. Rex v. Waddington, 1 East, 159.

The court of C. P. cannot apply the forfeited penalties of the recognizances of bail to attachments to the discharge of the debt of the defendant in the original action and costs. Rex v. Davey, 3 Taunt. 112.

The 5 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 2, requiring the party removing a conviction by a magistrate into K. B. to enter into a recognizance, with two sureties in 50*l.* conditioned to prosecute the writ with effect, &c., is not complied with by the party and his two sureties entering into a recognizance in 25*l.* each, but it must be in the entire sum of 50*l.* Rex v. Dunn, 8 T. R. 217.

The sheriff has no authority to take a bond for the appearance of persons arrested by him, under process issuing upon an indictment at the quarter sessions for a misdemeanour; he can only take a recognizance for their appearance. Bengough v. Rossiter, 4 T. R. 505; 2 H. Black. 418, 426, 435.

An attachment upon articles of the peace is bailable before justices of the county. Rex v. Bomaster, 1 W. Black. 233.

A motion to bail a defendant for an assault must be made before a judge at chambers. Rex v. —, 2 Chit. 110.

Persons committed for forcibly resisting custom-house officers in the execution of their duty cannot demand to be bailed as of right. Rex v. Dunn, 5 Burr. 2640.

Special bail shall be given to pay the forfeiture, or yield the body, for the defendant having unsealed wrought silk in his custody. Rex v. Reberd, 3 Burr. 1569.

Where on error brought it was held that an entry by an inferior jurisdiction did not amount to a judgment, but was merely an order, the court awarded a procedendo to the court below, commanding them to proceed to give the proper judgment, but in the mean time allowed the prisoner to be bailed. Rex v. Kenworthy, 3 D. & R. 173; 1 B. & C. 711.

A member of parliament discharged without bail from a committal for writing a seditious libel, by virtue of a general warrant from the secretary of state. Rex v. Wilkes, 2 Wils. 151.

The bail of one acquitted of perjury shall be discharged, although the acquittal be not entered of record. Rex v. Spencer, 1 Wils. 315.

When the House of Lords had voted the defendant guilty of a breach of privilege, and committed him to prison, the court of K. B. refused to discharge him out of custody. Rex v. Flower, 3 T. R. 314.

A commitment by a justice of the peace for a time certain, as for fourteen days, under the Vagrant Act, is a commitment in execution, and the party is not entitled to be bailed. Rex v. Brooke, 2 T. R. 190.

A certiorari, removing an indictment from the Old Bailey into K. B., will discharge a recognizance, if a prisoner have been admitted to bail on a charge of perjury. Rex v. Richardson, 2 Leach, C. C. 560.

But it is otherwise if the prisoner be in actual custody. Id.

XCIX. COMMITMENT OF WITNESSES.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 64. s. 2.

A justice of the peace may commit a feme covert, who is a material witness upon a charge of felony brought before him, and who refuses to appear at the sessions to give evidence, or to find sureties for her appearance. Bennett v. Watson, 3 M. & S. 1.

In some counties where a child is a witness in a prosecution, and have no one who will enter into a recognizance for his or her appearance at the trial, the practice is for the constable or police officer to enter into a recognizance for the child's appearance, and to take the child to the assizes, he being allowed the expenses for the child's travelling, &c.; and in such a case, where a child was taken away, and the constable could not bring her to the assizes, the judge respited the constable's recognizance that he might bring the child to the next assizes. M. S.

C. COMMITMENT BY BOROUGH MAGISTRATES.

60 Geo. 3, c. 14.

Where the magistrates of a borough had exclusive jurisdiction within the borough, but concurrent jurisdiction with the county magistrates over the liberties of the borough:—Held, that, for offences committed within the liberties, they might commit to the county jail, and try the prisoners at the borough sessions. Rex v. Musson, 9 D. & R. 172.

CI. CORONER'S INQUESTS.

A coroner, who is a judicial as well as a ministerial officer, cannot appoint a deputy to hold an inquest. Rex v. Farrant, 1 Ch. 745; S. C. nom. Rex v. Farrand, 3 B. & A. 260.

And where such inquest has been irregularly assembled and afterwards adjourned, the court will not compel the coroner, by mandamus, to proceed with the inquisition. Id.

The jurisdiction of a coroner is only super visum corporis, and the view of the body must be taken by the jury and the coroner at the same time. Id.

Where a coroner's clerk, in the absence of his principal, summoned a jury, and charged them super visum corporis, and examined witnesses, and, after sitting several days, the coroner himself proceeded in person with the inquest, and afterwards had a view of the body without the presence of the jury, and then proceeded with the inquest without re-swearing the jury or the witnesses previously examined; it was held, that the proceedings were altogether illegal, and that an inquisition found under such circumstances might be quashed. Id.

Where an inquisition was signed "A., deputy steward and coroner," the court refused to quash it in toto as necessarily void for want of authority, as it might mean coroner and deputy steward. Ex parte Carruthers, 2 M. & R. 397.

Whether a custom for a coroner to appoint a deputy is bad, quære? Id.

Trespass will not lie against a coroner for turning a man out of the room where he is about to hold an inquisition. Garnett v. Ferrard, 6 B. & C. 611; 9 D. & R. 657.

A coroner's inquisition must be on parchment, and not on paper. Rex v. Beavers, 1 East, P. C. 383.

It must be signed by all the jury as well as the coroner. Rex v. Norfolk (Justices), 1 East, P. C. 383.

It is usual for them to seal it also. Id.

If the names of the jurors be not set out in the caption of a coroner's inquisition, and the inquisition be not signed by the jurors with their names at length, the inquisition is bad. Rex v. Bowen, 3 C. & P. 602—Park.

If some of the jurors sign with their marks, such marks ought to be verified by an attestation. Id.

It is no objection to a coroner's inquisition that one of the jurors did not sign his Christian name at length, if the names of the jurors be set out at length in the body of the inquisition. Rex v. Bennett, 6 C. & P. 179—Gurney.

After a verdict, the court will presume that a coroner's inquisition was found by twelve jurors, if twelve were necessary. Taylor v. Lambe, 6 D. & R. 188; 4 B. & C. 138.

Quære, whether it be necessary at all that the inquisition should be found by twelve jurors? Id.

A coroner's inquest omitted to state the place where the death happened, or where the body was found: the names of the jurors were not inserted in the body of the inquisition, and it was subscribed by them with the initials only of their Christian names:—Held, that these were defects in substance, and could not be amended, and the inquisition was quashed. Rex v. Evett, 6 B. & C. 247; 9 D. & R. 237.

If the inquisition found that the death was occasioned by a coach and horses, the property of A. and B. and Co.:—Held, that this finding could not be altered, upon affidavit that the property was in A. and B. alone. Id.

It is no objection to a coroner's inquisition for murder that the offence is stated to have been committed on the 26th day June, omitting the word "of." Rex v. Huggins, 3 C. & P. 414—Vaughan.

A coroner is guilty of an indictable offence in taking a sum of money for not holding an inquest; whether he have any pretence for holding the inquest or not, he is equally criminal in having extorted money to refrain from doing his office. Rex v. Harrison, 1 East, P. C. 482.

A coroner on an inquisition super visum corporis ought to hear evidence on oath, not only on the part of the crown, but on the part of the person accused. Rex v. Scorey, 1 Leach, C. C. 43.

A coroner's inquisition may be quashed in part for uncertainty, and stand good for the residue. Ex parte Carruthers, 2 M. & R. 397.

The court of King's Bench will quash a coroner's inquest in which the facts of the case are stated, and the verdict found is not warranted by such facts. In re Cully, 2 Nev. & M. 61.

It is the duty of a coroner, in a case of death occurring in a pugilistic encounter, to examine a surgeon as to the cause of the death. Rex v. Quinch, 4 C. & P. 571—Alderson.

On all inquests held on the bodies of dead bastard children, it is the bounden duty of the coroner to tell the jury, in all cases where there is not the most clear and decisive proof that the child was born alive, that they ought never to think of returning a verdict of wilful murder against the mother. Rex v. Bayley, Car. Cr. L. 243—Vaughan.

CIL. TRIAL ON A VERDICT IN A CIVIL CASE.

If a verdict be found for the defendant in an action of slander; on a justification of words of felony, the plaintiff may be arraigned without a grand jury. Cook v. Field, 3 Esp. 133—Keay.

In an action for money had and received, if it appear that the defendant received the money from the plaintiff to carry to a bank, and that instead of so doing the defendant kept it, the jury at the assizes will leave it to the jury to say, whether the defendant received it with an intent to steal it, and then feloniously converted it; and if the jury find this in the affirmative, the jury will direct a verdict to be entered for the defendant, and that the defendant shall be tried for the felony on this finding. Prosser v. Ross, 3 C. & P. 421—Park.

CIII. PRESENTMENTS BY CONSTABLE.

The presentment of constable for any offence, whether at the assizes or quarter sessions, must be made upon oath before the grand jury. Rex v. Somersetshire (Justices), 1 M. & R. 272. See 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 38.

Where a high constable presents persons for a nuisance in a highway, he must go before the grand jury and give his evidence on oath. Rex v. Bridgewater Canal Company, 7 B. & C. 24.

CIV. INDICTMENT.

1. For what it lies, and of quashing.

An indictment will not lie for a mere civil injury. Rex v. Storr, 3 Burr. 1698.

As for pulling off the thatch of a man's dwelling-house. Rex v. Atkins, 3 Burr. 1706.

Or for selling, as two children of each, a large quantity. Rex v. Osborn, 3 Burr. 1697.

That which is declared by statute to be a misdemeanour cannot be a felony. Rex v. Walford, 5 Esp. 62—Hotham.

Indictment lies not upon an act of Parliament which creates a new offence, and prescribes a particular remedy. Rex v. Wright, 1 Burr. 543.

The court refused to quash upon motion an indictment for selling by false weights. Rex v. Crookes, 3 Burr. 1841.

So they refused to quash an indictment against several for entering a lead mine and carrying away lead, on the ground that it was a mere trespass. Rex v. Johnston, 1 Wils. 325.

An indictment cannot be quashed after the prisoner has pleaded. Rex v. Frith, 1 Leach, C. 11.

But the court may, in its discretion, quash an indictment at any time before the jury are charged with the trial of the prisoner. Id.

Where a defendant was indicted with an alias dictus, and pleaded in abatement that he was not known by such name:—Held, that the plea must be demurred to, and could not be quashed on motion. Rex v. Clark, 1 D. & R. 43.

The court will never quash an indictment for a serious offence but upon the clearest and plainest grounds. Rex v. Wetherill, Cald. 432.

Erroneous style of the sessions is a sufficient cause for quashing an indictment. Rex v. Roysted, 1 Ld. Ken. 255.

It seems that the court will, on motion, quash an indictment for perjury, for the want of an addition to the defendant's name, if the exception be properly taken; but they refused to quash such an indictment where the defendant produced no affidavit stating his proper addition. Rex v. Thomas, 3 D. & R. 621. But see the stat. 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 19.

An indictment for converting a house into an hospital for taking in and delivering lewd, idle, and disorderly unmarried women, quashed. Rex v. Macdonald, 3 Burr. 1645.

Every indictment must contain a complete description of such facts and circumstances as constitute the crime, without inconsistency or repugnancy. But, except in certain cases, where technical expressions, having grown by long use into law, are required to be used, the same sense is to be put on the words of an indictment which they bear in ordinary acceptation: and if the sense of any word be in ordinary acceptation ambiguous, it shall be construed according as the context and subject-matter require it to be, in order to make the whole consistent and sensible. The word "until" may therefore be construed either exclusive or inclusive of the day to which it is applied, according to the context and subject-matter. Rex v. Stevens, 5 East, 244; 1 Smith, 437.

Indictment quashed for unlawfully tanning contrary to 1 Jac. 1, c. 22, s. 5, because several defendants were joined in it. Rex v. Tucker, 4 Burr. 2046.

An indictment for a conspiracy "to defraud J. W. of divers goods, and in pursuance of the conspiracy defrauding him of divers goods, to wit, of the value of 100l.," cannot be quashed for not specifying the particular goods of which the prosecutor had been defrauded; and it seems that the court in such a case will not call upon the prosecutor to deliver to the defendant a particular of the goods referred to in the indictment. Rex v. —, 1 Chit. 698.

The statutes of jeofails do not extend to criminal prosecutions. Atcheson v. Everitt, Cowp. 392.

Terms may be imposed on a prosecutor before he is allowed to quash his own indictment. Rex v. Webb, 3 Burr. 1468; 1 W. Black. 460.

An indictment against the defendant, standing first in order in the paper, was moved to be quashed on the usual terms; but the court only allowed it to be quashed on disclosing the name of the prosecutor, and that the substituted indictment should stand in the same situation as the first would have done. Rex v. Glenn, 3 B. & A. 373. And see Rex v. —, 1 Chit. 698.

The court will not quash a defective indictment on the motion of the prosecutor, after plea pleaded, before another good indictment be found. Rex v. Wynn, 2 East, 226.

2. Change of Venue.

The court will remove an indictment for a misdemeanour from one county to another, if there is reasonable cause to apprehend or suspect that justice will not be impartially administered in the former county. Rex v. Hunt, 3 B. & A. 444; 2 Chit. 130.

Therefore, on an indictment for a conspiracy, the court permitted a suggestion to be entered, for the purpose of awarding a venire into an adjoining county, where it appeared on affidavit that there was a reasonable ground for believing that a fair trial could not be had in the county where the venue was laid, and held that such suggestion need not state the facts from whence it was drawn. Rex v. Hunt, 3 B. & A. 444; 2 Chit. 130.

It is no reason for changing the venue in an indictment for a conspiracy in destroying foxes and other noxious animals, that the gentry of the county in which the indictment was found are addicted to fox-hunting. Rex v. King, 2 Chit. 217.

Evidence of partiality must be extremely strong to induce the court to change the venue in a criminal information. Rex v. Harris, 3 Burr. 1330; 1 W. Black. 378.

3. Venue.

In murder and manslaughter, 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, ss. 7 & 8; near boundaries, &c., 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 12; on journeys or in navigation, 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 13.

The 26 Hen. 8, c. 6, s. 6, which made felonies committed in Wales triable in the adjoining English county, extended to felonies created since the 26 Hen. 8. Rex v. Wyndham, R. & R. C. C. 197; 3 Camp. 78—Le Blanc.

A felony committed in Anglesea might have been tried in the county of Salop, as the next adjoining English county to Wales. Rex v. Parry, 1 Leach, C. C. 108; 2 East, P. C. 773.

An information at common law for a conspiracy between the captain and purser of a man of war, for planning and fabricating false vouchers to cheat the crown, (which planning and fabrication were done upon the high seas,) is well triable in Middlesex, upon proof there of the receipt by the commissioners of the navy of the false vouchers transmitted thither by one of the conspirators through the medium of the post, and the application there of a third person, a holder of one of such vouchers (a bill of exchange) for payment, which he there received. Rex v. Brisac, and Same v. Scott, 4 East, 164.

Indictments on 5 Eliz. c. 4, might be found at a city or at a borough sessions. Rex v. Strong, 1 Burr. 251.

The venue of an information on 24 Geo. 2, c. 19, for being both a tanner and a shoemaker, need not be laid in the county where the offence was committed. Att.-General v. Ferris, 3 Anst. 871.

An indictment in the next adjoining county, for an offence within an inferior county, need not aver that the former is the next adjoining county. Rex v. Goff, R. & R. C. C. 179.

But when the record is regularly drawn up, it may be stated in the memorandum or caption. Id.

But the indictment must state the offence to have been committed in the inferior county. Id.

Two prisoners indicted for horse-stealing in county A. were found in joint possession of two horses in that county, which they had jointly taken at different times and places in county B.:—Held, that evidence could be given of one only of the takings in county B., each taking being a separate felony, and that the prosecutor's counsel must elect on which to proceed. Rex v. Smith, 1 R. & M. 295—Littledale.

In an indictment for felony, it is not necessary to prove affirmatively for the prosecution that such a parish as that laid in the indictment exists in the county. Rex v. Dowling, 1 R. & M. 433—Littledale.

On an indictment for breaking and entering a house in the day-time, G. N. and others being therein, and stealing to the value of 40s. The house was laid to be in the parish of "St. Botolph, Aldgate." It appeared that the parish where the house was situate was "St. Botolph without Aldgate:" the prisoner was acquitted of the capital charge, and convicted of larceny: the twelve judges held that he was rightly convicted, as there was no proof that there was no such parish in the county as that named. Rex v. Bullock, Car. C. L. 282.

An indictment for stealing "a brass furnace," in the county of Hereford, is not supported by evidence of stealing a brass furnace in the county of Radnor, and breaking it there, and bringing the fragments into Herefordshire, as the prisoner had merely certain pieces of brass in that county. Rex v. Holloway, 1 C. & P. 127—Hullock.

A felony was committed in the county of the city of London, (on London Bridge,) and within 500 yards of that part of the county of Surrey which consists of the borough of Southwark:—Held, that this was not a case triable at the sessions of the borough of Southwark. Rex v. Welsh, Carr. Supp. 21; R. & M. C. C. 175.

4. Caption.

The caption of an indictment must show that the court where it was found had jurisdiction. Rex v. Fearnley, 1 Leach, C. C. 425.

In the Nisi Prius record of an indictment, removed by certiorari, the names of the grand jurors who found the indictment need not be inserted in the caption. Rex v. Davis, 1 C. & P. 470—Park.

5. Description of the Party accused.

7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 19.

If the name of a prisoner is unknown, and he refuses to disclose it, an indictment against him as a person whose name is to the jurors unknown, but who is personally brought before the jurors by the keeper of the prison, will be sufficient. Rex v. —, R. & R. C. C. 489.

But an indictment against him as a person to the jurors unknown, without something to ascertain whom the grand jury meant to designate is insufficient. Id.

An indictment against A. by the addition of "servant" is ill; but if A. plead in abatement he must give a better addition. Rex v. Chubb, 6 M. & S. 88.

An indictment was quashed before plea, because the addition was placed after the alias & tunc, and not after the first name. Rex v. Smith, 1 Leach, C. C. 420.

But where the prisoner had pleaded, the court held that the error had been cured. Rex v. Hannam, 1 Leach, C. C. 420, n.

6. Time and Place.

7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 20.

The time at which the offence charged took place must be positively averred, or the indictment is bad, and judgment may be arrested. Anon. Lofft, 228.

Time and place must be added to every material fact in an indictment. Rex v. Holland, 5 T. R. 607.

It is no objection on the plea of not guilty that there is no such place in the county as that in which the offence is stated to have been committed, and the fact that there is no such place in the county can only be taken advantage of by plea in abatement. Rex v. Woodward, 5 C. C. R. 323.

Stating the defendant to be late of W., and laying the offence to be at the parish aforesaid, was held not sufficiently certain. Rex v. Mathews, 5 T. R. 162.

But quare, whether it is necessary to lay the act in a particular place within the county. Goldsmith's case, 3 Camp. 77—Lawrence.

In an indictment, alleging a dwelling-house to be "situate at the parish aforesaid," the parish last mentioned must be intended. Rex v. Richards, M. & Rob. 177—Park.

A crime alleged to have been committed in the time of the late king, and charged to be against the peace of the now king, is fatal, and a conviction on such an indictment was reversed. Rex v. Lookup, 3 Burr. 1901.

An indictment for a rape, stated to have been committed the 9th of March, 1 Geo. 4, concluded "against the peace of our said late lord king:"—Held, that the word "late" might be rejected as surplusage. Rex v. Scott, R. & R. C. C. 415; 1 Russ. C. & M. 562.

Where an indictment for perjury stated the oath to have been taken, and the perjury to have been committed, tempore Geo. 2, and concluded against the peace of Geo. 3, it was held a fatal objection, and judgment reversed. Rex v. Lookup, 3 Burr. 1901; R. & R. C. C. 176, n. See the case of Rex v. Taylor, post, 841, and the stat. 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 20.

An indictment tried at the summer assizes, 1 Geo. 4, stated that the prisoner, 20th of July, in the fourth year of the reign of King George the Fourth, stole a mare, against the peace of our lord the now king:—Held, that the words "fourth year of the" might be rejected as surplusage, and that the prisoner was properly convicted on this indictment. Rex v. Gill, R. & R. C. C. 31.

Where time and place are material, the time and place stated shall be taken to be the true time and place. Rex v. Napper, 1 R. & M. C. C. 4; 2 Russ. C. & M. 37.

Therefore, in an indictment for stealing in a dwelling-house, if it is not expressly stated where the dwelling-house is situated, it shall be taken to be situated at the place named in the indictment by way of venue. Id.

An indictment which lays an offence to have been committed "at the Guildhall of the city of London" is bad, for the venue should be laid in some parish or ward. Rex v. Harris, 2 Leach, C. C. 800.

Where to constitute a statutable offence time material, the time stated in the indictment must in arrest of judgment be taken to be the true time, without a substantial averment; thus the stat. 6 Geo. 4, c. 108, s. 52, having made it a misdemeanour to exhibit lights to persons at sea between the months of September and April; allegation, that the party did so on the 9th of March, is sufficient, without a specific averment that he did between September and April. Rex v. Brown, 1 M. & M. 163—Littledale and Gaselee.

Where a statute makes an offence committed after a given day triable in the county where the party is apprehended, and authorizes laying it as committed in that county, and does not vary the nature and character of the offence, it is no objection that the day laid in the indictment is before the day the statute mentions, if the offence were in fact committed after that day. Rex v. Beharne, M. C. C. R. 298.

An indictment for larceny had the words

"London to wit" in the margin, and described the prisoner as "late of London," and charged the offence to have been committed in the "parish of St. Mary-le-Bow" without averring that parish to be in London:—Held, bad, and that this was not aided by the stat. 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 20. Rex v. Minter Hart, 6 C. & P. 106—Littledale and Bosanquet.

7. Value.

An indictment for stealing a sheep, or any other cattle, must lay it to be of some value, for unless its value exceeds twelve pence, the stealing is not capital. Rex v. Peel, R. & R. C. C. 407. But quære, as that case turned on it not being necessary for him to pray his clergy, as the thing stolen was not of twelve-pence value?

Where value is essential to constitute an offence, and the value is ascribed to many articles collectively, the offence must be made out as to every one of those articles, the grand jury having ascribed that value only to all those articles collectively. Rex v. Forsyth, R. & R. C. C. 274.

8. As to the Allegations.

If an indictment be in itself good, tautologous words shall be rejected as surplusage. Rex v. Morris, 1 Leach, C. C. 109.

A bad indictment may be made good by rejecting as insensible and useless such words as obstruct the sense of it. Rex v. Redmond, 1 Leach, C. C. 477.

A relative referring with equal uncertainty to two antecedents will vitiate an indictment. Rex v. Graham, 1 Leach, C. C. 87.

A statement in an indictment may be either according to the fact or the legal operation. Rex v. Healey, 1 R. & M. C. C. 1.

The words, "in manner and form following, that is to say," do not bind the party to recite an instrument, &c., verbatim. Rex v. May, 1 Leach, C. C. 193.

The words "as follow, that is to say," when introductory to a recital in an indictment, do not bind the party to an exact and verbatim recital. Rex v. Hart, 1 Leach, C. C. 145; 2 East, P. C. 978; 1 Doug. 193; Cowp. 229: S. P. Rex v. May, 1 Leach, C. C. 192.

The word "chattels," improperly inserted in a count against an accessory, may be rejected as surplusage. Rex v. Sadi, 1 Leach, C. C. 468.

Where an evil intent, accompanying an act, is necessary to constitute such act a crime, the intent must be alleged in the indictment, and proved; though it be sufficient to allege it in the prefatory part of the indictment. But where the act is in itself unlawful, the law infers an evil intent, and the allegation of such intent is merely matter of form, and need not be proved by extrinsic evidence on the part of the prosecutor. Rex v. Phillips, 6 East, 464; 2 Smith, 550.

An indictment, which may apply to either of two different definite offences, is bad. Thus, where clergy was taken away from several descriptions of compound larcenies, it was held that the indictment must specify the description charged, in order to assist the party of his clergy; and that a charge of robbing a dwelling-house in the day time to the value of five shillings, not showing whether any person was in the house or not, would not warrant a capital conviction, although as the law then stood it was, if no one was in the house, a capital offence under one statute, and a capital offence under another statute, if some one was in the house. Rex v. Marshall, R. & M. C. C. R. 158.

9. Name of the Party injured.

A prosecutor may be described by a name he has assumed, although it be not his right name, if he has been known by that name for several previous years. Rex v. Norton, R. & R. C. C. 510; 2 Russ. C. & M. 169.

A peer of Ireland cannot sue or prosecute by his name of dignity, but must be described by his proper name, with the addition of his degree and title. Rex v. Graham, 2 Leach, C. C. 547.

An indictment for manslaughter described the deceased, who was a peer of Ireland, as "H. S., Baron M. of C. in the county of R., in that part of the United Kingdom called Ireland." It was proved that H. was his Christian name, S. his family surname, and Baron M. &c., his title:—Held, no variance, and that the court was not bound to construe H. S. to be one Christian name. Rex v. Brinklett, 5 C. & P. 416.

On an indictment for committing an unnatural offence on one John Whyneard, the conviction was held right, although it was proved the name was Winyard, and pronounced Winnyard. Rex v. Foster, R. & R. C. C. 412.

If the name of a party killed be not known, he may be stated to be "a certain person to the jurors unknown." Rex v. Clark, 1 Russ. C. & M. 466; R. & R. C. C. 358.

A bastard must not be described by his mother's name till he has acquired that name by reputation. Rex v. Clark, 1 Russ. C. & M. 466; R. & M. C. C. 358.

The deceased was an illegitimate child twelve days old, and it was not even suggested that it had been baptized, but the prisoner, its mother, had said that she should like to have the child named "Mary Anne," and on two occasions afterwards called the child "Mary Anne," and on another occasion "Little Mary." The prisoner's master, who was the father of the child, had stated to one of the witnesses for the prosecution that he was a Baptist. The indictment alleged the child to be "a certain female child, whose name to the jurors was unknown." The prisoner was convicted, and the fifteen judges held the conviction right. Rex v. Mary Smith, 6 C. & P. 151.

In an indictment the property was laid in J. H. It appeared that the prosecutor's name was J. W. H.:—Held not material, if he was generally known by the name of J. H. Rex v. Berriman, 5 C. & P. 601—Parke.

If in a first count the property be laid in persons specifically named, and in the second as in persons unknown; and at the trial the witnesses do not know the Christian names of some of the persons mentioned in the first count, the prosecutor cannot resort to the second count because the owners were known, but the evidence was defective. Rex v. Robinson, Holt, 595—Richard.

If goods be laid in an indictment as the property of "A. W. G., esq.," the addition is not material, and if he is not an esquire, it is no ground for an acquittal. Rex v. Ogilvie, 2 C. & P. 230—Burrough.

In an indictment for bigamy, the second wife was described as "E. C., widow." She was in fact not a widow, nor had she ever been represented or reputed to be so:—Held, a fatal variance. Rex v. Deeley, 4 C. & P. 579; M. C. C. 303.

If an act of parliament enacts that certain persons shall be called "directors of the poor, &c." Quære, whether in an indictment, property may be laid in them by the name of the "directors of the poor, &c.," they not being a corporation aggregate? Rex v. Beacall, 1 C. & P. 313—Park.

10. Contra Pacem and Contra Formam Statuti 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 20.

In an indictment for an offence at common law, a conclusion of contra formam statuti may be rejected as surplusage. Rex v. Mathews, 51 R. 162; Nolan, 202.

It is an offence at common law to obstruct the execution of powers granted by statute, and an indictment for such offence need not, and ought not, to conclude contra formam statuti. Rex v. Smith, 2 Dougl. 441.

Where an indictment set out the title of an act of parliament agreeably to Ruffhead, which differed from a copy of the act printed by the king's printer, the court refused to direct a nonsuit without proof of an examination of the parliament roll. Rex v. Barnitt, 3 Camp. 344—Ellenborough.

Semble, that every indictment for a misdemeanour must conclude contra pacem, &c. Rex v. Taylor, 5 D. & R. 422.

If one statute subjects an offence to a pecuniary penalty, and a subsequent statute makes it a felony, an indictment for the felony concluding against the form of the statute (in the singular number only) is right. Rex v. Pim, R. & M. C. C. 425.

An indictment for a common-law felony must contain a "contra pacem." Rex v. Cook, R. & M. C. C. 176; 2 Russ. C. & M. 172.

So must an indictment for stealing articles, the stealing of which is made felony by statute; and in this case the laying the offence to have been against the form of the statute will not supply the defect. Id.

An indictment preferred in 2 Will. 4, for a felony committed on the 12th of March, 1834, charged the offence to have been "against the peace of our lord the king." This was objected to as soon as the case for the prosecution had closed. The prisoner was convicted, and the fi-teen judges held the conviction right. Rex v. Chalmers, 5 C. & P. 331 : M. C. C. 352.

The judges held that a bad contra pacem is as bad as no contra pacem. Id.

11. Of joining Offences and Electing.

[See Young v. Rex, (in error), 3 T. R. 106, and Rex v. Kingston, 8 East, 41.]

A person may be charged with several offences of the same nature in the same indictment, and the judge will not, in cases of misdemeanour, require the prosecutor to confine himself to one offence. Rex v. Jones, 2 Camp. 131—Ellenb.

A count for embezzling bank-notes upon the statute may be joined with a count for larceny. Rex v. Johnson, 3 M. & S. 539.

A count charging the prisoner with having counterfeit money in his possession at the time he uttered other counterfeit money, must contain a distinct averment of the fact of uttering. Rex v. Kelly, 3 Esp. 28—Buller.

It is no objection in arrest of judgment that the indictment contains several charges of the same nature in the different counts. Young v. Rex, (in error,) 3 T. R. 98. And see Rex v. Thole, 2 Marsh. 466.

If one endeavour to commit two separate offences, a count in an indictment charging that endeavour may contain those two offences. Rex v. Fuller, 1 B. & P. 181.

If an indictment contain two counts, one charging the offence as a larceny, the other as a receiving, the judge will put the prosecutor to elect which he will go upon. Rex v. Flower, 3 C. & P. 413—Vaughan.

If two bills of indictment be preferred for the same offence, the one charging it capitally, the other as a misdemeanour, and both be found, the judge will put the party upon his election which to go upon, and direct an acquittal on the other. Rex v. Smith, 3 C. & P. 412—Vaughan.

It is no objection in point of law that an indictment charges the prisoners in one count as principals in stealing, and in another count as receivers, or that the prisoners are tried without leaving the prosecutor put to his election on which charge to proceed, though the prisoners asked it. The judges were equally divided as to whether the prosecutor should have been put to his election, but all agreed that directions should be given to the clerks of indictments not to put both charges in the same indictment. Rex v. Holloway, R. & M. C. C. R. 234.

The officers ought not to join in the same indictments, counts charging prisoners as principals in stealing and also as receivers. Rex v. Ladden, M. C. C. R. 277.

Where several felonies are so connected together as to form part of one entire transaction, evidence of them all may be given in order to prove the party indicted guilty of one. Rex v. Ellis, 6 C. & C. 145; 9 D. & R. 174.

If several felonies be charged in the same indictment, it is not objectionable, either upon de-murrer or in arrest of judgment, for on the face of the indictment every count imports to be for a different offence. Anon. 2 Leach, C. C. 1105, n.

But if it appear before plea, or the jury are charged that they are separate offences, it is usual to quash the indictment, lest it should confound the prisoner in his defence, or prejudice him in his right of challenge. Anon. 2 Leach, C. C. 1105, n.

And if not discovered before plea, the court in its discretion may put the prosecutor to elect on which he will proceed. Id.

Two indictments for the same offence, one for the felony under a statute, and the other for the misdemeanour at common law, ought not to be preferred or found at the same time. Rex v. Doran, 1 Leach, C. C. 538.

A prosecutor will not be permitted to give in evidence several distinct offences, involving different transactions, under one indictment. Rex v. Young, R. & R. C. C. 280, n.—Le Blanc.

But several offences connected with each other may. Id. And see Rex v. Thomas, 2 East, P. C. 934.

On an indictment against two, charging them with a joint offence, either may be found guilty; but they cannot be found guilty separately of separate parts of the charge. Rex v. Hempstead, R. & R. C. C. 344; 2 Russ. C. & M. 54, 311.

And if they are found guilty separately, upon a pardon or nolle prosequi as to the one who stands second upon the verdict, the judgment may be given against the other. Id.

If two men are indicted, and one of them appear to be innocent and the other guilty, but the prosecutor cannot identify them respectively, both must be acquitted. Rex v. Richardson, 1 Leach, C. C. 387.

If an indictment contains a count for robbery, and a count for an assault with intent to rob, the judge will put the prosecutor to his election which he will go upon. Rex v. Gough, 2 M. & M. 71—Park.

Semble, that such counts ought not to be joined. Id.

On an indictment for felony, a matter, which was the subject of another indictment for felony, was material to be given in evidence, as it formed a part of the facts of the case. The judge received the evidence, and did not direct the second prosecution to be abandoned. Rex v. Salisbury, 5 C. & P. 155—Patteson.

On an indictment for forgery, if a second uttering be made the subject of a distinct indictment, it cannot be given in evidence to show a guilty knowledge in a former uttering. Rex v. Smith, 2 C. & P. 633—Vaughan.

A prisoner was indicted for night-poaching, and it was proposed to show that on the occasion in question one of the prosecutor's gamekeepers had lost his coat, and that it was found in the prisoner's house. There was another indictment against the prisoner for stealing the coat:—Held, that this evidence was inadmissible, unless the prosecutor consented to acquittal, on the indictment for the larceny. Rex v. Westwood, 4 C. & P. 547—Patteson.

A. was indicted for shooting at B., a game-keeper: there being another indictment against A. for night-poaching:—Held, that although both indictments related to the same transaction, yet these were offences quite distinct from each other, and that the prosecutor ought not to be put to his election to go upon one indictment and abandon the other. Rex v. Handley, 5 C. & P. 565—Parke.

[See Rex v. Ellis, ante, 839.]

CV. ARRAIGNMENT AND PLEA.

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 1.

Arraignments may be without holding up the hand. Rex v. Ratcliffe, 1 W. Black. 3.

Where a prisoner, on being arraigned, stated that he was deaf, on which the indictment was read over to him, and he apparently did not hear it: the judge directed a jury to be impannelled to try whether he stood mute by the act of God, or out of malice. Rex v. Halton, 1 R. & M. 78—Gifford.

If a person indicted for felony stand mute upon his arraignment, the court may direct the sheriff to return a jury instant, to try whether he stand mute obstinately, or by the visitation of God; and if they find that he stand obstinately mute, sentence may be passed without further inquiry. Rex v. Mercier, 1 Leach, C. C. 183.

If a prisoner will not plead but stands mute, and a jury are impannelled to try whether it be by the visitation of God, his counsel has a right to address the jury and call witnesses for him, as it is an issue with the affirmative on the prisoner. Rex v. Roberts, Car. C. L. 57—Park and Abbott.

A prisoner, mute by the visitation of God, may be arraigned, tried, sentenced, and transported. Rex v. Steel, 1 Leach, C. C. 451.

A prisoner, mutus et surdus à nativitate, may be arraigned for a capital offence, if intelligence can be conveyed to him by signs and symbols. Rex v. Jones, 1 Leach, C. C. 102.

CVI. TRAVERSE.

60 Geo. 3 & 1 Geo. 4, c. 4, ss. 3 & 5.

If a party has been held to bail, or committed for more than 20 days, on a charge of felony, and the grand jury ignore the bill for the felony, and find a bill for a misdemeanour in attempting it, the party is entitled to traverse. Rex v. James, 3 C. & P. 222—Vaughan.

On an indictment being found for an assault, if the defendant enter into a recognizance, to appear, enter, and try his traverse, he cannot be tried without entering his traverse under the jail delivery, although in custody by surrender in discharge of his bail, except he withdraw his plea, or give the prosecutor notice. Rex v. Fry, 1 Leach, C. C. 111; 1 Russ. C. & M. 611.

The notice of a defendant's intention to try traverse is not a condition precedent to its being tried, and the prosecutor, if he appears, aids all defects in it, and he is not allowed to appear for the purpose of objecting to the notice. Rex v. Hobby, 1 C. & P. 660; 1 R. & M. 241—Lit.

CVII. PLEA IN ABATEMENT.

7 Geo 4, c. 64, s. 19.

[See Description of the Party Accused, ante, 836.]

One indicted for a misdemeanour may plead in abatement a misnomer of his surname, Shakespeare for Shakespeare, which shall not be taken for idem sonans; and the plea concluding with praying judgment of the said indictment, that he may not be compelled to answer the same, is good. Rex v. Shakespeare, 10 East, 83.

Where the defendant was indicted with an alias dictus, and pleaded in abatement that he was not known by such name:—Held, that the plea must be demurred to, or issue taken thereon; and it could not be quashed on motion. Rex v. Clark alias Jones, 1 D. & R. 43; 8 P. R. v. Cooke, 4 D. & R. 114; 2 B. & C. 618.

Where a defendant pleads in abatement to an indictment for a misdemeanour, that he is a peer, such plea is bad on demurrer, for not stating that he is a peer of the United Kingdom, and showing in what manner he derived his title. Rex v. Cooke, 4 D. & R. 592; 2 B. & C. 671.

A dilatory plea to an indictment was set aside for want of an affidavit to verify it. Rex v. Grainger, 3 Burr. 1617.

A defendant in an indictment for a misdemeanour cannot plead over to the charge, after a plea in abatement for a misnomer, on which issue is taken and found against him. Rex v. Gibson, 8 East, 107, 111.

In what manner a misnomer may be pleaded and tried, and a convict deprived of his day by means of a counterplea. Rex v. Dorr, 1 Leach, C. C. 476.

CVII. PLEA OF AUTREFOIS ACQUIT.

A plea of autrefois acquit cannot be pleaded unless the facts charged in the second indictment would, if true, have sustained the first. Rex v. Vandercomb, 2 East, P. C. 519; 2 Leach, C. C. 708.

The plea of autrefois acquit must state the record of acquittal. Id.

A plea of autrefois acquit of a burglary, when the felony is laid as actually committed, cannot be pleaded to an indictment for the same burglary laid with intent to commit the felony, if they are two distinct and different offences. Id.

If, in a plea of autrefois acquit, the prisoner were to insist on two distinct records of acquittal, his plea would be bad for duplicity. But such that if he insisted on the wrong, the court would in a capital case, take care that he did not suffer by it. Rex v. Sheen, 2 C. & P. 635—Barrow and Littledale.

If the prisoner could have been legally convicted on the first indictment upon any evidence that might have been adduced, his acquittal on that indictment may be successfully pleaded to a second indictment; and it is immaterial whether the proper evidence was adduced at the trial of the first indictment or not. Id.

A prisoner, acquitted of forgery on a variance between the instrument produced in evidence and that recited in the indictment, cannot plead autrefois acquit to another indictment for the same offence, except the instrument be again misrecited in the same manner. Rex v. Coogan, 1 Leach, C. C. 448.

A prisoner may plead "not guilty," after his special plea of autrefois acquit is found against him. Rex v. Welch, Car. C. L. 56.

Seem, that he may plead them both at the same time. Id.

In a counterplea of clergy it is not necessary to set out the tenor of the indictment on which the prisoner was convicted and received his clergy; nor can any defects in such indictment be taken advantage of on such a plea. Rex v. Scott, 1 Leach, C. C. 401.

The first count of an indictment for murdering a male bastard child, stated that the prisoner gave and administered a large quantity of oil of vitriol, and forced the child to take into his mouth and throat a large quantity of the said oil of vitriol, the prisoner knowing that the said oil of vitriol would occasion the death of the child, whereby he became disordered in his mouth and throat, and by the disorder, choking, suffocating, and strangling occasioned thereby, languished and died. The second count was for murdering the child, by administering a certain acid called oil of vitriol, and forcing the child to take a large quantity of the said acid into his mouth and throat, by means whereof he became injured and disordered in his mouth and throat, and incapable of swallowing his food, and died of the inflammation, injury, and disorder occasioned thereby. Plea, that the prisoner had been acquitted for murdering a base infant male child, by giving and administering a certain deadly poison, to wit, oil of vitriol, and by forcing the child to take, drink, and swallow down a large quantity of the said oil of vitriol, the prisoner knowing it to be a deadly poison, whereby the child became sick and distempered in his body, and, by the sickness and distemper occasioned thereby, languished and died:—Held a good bar to the indictment. Rex v. Clark, 1 B. & B. 473.

One was indicted in Middlesex for perjury committed in an affidavit, which indictment, after setting out so much of the affidavit as contained the false oath, concluded with a prout patet by the affidavit affiled in the court of K. B. at Westminster, &c., and on this he was acquitted; after which he was indicted again in Middlesex for the same perjury, with this difference only, that the second indictment set out the jurat of the affidavit, in which it was stated to have been sworn in London; which was traversed by an averment that in fact the defendant was so sworn in Middlesex, and not in London: the court of

K. B. held that he was entitled to plead autrefois acquit, for the jurat was not conclusive as to the place of swearing; and the same evidence as to the real place of swearing the affidavit might have been given under the first as under the second indictment, and therefore the defendant had been once before put in jeopardy for the same offence. Rex v. Emden, 9 East, 437.

Indictment, that the defendant, in the reign of the present king, kept a common gaming-house: plea, that defendant in the reign of the present king was acquitted upon an indictment for keeping a common gaming-house in the reign of the late king, against the peace of our said lord the king; and averring the identity of the offences: demurrer, concluding with a prayer of judgment of respondeat ouster:—Held, 1st, that the plea was bad, because the indictment on which the acquittal was founded, charged an offence committed in the reign of the late king, and defendant could not by averment show that the offence charged in both indictments was the same; and 2nd, that the judgment on demurrer was final, although the demurrer concluded with a prayer of judgment of respondeat ouster. Rex v. Taylor, 5 D. & R. 422; 3 B. & C. 502.

A plea of autrefois acquit, which does not state the record of acquittal, is bad. On writ of error, brought on a judgment of conviction for felony at the general quarter sessions, the court will only look to the record of conviction, although the justices return also the record of a former acquittal. Rex v. Willey, 1 M. & S. 183.

CIX. DEMURRER.

Upon a demurrer to an indictment found in an inferior court, objections may be taken as well to the jurisdiction of such court, as to the subject-matter of the indictment. Rex v. Fearley, 1 T. R. 316.

And where the caption of the indictment states the court of quarter sessions, where such indictment was found, to have been held on an impossible day, it is fatal. Id.

It is no objection on demurrer, that several different defendants are charged in different counts of an indictment for offences of the same nature; though it may be a ground for application to the discretion of the court to quash the indictment. Rex v. Kingston, 8 East, 41.

An indictment for nuisance is not to be quashed, but demurred to. Rex v. Sutton, 4 Burr. 2116.

On demurrer to an indictment, the superior court will look into the whole record. Rex v. Fearley, 1 Leach, C. C. 425.

It being questioned whether a particular count in an indictment for felony was not bad on demurrer, upon an objection that would be aided by verdict, and this being pointed out to the judge before plea pleaded, his lordship, to save the public time, directed the trial to proceed, saying that if the prisoner should be convicted on evidence which, in his opinion, was applicable to this count only, he would consider it as demurred to, and allow the demurrer to be argued, putting the prisoner in the same situation as if the count had been demurred to in the first instance. Rex v. Cordy, 3 C. & P. 425—Vaughan.

Besides the common four-day rule on a defendant in misdemeanour, to join in demurrer to his plea, there must be a peremptory rule, giving him a certain day in the discretion of the court, without which judgment cannot be signed against him. Rex v. Johnson, 6 East, 583.

CX. OF JURIES AND CHALLENGES.

6 Geo. 4, c. 50; 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 2.]—The stat. 6 Geo. 4, c. 50, repeals a great number of statutes relating to jurors.

An Irish peer ought not to serve on a grand jury, unless he is a member of the House of Commons, he then being to all intents and purposes a commoner. In re Headley (Lord), R. & R. C. C. 117.

A person may serve on the grand jury although he is not a freeholder. Anon. R. & R. C. C. 177.

If witnesses go before the grand jury without being sworn, and the bill is found, and the prisoner tried and convicted, it is proper to recommend him for a free pardon. Rex v. Dickinson, R. & R. C. C. 401.

In criminal cases twelve jurors must appear on the record. Rex v. St. Michael (Inhabitants), 2 W. Black. 718.

The master of the crown-office, in nominating the jury, selected the names of the jurors, and did not take them by mere hazard or chance from the freeholders' book. He also selected those only who had the addition of "esquire," and included some persons who were in the commission of the peace for the county:—Held, that he was perfectly right in so doing. Rex v. Edmonds, 4 B. & A. 483.

And he also included in his original nomination several persons who, as grand jurymen, had found the indictment, and persisted in his opinion as to their sufficiency, unless the crown would consent to abandon them, which was done, and others were then substituted in their places:—Held, that he was wrong in his opinion, but that there was no ground for presuming partiality. Id. [This is now regulated by 6 Geo. 4, c. 60.]

Where the sheriff's officer had neglected to summon one of the special jurymen returned on the panel:—Held, that this was no ground of challenge to the array for unindifferency on the part of the sheriff. Rex v. Edmonds, 4 B. & A. 483.

Upon a challenge for cause, the person making the challenge must be prepared to prove the cause. Rex v. Seage, 1 R. & M. C. C. 51.

It is no objection in arrest of judgment that the sheriff, who was the prosecutor, returned the jury; it ought to have been taken by way of challenge. Rex v. Sheppard, 1 Leach, C. C. 101.

There can be no peremptory challenges in collateral issues. Rex v. Ratcliffe, 1 W. Black. 2.

No challenge, either to the array or to the polls, can be taken until a full jury shall have appeared; therefore where the challenges are taken previously they are irregularly made, and out of season. Rex v. Edmonds, 4 B. & A. 471.

The disallowing a challenge is not a ground for a new trial, but for a venire de novo; and every challenge, either to the array or to the polls, ought to be propounded in such a way that it may be put at the time upon the Nisi Prius record; so that when a challenge is made, the adverse party may either demur or counterplead, or he may deny what is alleged for matter of challenge, and it is then only that triers can be appointed. Id.

There can be no challenge to the array, that is, of the whole special jury panel, for the supposed unindifferency of the master of the crown-office, he being the officer of the court expressly appointed to nominate the jury. Id.

It is not competent to ask jurymen, whether special or talesmen, if they have not, previously to the trial, expressed opinions hostile to the defendants and their cause, in order to found a challenge to the polls on that ground, but such expressions must be proved by extrinsic evidence. Id.

Where the sheriff's officer had neglected to summon one of the special jurymen returned on the panel:—Held, that this was no ground of challenge to the array for unindifferency on the part of the sheriff. Id.

Alienage is a ground of challenge to a juror, but if the party has an opportunity of making his challenge, and neglect it, he cannot afterwards make the objection. Rex v. Sutton, 1 B. & C. 417; S. C. nom. Rex v. Despard, 2 M. & L. 406.

Semble, that since 6 Geo. 4, c. 60, s. 2, alienage is not a ground of challenge of a special juror. Id.

Where, on an indictment for the publication of a libel (appointed to be tried by a special jury), a tales panel was quashed for unindifferency in the sheriff:—Held, that a writ of habeas corpus might be awarded to the coroner of the county, although two of the special jurors summoned attended on a former occasion; and upon a prayer for an award of a tales de circumstantibus at Nisi Prius, it is not compulsory on the coroner or sheriff to select the talesmen from among the by-standers accidentally in court; but on the contrary, they may be chosen from among persons previously appointed by the coroner or sheriff to be in attendance, in expectation that a tales would be necessary. Rex v. Dalby, 3 D. & L. 311; 2 B. & C. 104. See also 1 D. & L. 145.

Where a special jury were nominated, and a change of sheriffs had happened before they were struck by the parties:—Held, that this did not prevent the master from proceeding to do so without any directions from the court. Rex v. West, Cowp. 412.

Where the place of abode of a jurymen was stated to be Grafton Street, it was held sufficient, though there are several places of the same name. Rex v. Stone, 6 T. R. 531.

On the trial of an information for a libel only ten special jurymen appeared, and two talesmen were accordingly sworn to fill up the jury:—Held, to be no ground for a new trial that two of the non-attending special jurymen named in the panel had not been summoned to attend, although it appeared that this fact was unknown to the defendant until after the trial was over. Rex v. Hunt, 4 B. & A. 430.

Since the stat. 7 & 8 Will. 3, c. 32, talesmen can only be taken from the panel of the jury summoned to try the other causes, and not from the by-standers. Rex v. Hill, 1 C. & P. 667—Garrow.

On the trial of an information in nature of a quo warranto, which has been made a special jury cause, jurors who have been summoned to try the prisoners on the crown side of the assize are not thereby qualified to act as talesmen. Rex v. Tipping, 1 C. & P. 668—Garrow.

The warrant for a tales on a trial in a county palatine must come from the king's attorney-general. Rex v. Lamb, 4 Burr. 2171.

The venire facias on a traverse of an inquisition must be returnable upon a general return, and not upon a day certain. Rex v. Roberts, 1 Wils. 77.

Upon the trial of an indictment for a misdemeanour, which continued more than one day, the jury, without the knowledge or consent of the defendants, separated at night:—Held, that the verdict was not therefore void. Rex v. Kinneer, 2 B. & A. 462.

The dispersion of the jury during the interval of an adjournment in case of a misdemeanour does not vitiate their verdict, where there is no suggestion of their having been improperly practised upon in the interim. Rex v. Woolf, 1 Chit. 401.

And whether the jury shall or shall not be permitted to separate before verdict, in cases of misdemeanour, is a matter of discretion with the judge. Id.

The court will only under particular circumstances grant a view in an indictment for perjury; but a view will be refused if there be any risk of its misleading the jury. Anon. 3 Chit. 422.

In an information for duties against the proprietors of a glass manufactory, the court of Exchequer will not grant a view of the premises, where the question may be tried by the production of a model. Att.-General v. Green, 1 Price, 30.

In general the assent of all the jury to the verdict pronounced by the foreman in their presence and hearing is to be conclusively inferred; and no affidavit can in any case be admitted to the contrary. Rex v. Wooller, 2 Stark. 111—Abbott.

A jury's representation in favour of a criminal, after conviction, censured. Rex v. Thickell, 3 Burr. 1696.

If, after indictment, arraignment, the jury charged, and evidence given, on a capital offence, one of the jurymen becomes incapable through illness of proceeding to verdict, the court of oyer and terminer may discharge the jury, and charge a fresh jury with the prisoner, and convict him. Rex v. Edwards, 4 Taunt. 309; 3 Camp. 207.

If a juror be taken ill during the trial of a prisoner for felony, the jury may be discharged, and the remaining eleven, together with a new juror, re-sworn to try the prisoner. Rex v. Scalbert, 2 Leach, C. C. 620.

If a jurymen is taken so ill as to be incapable of attending through the trial, another jurymen returned in the panel may be added to the eleven; but the prisoner should be offered his challenges over again as to the eleven, the eleven should be sworn de novo, and the trial begin again. Rex v. Edwards, R. & R. C. C. 234; 2 Leach, C. C. 621, n.; 3 Camp. 207, n.; 4 Taunt. 309.

CXI. EVIDENCE.

1. Confession.

Unless a confession is obtained by telling the prisoner it would be better for him to confess, or worse for him if he did not, and unless it comes within the broad rule of threat or promise, it ought to be received, for the law has gone far enough as to rejecting confessions. Rex v. Miles, Car. C. L. 61—Park.

A prisoner ought to be told by the magistrate, that, if he makes any statement, it may be used as evidence against him; and that he must not expect any favour if he confesses; but the magistrate ought not to dissuade him from confessing. Rex v. Green, 5 C. & P. 312—Gurney.

Confessions, obtained in consequence of promises or threats, cannot be given in evidence; but evidence of facts resulting from such inadmissible confessions may be received. Rex v. Warickshall, 1 Leach, C. C. 263; 2 East, P. C. 658; S. P. Rex v. Mosey, 1 Leach, C. C. 265, n.

A confession induced by saying, "unless you give me a more satisfactory account, I will take you before a magistrate," or by saying, "tell me where the things are, and I will be favourable to you," cannot be given in evidence. Rex v. Thompson, 1 Leach, C. C. 291; S. P. Rex v. Cass, 1 Leach, C. C. 293, n.

Where a prisoner said to the officer in whose custody he was, "if you will give me a glass of gin I will tell you all about it:"—Held, that a confession made in consequence of his having received some gin was inadmissible. Rex v. Sexton, 2 Russ. C. & M. 645.

A girl, accused of poisoning, was told by her mistress, that if she did not tell all about it that night a constable would be sent for in the morning to take her before a magistrate; she then made a statement, which was held to be not ad-misable in evidence. Next day, a constable was sent for, and as he was taking her to the magistrate, she said something to him, he having held out no inducement to her to do so:—Held, that this was receivable, as the former inducement ceased on her being put in the hands of the constable. Rex v. Richards, 5 C. & P. 318—Bosanquet.

The committing magistrate had told a prisoner that he would do all that he could for him if he would make a disclosure; after this, the prisoner made a statement to the turnkey of the prison, who held out no inducement to the prisoner to confess:—Held, that what the prisoner said to the turnkey could not be received in evidence, more especially as the turnkey had not given the prisoner any caution. Rex v. Cooper, 5 C. & P. 535—Parke.

A man and woman being apprehended on a charge of murder, another woman, who had the female prisoner in custody, told her, that she "had better tell the truth, or it would lie upon her, and the man would go free:"—Held, that a declaration of the female prisoner, made to this woman afterwards, was not receivable in evidence; Rex v. Enoch, 5 C. & P. 539—Parke.

Where the prosecutor asked the prisoner, on finding him, for the money which the prisoner had taken out of the prosecutor's pack; but before the money was produced said, "he only wanted his money, and if the prisoner gave him that, he might go to the devil if he pleased;" upon which the prisoner took 11s. 6<sup>d</sup>. out of his pocket and said, "it was all he had left of it:"—Held, by five against four of the judges, that the confession could not be received. Rex v. Jones, R. & R. C. C. 152; S. P. Rex v. Clarke, Car. C. L. 59—Vaughan.

Where a prisoner was charged with stealing a guinea and two promissory notes, and the prosecutor told him that it would be better for him to confess:—Held, that, after this admonition, the prosecutor might prove that the prisoner brought him a guinea and a 5<sup>l</sup>. note, which he gave up to the prosecutor, as the guinea and one of the notes that had been stolen from him. Diss. Lawrence, J., and le Blanc, J. Le Blanc being of opinion that the production of money by the prisoner was alone admissible, and not his saying at the time he produced one of the notes "that it was one of the notes stolen from the prosecutor." Rex v. Griffin, R. & R. C. C. 152.

Where, on the apprehension of a prisoner for larceny, persons having nothing to do with the apprehension, prosecution, or examination of the prisoner, advised him to tell the truth and consider his family:—Held, that such admonition was no ground for excluding a confession made an hour afterwards to the constable in prison. Rex v. Row, R. & R. C. C. 153.

The confession of a prisoner is evidence, although previously to it an inducement to confess had been held out by another person, if that person had no authority to do so. Rex v. Gibbons, 1 C. & P. 97—Park.

So a confession by a prisoner to a constable, who had held out no inducement, is evidence, although an inducement had been previously held out by a person in no office or authority. Rex v. Tyler, 1 C. & P. 129—Hullock.

Any person's telling a prisoner that it will be better for him to confess, will exclude a confession made to that person, although that person was not in any authority, as prosecutor, constable, or the like. Rex v. Dunn, 4 C. & P. 543—Bosanquet: S. P. Rex v. Slaughter, 4 C. & P. 544.

A constable said to a person charged with felony, "it is of no use for you to deny it, for there is the man and boy who will swear they saw you do it:"—Held, that this was such an inducement as would exclude evidence of what the prisoner said. Rex v. Mills, 6 C. & P. 14—Gurney.

Several persons, one of whom was the prisoner, were summoned before the committing magistrate touching the poisoning of A. B. No person was then specifically charged with the offence. The prisoner was sworn and made a statement:—Held, that this statement was not receivable in evidence against the prisoner. Rex v. Davis, 6 C. & P. 177—Gurney.

A girl was charged with administering poison, with intent to murder. The surgeon said to her, "you are under suspicion of this, and you had better tell all you know." After this she made a statement to the surgeon:—Held, that that statement was not admissible in evidence. Rex v. Kingston, 5 C. & P. 387—Littledale and Park.

The captain of a vessel said to one of his sailors, suspected of having stolen a watch, "that unfortunate watch has been found, and if you do not tell me who your partner was, I will commit you to prison as soon as we get to Newcastle; you are a damned villain, and the gallows is pointed in your face:"—Held, that a confession made by the sailor after this threat was not receivable in evidence on his trial for the felony. Rex v. Parratt, 4 C. & P. 570—Alderson.

A prisoner was in the custody of A, a constable; B, another constable, coming into the room A left it, and the prisoner immediately made a confession to B:—Held, that if the prisoner was in custody as an accused party, that A must be called to prove that he had held out no inducement to the prisoner to confess, before the confession made to B is receivable in evidence; but if it appear that the prisoner was not then in custody on any charge, but merely detained as an unwilling witness, it will not be necessary to call A. If a prisoner makes a confession to a constable, who takes down what he says, and the prisoner signs it, this paper will be read by the officer of the court. Rex v. Smith, 4 C. & P. 548—Patteson.

Where a prisoner, committed on a charge of murder, sent for the chaplain to pray with him, who told him, that, as the minister of God, he ought to warn him not to add sin to sin by attempting to dissemble with God, and that it would be important for him to confess his sin before God, and to repair as far as he could any injury he had done. The chaplain had no interviews with the prisoner, and considered it had made a great impression on him, but distinctly told him he did not wish him to confess. After this the prisoner made two confessions to the jailor and the mayor, after having been warned of the consequences by both these persons:—Held, these confessions were good evidence and rightly received. Rex v. Gilham, Car. C. L. 51; R. & M. C. C. R. 186.

A confession obtained without threat or promise from a boy fourteen years old, by questions put by a police officer in whose custody the boy was on a charge of felony, and when he had no food for nearly a whole day, held rightly received. Rex v. Thornton, 1 R. & M. C. C. 27.

A voluntary confession of felony made by a prisoner on his examination before a magistrate, and reduced by the magistrate into writing, may be given in evidence on the trial, though the magistrate has neglected, and the prisoner has refused, to sign it. Rex v. Lamb, 2 Leach, C. C. 552.

A prisoner before the committing magistrate made a statement, which by mistake was written in the information book, and headed "the information and complaint of R. B.," &c.:—Held, that it was not receivable in evidence, although the mistake could have been explained by the magistrate's clerk. Rex v. Bentley, 6 C. & P. 148—Gurney.

The confession of a prisoner before a magistrate is a sufficient ground to warrant a conviction, although there is no positive proof aliunde that the offence was committed. Rex v. White, R. & R. C. C. 508; S. P. Rex v. Tippet, R. & R. C. C. 509.

At least if there is probable evidence that it was committed. Id.

A magistrate may give evidence of what a prisoner said at examinations before him, although much of what he said was in answer to questions put by the magistrate, no threat or promise being used, and the prisoner had refused to sign the magistrate's notes of the examination, on the ground that they were an incorrect account of the transaction. Rex v. Jones, Car. C. L. 13—Sayley, Gaselee, and Vaughan.

And the magistrate may refresh his memory from the notes. Id.

Minutes taken by the solicitor for a prosecution, on the examination of a prisoner before a magistrate, and by his direction, may be read in evidence at the trial, though not signed either by the prisoner or the magistrate. Rex v. Thomas, Leach, C. C. 637; S. P. Rex v. Bradbury, 2 Leach, C. C. 639, n.

A prisoner charged with felony made a statement before the committing magistrate, which was taken down in writing, but not signed by the prisoner:—Held, that the magistrate's clerk might give evidence of what the prisoner said, signing that which was taken down to refresh his memory. Rex v. Pressly, 6 C. & P. 183—Patt.

A prisoner charged with felony made a statement before the committing magistrate, which was taken down and signed by the prisoner, but there was nothing on the face of the paper to show that at the time the prisoner made the statement he was under examination on charge of felony:—Held, that this examination could not be used as such, but that the clerk to the magistrate might state what the prisoner said, using the paper to refresh his memory. Rex v. Tarrant, 6 C. & P. 182—Patteson.

Confessions are strong evidence against a prisoner, if they be voluntary, and made without threat or promise; and if they are not so, they cannot be received. Hall's case, 1 Phil. Evid. 103.

And if a confession has been obtained from a prisoner by undue means, any statement afterwards made by him under the influence of that confession cannot be received. Rex v. White, 1 Phil. Evid. 104.

But it is no objection that it was made after an admonition from a stranger that he ought to tell the truth. Rex v. Row, 1 Phil. Evid. 104.

Nor under a mistaken supposition that some of his accomplices were in custody. Rex v. Barley, 1 Phil. Evid. 104.

Nor that the prosecutor first desired him to speak the truth, and suggested that he had better speak out, if the magistrate or his clerk checked the prosecutor, and desired the prisoner not to regard him, but say what he thought proper. Rex v. Edwards, 1 Phil. Evid. 104.

Nor that the constable's assistant told him it would be better to confess, if the magistrate before whom he was examined on the following day frequently cautioned him to say nothing against himself. Rex v. Lingate, 1 Phil. Evid. 105.

Nor where a constable had held out hopes which, upon inquiry, were dissipated by the magistrate, the prisoner, although he at first declined to confess, afterwards did so to another constable. Rex v. Rosier, 1 Phil. Evid. 105.

Nor that the wife of the constable had induced him to confess by holding out hopes, because she could not be supposed by him to have any power. Rex v. Hardwick, 1 Phil. Evid. 105.

An examination of a prisoner charged with a felony taken without threat or promise, by questions put by the magistrate, is notwithstanding admissible in evidence. Rex v. Ellis, 1 R. & M. 432—Littledale.

Where a prisoner in a jail on a charge of felony asked the turnkey of the jail to put a letter in the post for him, and after his promising to do so the prisoner gave him a letter addressed to his father, and the turnkey, instead of putting it into the post, transmitted it to the prosecutor:—Held, that the letter was admissible in evidence against the prisoner, notwithstanding the manner in which it was obtained. Rex v. Derrington, 2 C. & P. 418—Garrow.

After the examination of a prisoner before a magistrate on a charge of felony had been taken down and read over to him, and he was told that he might sign it or not, but he declined to do so:—Held, that it could not be read in evidence against him. Rex v. Telicote, 2 Stark. 483—Wood.

A prisoner's confession is sufficient ground for a conviction, although there is no other proof of his having committed the offence, or of the offence having been committed, if that confession was in consequence of a charge against the prisoner. Rex v. Eldridge, R. & R. C. C. 440.

Especially if there is evidence that he had been desirous to keep out of the way of the person upon whom the offence is supposed to have been committed: or if any of his companions under the same charge have attempted to do so. Rex v. Falkner, R. & R. C. C. 481.

A prisoner, indicted for stealing two heifers, said: "I drove away two heifers from 'the World's End Dolver,'" (i. e. Fen.) The prosecutor's farm was called by that name, but he could not swear that there was not any other of the same name in the neighbourhood:—Held, insufficient to warrant a conviction. Rex v. Tuffs, 5 C. & P. 167—Lyndhurst.

Where a knowledge of any fact is obtained by means of a confession which cannot be received, the party should be acquitted; unless the fact would be sufficient to warrant a conviction without any confession leading to it. Rex v. Harvey, 2 East, P. C. 658—Eldon.

If a confession be improperly obtained, it is a ground for excluding evidence of the confession, and of any act done by the prisoner in consequence towards discovering the property, unless the property is actually discovered thereby. Rex v. Jenkins, R. & R. C. C. 492.

A, gave a mortal blow to B. his master, who took out a warrant against A. for an assault. The charge of assault was heard under this warrant before Mr. D. and another magistrate, who summarily convicted A. of the assault. What was said by A. and B. before the magistrates was not taken down in writing. B. died:—Held, that on the trial of A. for the murder of B., Mr. D. might give evidence of what B. said in the presence of A. at the hearing before the magistrates of the charge of assault, and of what A. said in answer to it. Rex v. Edmunds, 6 C. & P. 164—Tindal.

If the declaration of the prisoner, in which she asserts her innocence, be given in evidence on the part of the prosecution, and there be evidence of other statements confessing guilt, the judge will leave the whole of the conflicting statements to the jury for their consideration; but if there be in the whole case no evidence but what is compatible with the assertion of innocence so given in evidence for the prosecution, the judge will direct an acquittal. Rex v. Jones, 2 C. & P. 629—Bosanquet.

If a prosecutor prove in evidence a declaration made by a prisoner, it becomes evidence for the prisoner as well as against him, but like all other evidence, the jury may give credit to one part of it and not to another. Rex v. Higgins, 3 C. & P. 603—Parke.

If a prosecutor give in evidence a declaration made by a prisoner exculpatory of himself, the jury are not bound to take this to be true merely because the prosecutor gives it in evidence; but they ought to consider how far it is consistent with the rest of the evidence, and whether they believe it to be really true. Rex v. Steptoe, 4 C. & P. 397—Park & Garrow.

A. was indicted for the murder of H. It was opened that A., having malice against P., hired H. to murder him, and that H. did so, but that H. being detected, A. had murdered H. to prevent a discovery of his (A.'s) guilt respecting the murder of P. Evidence was given of expressions of malice used by A. towards P.; and it was held that the prosecutor might also give evidence to show that H. was, in fact, the person by whom P. had been murdered. Rex v. Cleave, 4 C. & P. 221—Littledale.

A person charged with murder made a confession before the coroner. It appeared that, before he made this confession, B., who was both a clergyman and a magistrate, had had an interview with him:—Held, that the prosecution was not bound to call B. before they put in the confession, but that it would be fair for them to do so; and that if the prosecutors did not call B., the prisoner might call him before the confession was read, to prove that some inducement was held out. Id.

A., a prisoner charged with murder, was visited by B., who was both a magistrate and a clergyman; B. told him, that if he was not the person who struck the fatal blow, and he would tell all he knew, he (B.) would use his endeavours and influence to prevent anything from happening to him; and that if he (A.) did not make a disclosure, some one else would probably do so. After this B. wrote to the secretary of state, who returned an answer that mercy could not be extended to A.; which answer was communicated by B. to A. After this A. sent for the coroner and wished to make a statement. The coroner told him that if he did so, it would be used as evidence against him. The prisoner made a confession:—Held, that this confession was admissible. Id.

If a prisoner, in a confession made before a coroner, which is taken down in writing, mentions the names of two other persons who are charged with the same offence, the confession when read in evidence, must be read with the names in it, just as it is, and the officer of the court must not say "another person," and "a third person," instead of reading the names. Id.

If a prisoner, charged with murder, say in his confession, which is read in evidence against him, that he was present at the murder, but took no part in the commission of it, this is evidence for him as well as against him; but the judge will not direct an acquittal, as the jury may believe one part of the confession and disbelieve another; however, if it is meant to be charged that the prisoner did more than is stated in the confession, there ought to be some evidence to show that. Id.

If a prisoner is brought before a magistrate, his statement ought not to be taken till the evidence against him is gone through, and he should

When he is asked if he has anything to say in answer to the charge. Rex v. Fagg, 4 C. & P. 566—Garrow.

A prisoner, when before the committing magistrate, was sworn by mistake, he being supposed to be a witness; as soon as the mistake was discovered, the deposition which was begun was destroyed, and the prisoner cautioned. After this he made a statement:—Held, that such statement was receivable in evidence. Rex v. Webb and Goddard, 4 C. & P. 564—Garrow.

A statement relating to an offence, made upon oath by a person not at the time under suspicion, is admissible in evidence against him, if he be afterwards charged with the commission of it. Rex v. Tubby, 5 C. & P. 530—Vaughan.

When before the committing magistrate one of the prisoners was examined as a witness against the other:—Held, that what that prisoner said before the magistrate could not be given in evidence on the trial. Rex v. Davis, 6 C. & P. 90—Gurney.

On the trial of a prisoner who has made before a magistrate a voluntary confession of his guilt, previous to the conclusion of the evidence against him, which confession is taken down in writing, and signed by the prisoner, and attested by the magistrate's clerk, the proper course is, for the clerk to give evidence of the prisoner's statements, refreshing his memory by the written paper. Rex v. Bell, 5 C. & P. 162—Tenterden and Gaselee.

A prisoner being under examination before a magistrate on a charge of felony, a statement was made in his presence by the solicitor for the prosecution, which the witness called to prove it said he believed had been taken down in writing:—Held, that under these circumstances parol evidence of the statement was not admissible on the trial of such prisoner. Rex v. Hollingshead, 4 C. & P. 242—Vaughan.

It is to be presumed that what is stated on oath before a magistrate is taken down in writing, and therefore parol evidence of such a statement is not receivable, unless it be first shown that it was not so taken down. Phillips v. Wilmern, 4 C. & P. 273—Tindal.

Where the examination of a prisoner by a coroner was inadmissible on account of an irregularity in the mode of taking it, the coroner was allowed to give parol evidence of what the prisoner said on the occasion of his examination. Rex v. Reed, 1 M. & M. 403—Tindal. [As to what was the nature of this irregularity, the report gives no information.]

If a letter, written by one of several prisoners, be read in evidence, and in this letter the names of the other prisoners be mentioned, these names must not be omitted in the reading of the letter, but the judge will tell the jury to pay no attention to the letter, except so far as it affects the writer. Rex v. Fletcher and others, 4 C. & P. 50—Littledale.

If a witness give evidence of a conversation with a prisoner, in which that prisoner says something implicating another prisoner, the witness, in giving his evidence, must not omit the name of such other prisoner and say "another person," but must give the conversation exactly as it occurred, and the judge will tell the jury that is not evidence against such other prisoner. Rex v. Hearne, Cotton, and Cox, 4 C. & P. 215—Littledale: S. P. Rex v. Walkley, 6 C. & P. 175—Gurney.

Parol evidence may be given to add to the written examination of a prisoner taken by a magistrate. Rex v. Harris, M. C. C. R. 338.

2. Accomplices.

A prisoner ought not to be convicted upon the evidence of any number of accomplices, unconfirmed by other testimony. Rex v. Noakes, 5 C. & P. 326—Littledale, Bolland, and Alderson.

Although all persons present at and sanctioning a prize fight, where one of the combatants is killed, are guilty of manslaughter, as principals in the second degree; yet they are not such accomplices as to require their evidence to be confirmed, if they are called as witnesses against other parties charged with the manslaughter. Rex v. Hargraves, 5 C. & P. 170—Tenterden.

An accomplice may give evidence before a grand jury to support an indictment against a particeps criminis; and a bill so found is good, although the accomplice be not previously admitted a witness for the crown, and was carried from prison before the grand jury by means of a surreptitious and illegal order. Rex v. Dodd, 1 Leach, C. C. 155.

For the necessity of some legal authority for the removal only regards the justification of the jailor. Id.

If the jury believe the testimony of an accomplice, they may convict of a capital offence, though such testimony stands uncorroborated. Rex v. Attwood, 1 Leach, C. C. 464.

An accomplice does not require a confirmation as to the person he charges, if he is confirmed as to the particulars of his story. Rex v. Birkett, R. & R. C. C. 251.

The practice of not calling upon a prisoner to defend himself against the single uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, is rather a matter of discretion with the court, than a general rule of law; and a prisoner may be convicted on such testimony if the jury believe the witness. Rex v. Durham, 1 Leach, C. C. 478.

On an indictment against principals and accessories, the case against the principal was proved by the testimony of an accomplice, who was confirmed as to the accessories, but not as to the principal. The jury were directed to acquit the prisoners. Rex v. Bell, 1 M. & M. 326—Littledale.

The information of a dead accomplice may be read in evidence against a prisoner. Rex v. Westbeer, 1 Leach, C. C. 12.

An accomplice, who is a witness for the crown, is not entitled as a matter of right to be exempt from being prosecuted for other offences at the same assizes, at which he had been such witness. Rex v. Lee, R. & R. C. C. 361: S. P. Rex v. Brunton, R. & R. C. C. 454.

An accomplice who has been admitted by the magistrate as a witness for the crown is not thereby exempted from prosecution, and it depends upon his making a full disclosure of the joint guilt of himself and his companions whether the King's Bench will admit him to bail that he may apply for a pardon. Rex v. Rudd, 1 Leach, C. C. 115.

For it depends upon the bona fide behaviour of an accomplice who has turned King's evidence, whether the court of K. B. will admit him to bail that he may apply for a pardon. Id.

If the testimony of an accomplice be confirmed so far as it relates to one prisoner, but not as to another, the one may be convicted on the testimony of the accomplice, if the jury deem him worthy of credit. Rex v. Dawber, 3 Stark. 34, 35, n.—Bayley.

And the corroboration of the evidence of an accomplice need not be on every material point, but must be so confirmed as to convince the jury that his statement was correct and true. Rex v. Barnard, 1 C. & P. 88—Hullock.

A person indicted for a misdemeanour may be legally convicted upon the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice. Rex v. Jones, 2 Camp. 132—Ellenborough.

And where there is not sufficient evidence to criminate a prisoner on the depositions taken before a magistrate, an accomplice may be admitted as king's evidence, before the bill is presented to the grand jury. Rex v. Barnard, 1 C. & P. 87—Hullock.

The equitable claim of an accomplice to a pardon, on condition of his making a full and fair confession, does not extend to prosecutions for other offences in which he was not concerned with the prisoner; with respect to such offences, therefore, he is not bound to answer on cross-examination. Lee's, Duce's, and West's cases, 1 Phil. Evid. 37.

An accomplice, who, in a case out of the statutes, is, under the practice allowed, admitted by the justices of peace as a witness, and is afterwards prosecuted, has only a claim to the mercy of the crown, founded on an express or implied promise of the magistrate on a condition performed; and it depends on his conduct fully and fairly disclosing the joint guilt of himself and his companions, whether the court will admit him to bail, that he may apply for a pardon. Rex v. Rudd, Cowp. 331.

In cases out of the statutes, an accomplice fully and fairly disclosing the joint guilt of himself and his companions, and who is admitted a witness, and does give evidence, ought not to be prosecuted for his own guilt, so disclosed; nor perhaps for any other offence accidentally omitted by him. Id.

But if prosecuted, he cannot plead this in bar, nor avail himself of it upon his trial; but he may apply to the court to put off the trial, that he may have time to apply for a pardon. Id.

3. Depositions.

It is the duty of a magistrate to return to the judge, not only the depositions of witnesses, but also any confession taken down as made by the prisoner; and it is no excuse for not doing so, that the confession was wanted to be sent before the grand jury. Rex v. Fallows, 5 C. & P. 500—Vaughan.

A grand jury cannot, on a suspicion that the witness has been tampered with by the prisoner, receive in evidence his written explanation in lieu of his parol testimony, for the purpose of finding a bill. Denby's case, 1 Leach, C. C. 514.

A deposition of the deceased is admissible in a case of murder, although taken when the prisoner was charged with another offence, and although the greater part of it had been reduced into writing during his absence, it appearing that the deceased was afterwards re-sworn in the prisoner's presence, the deposition then read out and stated by the deceased to be correct, and the prisoner asked whether he had any questions to put.—Diss. Abbott. Rex v. Smith, R. & R. C. C. 339; 2 Stark. 208.

An information before a justice, made by the deceased on oath in the presence of the prisoner, may be given in evidence on the trial, though the informant was not apprehensive of death, and though the information be signed by one magistrate only. Rex v. Radbourne, 1 Leach, C. C. 458; 1 East, P. C. 356.

Parol evidence cannot be received of an information before a magistrate, either in felony or misdemeanour, unless evidence be given that it was not reduced into writing. Rex v. Farrier, 1 Leach, C. C. 202.

Parol evidence cannot be given of the examination of a prisoner taken before a magistrate, for it must be intended that it was put in writing as the law requires. Rex v. Jacobs, 1 Leach, C. C. 309: S. P. Rex v. Hinman, 1 Leach, C. C. 310, n.

Depositions taken before the coroner on an inquisition of murder, cannot be read in evidence on the trial of the indictment, though the deponents are dead, if they are not signed by the coroner, or if signed, and his hand-writing cannot be proved. Rex v. England, 2 Leach, C. C. 770.

The depositions of a deceased witness, though not taken wholly in the prisoner's presence, are admissible, if the party was re-sworn, and the depositions read and signed in his presence. Rex v. Smith, 2 Stark. 208—Richards; Holt, 64.

The deposition of a witness taken in a joint proceeding, in the presence of the party then charged, is not admissible on another proceeding against that party, on the ground that he was present, and had the opportunity of cross-examination. Malin v. Andrews, 1 M. & M. 336—Parke.

If, in a case of felony, a witness for the prosecution is too ill to attend the assizes, this is a good ground for postponing the trial, but will not authorize the reading the deposition of the witness taken before the magistrate. Rex v. Savage, 5 C. & P. 143—Patteson.

But where the prosecutrix in a case of felony was bedridden, and there was no probability that she would be even able to leave her house, the judge admitted her deposition before the magistrate, the same as if she were dead. Rex v. Hogg, 6 C. & P. 176—Gurney.

A justice of the peace should not allow depositions to be framed in the words of a clause in a statute under which the party is committed. Mills v. Collett, 3 M. & P. 242.

4. Competency of Witnesses.

9 Geo. 4, c. 32, s. 2.

If two be guilty of a murder, and one be indicted and the other not, the party not indicted is a good witness for the crown. Rex v. Tinckler, 1 East, P. C. 354.

A principal felon was a competent witness on the stat. 22 Geo. 3, c. 58, against an accessory for receiving stolen goods. Rex v. Haslam, 1 Leach, C. C. 418; 2 East, P. C. 732.

A person convicted on an indictment for a conspiracy cannot be a witness. Rex v. Priddle, 1 Leach, C. C. 442.

A convict on the 31 Geo. 2, c. 10, for taking a false oath, &c., who is pardoned before judgment, is a competent witness against the person who suborned him to take such oath; for by the allowance of the pardon he is restored to his former competency and credit. Rex v. Reilly, 1 Leach, C. C. 454.

[See Rex v. Collins, 2 Leach, C. C. 829, ante, OFFENCES RELATING TO THE COIN.—Competency of Witness, 730.]

In all cases of personal injuries committed by the husband or wife against each other, the injured party is an admissible witness against the other. Rex v. Jagger, 1 East, P. C. 455—Buller.

To give evidence against a prisoner under a hope that the conviction of such prisoner will tend to procure the pardon of a husband convict, goes to the credit and not to the competency of the witness. Rex v. Rudd, 1 Leach, C. C. 115, 127.

A person who is discovered (though by means of an improper confession) to have purchased stolen property, is a competent witness to prove that fact. Rex v. Lockhart, 1 Leach, C. C. 386.

An informer, entitled under the stat. 17 Geo. 2, c. 40, s. 10, to a moiety of the penalty for embezzling naval stores, is not a competent witness for the prosecution, unless he will release his interest. Rex v. Blackman, 1 Esp. 95—Kenyon.

But afterwards held, on the ground of the discretionary power of punishing under the statute, that he was admissible. Rex v. Cole, 1 Esp. 169—Kenyon; Peake, 217. And see Rex v. Bland, 5 T. R. 370.

The persons who are supposed to have been the seconds at a duel may refuse to give evidence on the trial of the principals. Rex v. England, 2 Leach, C. C. 767; Car. C. L. 232.

But their testimony may be received as the testimony of persons admitted witnesses for the crown. Id.

J. G. was indicted for murder. E. G. his brother was convicted and her evidence went to show that J. G. was one of the principals:—Held, she was a competent witness against J. G. Rex v. Smith, Car. C. L. 66.

Where two are indicted for murder and both identified, and the defence of alibi:—Held, the wife of one of the parties is not an admissible witness against the other, although it was proved that she was of her own husband, because she did not give evidence in her own testimony went to shake the credit of the prosecution who were indicted. Rex v. Smith, Car. C. L. 66.

A woman who is living as his wife, is a competent witness against him. Bathews v. Galindo, 3 C. & P. 165—Gar

Persons who cohabit in marriage de facto, suppose a marriage in law, may, as to be a nullity, give in evidence, statements made by them during the cohabitation. Well v. Patten, 12—Patteson.

And where a witness was subpoenaed by a defendant indicted for a conspiracy, and before he was examined requested to have its expenses paid, and stated that no money was paid to him at the time he was served, he was obliged to give evidence, although the defendant refused to pay such expenses, and although the indictment was removed by certiorari, and came down for trial at the assizes as a civil record. Rex v. Cooke, 1 C. & P. 322—Park.

A subpoena may be issued from the crown office, requiring a witness to attend at the assizes in the country, to give evidence in support of an intended prosecution for a felony; and the court of King's Bench will grant an attachment against him for not attending in obedience to the subpoena. Rex v. Ring, 8 T. R. 585.

In a criminal case, a person, who is present in court, when called as a witness is bound to be sworn and to give his evidence, although he has not been subpoenaed. An indictment for stopping a way is a criminal case for this purpose. Rex v. Sadler and others, 4 C. & P. 218—Littledale.

The defendant on an information on stat. 24 Geo. 3, c. 25, s. 64, must make his application for a mandamus, for the examination of witnesses, within the four first full days after plea pleaded. Rex v. Holland, 4 T. R. 662.

A person who has no notion of eternity, or of a future state of rewards and punishment, cannot be examined as a witness, but the trial may be postponed until the witness is instructed in the nature of this obligation. Rex v. White, 1 Leach, C. C. 430.

A Scotch covenantor may be sworn in as a jurymen in a court of criminal law by the ceremony of holding up his hand, without kissing the book. Walker's case, 1 Leach, C. C. 498.

A Scotch covenantor may give evidence in a criminal prosecution, on being sworn according to the custom of this sect, without kissing the book. Mildrone's case, 1 Leach, C. C. 412.

A Mahometan may be sworn on the Alcoran in a prosecution for a capital offence. Rex v. Morgan, 1 Leach, C. C. 54.

An infant cannot, under any circumstances, be admitted to give evidence, except upon oath. Rex v. Powell, 1 Leach, C. C. 110.

A witness, though deaf and dumb, may be sworn and give evidence on an indictment for felony, if intelligence can be conveyed to, and received by him, by means of signs and tokens. Ruston's case, 1 Leach, C. C. 408: S. P. Rex v. Jones, 1 Leach, C. C. 452, n.

When a witness, upon a trial, gives evidence contradictory to facts contained in a deposition made by such witness in a former proceeding in the same case, the judge may order such deposition to be read, in order to impeach the credit of the witness. Rex v. Oldroyd, R. & R. C. C. 88.

Semle, that the prosecutor also has a right to call for such depositions for the same purpose. Id.

It is not a sufficient ground for discharging a jury, that the material witness against the prisoner is not sufficiently acquainted with the nature and obligation of an oath, though this appears as soon as the jury is charged, and before any evidence is given. The prisoner should be acquitted. Rex v. Wade, 1 R. & M. C. C. 86.

Where a witness for a prosecution remains in court after an order for the witnesses to withdraw, the judge may still allow him to be examined, subject to observation on his conduct for disobeying the order. Rex v. Colley, 1 M. & M. 329—Littledale and Gascolee.

Although the counsel in a prosecution for felony is not bound to call every witness whose name is on the back of the indictment; yet the judge may do so, to allow the prisoner's counsel an opportunity of cross-examining them. Rex v. Simmonds, 1 C. & P. 84—Hullock.

Where an indictment is tried at Nisi Prius, the Nisi Prius record does not show what names were on the back of the indictment. Rex v. Smith, 5 C. & P. 107.

If counsel for the prosecution call a witness whose name is on the back of the indictment, but do not examine him, and such witness be examined by the prisoner's counsel, any question put by the prosecutor's counsel after this will be considered as a re-examination, and therefore the prosecutor's counsel cannot ask anything that does not arise out of the previous examination by the prisoner's counsel. Rex v. Bentley, 4 C. & P. 220.

If the counsel for a prosecution decline calling a witness whose name is on the back of the indictment, it is in the discretion of the judge who tries the case, whether the witness shall or shall not be called, for the prisoner's counsel to examine him before the prisoner is called on for his defence. Rex v. Bedle, 6 C. & P. 186.

If the witness be so called, the judge will allow the examination of the witness to assume the shape of a cross-examination, but will not allow the prisoner's counsel to call any witness to contradict him. Id.

On an indictment of a female prisoner for stealing a watch from the person of the prosecutor in a private house, he cannot be asked, in cross-examination, "whether anything improper passed between him and the prisoner at such house." Rex v. Pitcher, 1 C. & P. 85—Hullock.

On an indictment for a larceny, if the prosecutor rests his case on the prisoner's recent possession of the goods, and the prisoner call a witness to prove that he (the prisoner) bought them of J. T.; if the prosecutor call J. T., he cannot ask him as to such matters as go to support the prisoner's case, and cannot prove by him that he saw the prisoner commit the theft. Rex v. Simpson, 2 C. & P. 415—Garrow.

On an indictment for a robbery, an affidavit set up:—Held, that evidence that witness was near the spot when the robbery was committed about the time of the robbery, was inadmissible as evidence in reply, as it might have formed part of the original case for the prosecution. Rex v. Hilditch, 5 C. & P. 299—Taunton.

That which is a confirmation of the original case is not receivable as evidence in reply, but that which goes to negative the defence, and yet is distinct from the case for the prosecution, is receivable as evidence in reply. Id.

In a case of felony, where the defence was an alibi, the witnesses for the prisoner stated that they respectively saw him at various places on his route from Gloucestershire to Worcestershire for two days before, and up to the time of the felony committed:—Held, that the counsel for the prosecution might call a witness in reply to prove that the prisoner had said he was at home on those days. Rex v. Findon, 6 C. & P. 132—Tindal.

If several be charged with the same offence, and no evidence be given against one of them, he is entitled to an acquittal before the others are called upon for their defence, to enable them to call him as a witness. Bounty case, 1 East, 313, n. And see Rex v. Rowland, 1 R. & M. 401.

On the trial of three persons upon an indictment for a conspiracy, where, after the case for the prosecution was closed, one only called a witness, and examined him as to a conversation between himself and another of the defendants, the counsel for the crown may cross-examine such witness, as to any other conversations between the two defendants, although the evidence tends chiefly to criminate one only. Rex v. Kreehl, 2 Stark. 343—Abbott.

A witness is not only not bound to answer that which will criminate him, but he is not bound to answer anything that tends to criminate him. In a prosecution for libel, a witness was held not bound to answer whether he had written a particular paragraph in a newspaper, but that he must answer whether he knew whose writing it was, but that he was not bound to name the person whose writing he knew it to be. Rex v. Slaney, 5 C. & P. 213—Tenterden.

If a witness objects to answer questions on the ground that they tend to criminate him, the counsel on the opposite side cannot argue in support of the witness's objection. Rex v. Adey, 2 M. & M. 94.

7. Variance.

9 Geo. 4, c. 15.

In setting forth the tenor of an instrument, a mere literal variance will not vitiate the indictment, as the word "Mess." for "Messrs." in the name of the drawers of a bill. Rex v. Oldfield, 2 Russ. C. & M. 360.

A variance of "reicevd," instead of "received," is not fatal; and the words "as follow (that is to say)" do not bind the party to an exact recital. Rex v. Hart, 1 Leach, C. C. 145; 2 East, P. C. 978.

It is no variance in an indictment on stat. 7 Geo. 3, c. 50, s. 1, to describe a letter as addressed to certain persons, using the name and firm of Messrs. B. & Co., although those persons never themselves used the word "Messrs." but others directed bills and letters to them by that description. Rex v. Dawson, 2 East, P. C. 605.

But it was held a fatal variance where an indictment for perjury in articles of the peace exhibited to a magistrate, stated that the defendant swore "in substance and effect," that the prosecutor assaulted her, and at the same time threatened to shoot her, and the word "time" had been omitted in the articles. Rex v. Taylor, 1 Camp. 404—Ellenborough.

If an indictment state that an issue was joined at the "General Sessions" of our lord the king, holden for the county of G., before his majesty's justices of the court of Great Sessions, this will not be proved by showing that such an issue was joined at the Great Sessions of that county; and if it is laid, that the issue was joined in an ejectment, in which "John Doe, on the demise of W. R. and D. T., was the plaintiff;" and it appears that John Doe was plaintiff on the joint demise and also in two several demises of the same lessors, this will be a fatal variance, as this is a description of how he was plaintiff, and not an allegation only. Rex v. Thomas, 1 C. & P. 472—Park.

Where the indictment alleged that the cause was tried at the assizes before E. An indictment for perjury, in setting out the record of a conviction at the Middlesex Sessions, stated an adjournment to have been made by F. Const, Esq., and A., B., C., and D., and others their fellows, &c., justices. An examined copy of the record of conviction, when produced, stated the adjournment to have been made by F. Const, Esq., and E., F., G., and others, &c.:—Held, that this defect might be cured by parol evidence of an adjournment made by the persons named in the indictment, but that no such evidence being given the variance was fatal. Rex v. Belamy, 1 R. & M. 171—Abbott.

Where an indictment for perjury, assigned on evidence given in the Palace Court, described the court as "the court of the King's Palace at Westminster," and it appeared from the record of the trial below that it was called "the Court of the King's Palace of Westminster":—Held, to be no variance. Rex v. Israel, 3 D. & R. 234. And see Pippet v. Hearn, 1 D. & R. 266; 5 B. & A. 634.

The word "commission," according to the context of the sentence in which it is used, may mean either the instrument by which authority is given to "commissioners," or the persons to whom the authority is given; therefore, where in an indictment for perjury, assigned on a petition to the Lord Chancellor to supersede the commission of bankrupt, the indictment, professing to set forth only the substance of the petition, stated "that at the several meetings before the commission, the petitioner declared openly, and in the presence and hearing of A. B., as assignee," so and so, and it appearing from the petition itself that the allegation therein was, "that at the several meetings before the commissioners" the petitioner declared so and so:—Held, that this was not a fatal variance. Rex v. Dudman, 7 D. & R. 324.

It is no variance in an indictment to state that a bill was directed to Messrs. A., B. & Co. without the r, instead of Messrs. A., B. & Co. with it. Rex v. Oldfield, Bayl. Bills, 310.

"W. & Co., bankers, Birchin Lane," and in the corner, at the foot of the address to them, the figure "3" was written in a small character, but it was not proved to have been on the bill at the time of its being uttered or dishonoured. On an indictment for forgery professing to set out the bill in terms, the figure "3" was inserted as it appeared on the bill when it was produced at the trial. Quære, whether this was a variance? Rex v. Watts, 6 Moore, 442; 9 Price, 620.

Where in an indictment on an answer, a bill was described as having been exhibited against three persons only, and on the production of the bill it appeared to be against four:—Held, to be no variance. Rex v. Powell, 1 R. & M. 161—Abbott.

Where an indictment on statute 17 Geo. 3. c. 26, s. 7, charged A. for taking a particular sum exceeding 10s. per cent. as brokerage on a annuity, and it was proved that the sum included a demand for preparing the deeds, &c.:—Held, to be no variance. Rex v. Gilliam, 6 T. R. 255; 1 Esp. 385.

An averment that an issue was joined on information is supported by the production of an information containing two counts, upon each of which issue was separately taken. Rex v. Jones Peake, 38—Kenyon.

Where an indictment for perjury, committed at the trial of an information, averred that issue was joined upon facts, some of which were merely laid as an inducement, though necessary to be proved at the trial, and there was only a plea of not guilty, the variance is fatal. Rex v. Hawkins Peake, 8—Buller.

An indictment for not repairing a road leading from A. to B., and from thence to C., is not supported by evidence of the not repairing a road from A. to C., not passing through B., though communicating with it. Rex v. Great Capital, 6 Esp. 136—Ellenborough.

It is no variance in an indictment for perjury, which sets out an indictment for an assault, which had the words "whereby his life was greatly despaired of," that the former omitted the word "despaired." Rex v. May, 1 Dougl. 183; 1 T. R. 237, n.

It is not a fatal variance (after verdict) when an information, professing to set out the title of an act of parliament, described it as intituled an act, (&c.) for repealing duties on salt, and the drawbacks, (&c.) thereon, the title being (in fact) in the same words, with the exception of having the word thereout instead of "thereon," (and adding) "and for granting other duties, &c."

Where an information stated that "an order was made for the landing of goods on a quay or wharf," and the order produced was to deliver "at the king's warehouse:"—Held, a fatal variance, though it appeared that the warehouse stood on the quay. Rex v. Cassano, 5 Esp. 231—Ellenborough.

The evidence in a conviction stated that the Coburg Theatre was in the parish of Lambeth, and the adjudication of the penalty was, to the poor of the parish of St. Mary, Lambeth:—Held, that this was no variance, it not appearing that there were two distinct parishes so named. Rex v. Glossop, 4 B. & A. 616.

Where an inquisition found that the crown debtor was indebted in a sum certain for duties, &c., due between two given periods; and on the trial of a traverse of the crown's debt, modo et forma, it was proved that the debtor was indebted, at the time of the inquisition, in a different sum for duties accruing for a different period; it is not a fatal variance, because the allegation of the amount of the debt, and of the period for which it was due, is superfluous, and not of the substance of the issue, and may be rejected as surplusage: it is enough, to sustain the proceedings, if there was any debt in fact due to the crown at the time of taking the inquisition, for the being indebted to the crown is the basis of the extent. Rex v. Franklin, 5 Price, 614.

In an indictment for bigamy, the second wife was described as E. C., widow; she was, in fact, not a widow, nor had she ever been represented or reputed to be so:—Held, a fatal variance. Rex v. Deeley, 4 C. & P. 579.

7. Evidence as to other Points.

It cannot be shown on the trial of an indictment that the prisoner has a general disposition to commit the same kind of offence as that charged against him; therefore an admission by a prisoner, charged with an infamous crime, that he had committed the same offence at another time, and with another person, and that he had a tendency to such practices, was rejected. Rex v. Cole, 1 Phil. Evid. 170.

Evidence to the character of a defendant is not admissible upon the trial of an information in the Exchequer. Att.-Gen. v. Bowman, 2 B. & P. 532, n.

But it is no objection to evidence on an indictment for felony, that it also goes to show the prisoner guilty of another felony. Rex v. Moore, 2 C. & P. 235—Burrough.

An introductory averment that outrages had been committed in and in the neighbourhood of N. is divisible, so that it need not be proved that they were committed in both places; and fourteen or fifteen miles from N. may be considered in the neighbourhood. An introductory averment that the persons engaged in such outrages had been reputed to act under the direction of some supposed and unknown person, called, &c., does not necessarily import that the person is an existing person; but proof that he was a fictitious person, set up for the purpose, is sufficient. Rex v. Sutton, 4 M. & S. 532.

A letter of instruction from the lords of the Treasury, signed by three lords of the Treasury, is admissible evidence upon proof of the hand-writing of the three persons whose names were subscribed to it, without producing the commission. Rex v. Jones, 2 Camp. 131—Ellenborough.

An allegation in an indictment, "that at the general quarter sessions of the peace holden at U., in and for the said county of M., on Monday, the 10th day of July, 1826, before certain of his Majesty's justices of the peace assigned, &c., a certain bill of indictment against S. H. G. was duly preferred and found," &c., is only proved by a regular record of the indictment and caption; and an examined copy of the mere indictment without any caption, together with the minute-book of the sessions, produced by the deputy clerk of the peace, and from which he read entries in his own hand-writing showing the time and place of holding the sessions, is not sufficient, although no record had in fact been drawn up. Rex v. Smith, 8 B. & C. 341; Car. C. L. 189.

Semle, that a minute-book, in which an entry of the proceedings at the sessions are made, and from which book the roll containing the record of such proceedings is subsequently made up, is not itself a record so as to be admissible in evidence, as a proof of the fact there stated. Rex v. Bellamy, 1 R. & M. 171—Abbott.

An indictment for perjury, alleged to have been committed on the hearing of a parish appeal at the quarter sessions, stated that "at the general quarter sessions," &c., "holden," &c., the appeal came on to be heard:—Held, that the minute-book of the sessions produced by the clerk of the peace was not sufficient to prove the hearing of the appeal, and that a regular record ought to have been drawn up. Rex v. Ward, 6 C. & P. —Park.

A magistrate may commit a feme covert who is a material witness, upon a charge of felony brought before him, and who refuses to appear at the sessions to give evidence, or to find sureties for her appearance. Bennett v. Watson, 3 M. & S. 1.

The record of a conviction before magistrates, setting out the depositions of the witnesses, cannot be read to contradict the evidence of a witness on the trial of a subsequent information. Rex v. Howe, 1 Camp. 461—Ellenborough.

The false denial of the husband by the wife, though not directly proved to have been by his authority, or in his hearing, to custom-house officers, coming to his house to search for untaxed goods, immediately after discovered by them on his premises, is admissible evidence, as a part of the res gesta, on the trial of an information for penalties against the husband, for possessing the goods with a guilty knowledge. Att.-Gen. v. Good, 1 M'Clel. & Y. 286.

An information on 51 Geo. 3, c. 87, (for prohibiting brewers from receiving certain articles), charging a "receiving and taking into possession," is not maintainable, where it is proved that the act of receiving was antecedent to the statute, although the possession has continued ever since. Att.-Gen. v. King, 5 Price, 195.

Proof that a tanner, after certain hides had been taken out of the woose, and weighed by the surveying officer, and marked by him as having been charged with the excise duty, which was accordingly entered in his book, had substituted other hides of less weight, also so marked on a former day, which was detected by the surveyor on re-weighing the hides, and who found the hides which had been withdrawn on unstated premises:—Held, to be sufficient evidence to sustain counts in an information, charging the manufacturer, in the words of the act 56 Geo. 3, c. 110, s. 4, with first "taking hides out of the woose, &c., so that the duty payable thereon might not be duly charged, accounted for, or paid;" secondly, "with concealing hides, &c." &c., (repeating the same words); and then (under the sixth section of that statute) with "hanging up hides, taken out of the woose to dry, separate and apart from hides taken out to dry on a former day; and a rule to set aside a verdict found for the crown on those counts, so charging the offence, and entering it on others charging another offence, subjecting the party to a smaller penalty, on objections that they were not proved by the evidence, was discharged on cause being shown. Att.-Gen. v. Curtice, 9 Price, 459.

A charge under 11 & 12 Will. 3, of "a thing being found in the custody of the defendant," is an information by the attorney-general on the statute:—Held, to be supported by proof of its having been in his possession knowingly and illegally, and exhibited by him as his property at any time and under any circumstances. Att.-Gen. v. Delano, 6 Price, 383.

If the defendant be charged in an information with knowingly receiving divers gallons of foreign spirits, which had been unshipped before the duties imposed by 27 Geo. 3, c. 31, were paid, evidence that several tubs containing them were on different sides of a hedge in a field, that the defendant was there with several other persons, and that he had one tub in his house, is sufficient to convict him of having the whole in his possession, within the meaning of the statute. Rex v. Constable, Nolan, 232.

The master of a homeward-bound vessel sailing up the river Thames, proved to have hired and sent off a boat and men, accompanied by one of his own crew, to bring away certain boxes of foreign and British glass, lying on the bank the Essex coast, to be landed at Woolwich, which they found and brought as far as Gravesend, where the whole was seized by the custom-house officers:—Held, on an information, to be sufficient evidence for a jury of being concerned in unshipping foreign glass without payment of duty, and in unshipping British glass shipped for exportation, subjecting the master of the vessel to the penalties for both those offences, although the whole was one transaction. Att-Gen. v. Towns, 6 Price, 198.

If on the trial of an indictment for publishing an obscene snuff-box, a witness prove that the defendant exhibited to him the box produced on the trial, or a box exactly similar, this is not sufficient, if the witness cannot identify the very box exhibited to him. *Rex v. Exemptions from a penal law may be given in evidence on not guilty; and the negative need not be set forth in the indictment. Rex v. Pemberton, 1 W. Black. 230. And see Rex v. Banks, 1 Esp. 144.

Under an indictment on stat. 9 Ann. c. 14, s. 5, for gaming, a smaller sum than that named in the indictment under a videlicet may be proved. Rex v. Hill, 1 Stark. 359—Ellenborough.

On an indictment on stat. 42 Geo. 3, c. 107, s. 1, for killing deer in an inclosed park, without leave of the owner, the prosecutor must have proved that such consent was not given. Rex v. Rogers, 2 Camp. 654—Lawrence.

Two persons were indicted on the 6 Geo. 3, s. 36, for lopping and topping an ash timber tree, without the consent of the owner; the owner died before the trial, having first given orders for the apprehension of the prisoners on suspicion: the offence was committed at eleven o'clock at night, and the prisoners when detected ran away: the land-steward of the owner proved that he had not given any consent, and did not believe that his master had:—Held, that this was evidence from which the jury might infer that no consent had been given by the owner. Rex v. Hary, 2 C. & P. 458—Bayley.

[The stats. 6 Geo. 3, c. 36, and 42 Geo. 3, c. 107, are now repealed, and in prosecuting those offences it is not necessary to prove that the owner did not consent.]

In cases where there must be proof of the allegation of "without the consent of the owner," the jury may find the party guilty where the evidence satisfies them that the thing occurred without the consent of the owner, and it is not absolutely necessary that the owner should be called as a witness. Rex v. Allen, R. & M. C. C. R. 154.

If an agreement, or other written instrument, be charged to be part of a fraud or other crime, it is immaterial whether it is stamped or not. Rex v. Fowle, 4 C. & P. 592—Tenterden.

Where an indictment is founded on a written instrument, and where the instrument itself is the crime, it is receivable in evidence, although not stamped; but where the indictment is for an offence distinct from the instrument, and the instrument be only introduced collaterally, it cannot be received unless it be properly stamped. Rex v. Smyth, 5 C. & P. 201—Tenterden.

It is not essential that witnesses, who state that they would not believe another person on his oath, should have ever heard such person give evidence upon oath; as the real question is, whether the witnesses have such a knowledge of the person's character and conduct as enables them conscientiously to say that it is impossible to place any reliance on any statement that such person may make. Rex v. Bispham, 4 C. & P. 392—Garrow and Parke.

CXII.—PRACTICE.

1. Addressing the Jury.

In opening a case of felony the counsel for the prosecution ought not to state any particular expressions supposed to have been used by the prisoner, nor the precise words of any confession, but he may state the general effect of what the prisoner said. Rex v. Swatkins and others, 4 C. & P. 548—Bosanquet and Patteson.

A counsel for the prosecution, on opening a case of felony, has in strictness a right to state in his own way a conversation supposed to have passed between the prisoner and a witness whom he intends to call; but, in correct practice, the statement ought to be confined to the general effect of the conversation. Rex v. James Deering and John Atkinson, 5 C. & P. 165—Garrow.

Observations made by a wife to her husband upon a subject, which afterwards become matter of criminal charge against him, and to which he gave no direct reply, may be opened to the jury by the counsel for the prosecution. Rex v. Smithies, 5 P. & C. 332—Gaselee & Parke.

A prosecutor conducting his case in person, and who is to be examined as a witness in support of the indictment, has no right to address the jury as counsel. Rex v. Brice, 2 B. & A. 606; 1 Chit. 352: S P. Rex v. Milne, 2 B. & A. 606, n.

But in the trial of an indictment for perjury, the judge will allow the defendant to address the jury and cross-examine the witnesses, and his counsel to argue points of law, and suggest questions to him for the cross-examination of the witnesses. Rex v. Parkins, 1 C. & P. 548—Abbott; 1 R. & M. 166.

If two defendants are indicted for a conspiracy, the judge will, under certain circumstances, permit one of the defendants, who conducts his own cause, to cross-examine before the counsel for the other defendant, and, after the conclusion of the prosecutor's case, to address the jury and call his witnesses before the counsel for the other defendant opens his case. Rex v. Cooke, 1 C. & P. 321—Park.

If the counsel for the defendant, on the trial of an indictment for a misdemeanour, opens new facts in his address to the jury, and afterwards declines calling witnesses to prove the facts so opened, the counsel for the prosecution is notwithstanding entitled to a general reply. Rex v. Bignold, 4 D. & R. 70; 1 D. & R. N. P. C. 59.

Where, on an information for a misdemeanour, the defendant conducts his own defence, counsel may be heard on any point of law which arises. Rex v. White, 3 Camp. 98—Ellenborough.

But he cannot have the assistance of counsel in examining and cross-examining witnesses, and reserve to himself the right of addressing the jury. Id.

Held, in criminal prosecutions instituted by the crown, that the counsel for the crown have not in all cases the right to a general reply. Rex v. Smith, Peake, 236, n.—Kenyon.

Upon the trial of a criminal information for a misdemeanour the privilege of replying, when the defendant does not call witnesses, is confined to the attorney-general, comme semble. Rex v. Abingdon (Lord), Peake, 236—Kenyon. 1 Esp. 226.

The attorney-general may reply with new matter in collateral issues, though no evidence be given for the prisoner. Rex v. Ratcliffe, 1 W. Black. 3.

Where the attorney-general or king's counsel states that he appears officially to conduct a prosecution on an indictment for misdemeanour, he is entitled to reply, though the defendant calls no witnesses. Rex v. Marsden, 1 M. & M. 439—Tenterden.

2. As to Swearing, and Examining Witnesses, see ante, 849.

3. As to the Trial.

Where the defendant, on being taken into custody on the 8th June, under a judge's warrant issued against him on an indictment for a blasphemous libel, entered into a recognizance to appear and plead within the first eight days of the ensuing Trinity term, and to try the cause at the Middlesex sittings after that term, and pleaded not guilty, but did not give notice of trial or make up the record, either for the sittings after Trinity or Michaelmas term, nor was any rule obtained for respiting the estreating of the recognizances; and the prosecutors gave notice of trial after Trinity and Michaelmas term, but the causes were not tried in either; but such remanents to the sittings after Hilary, and the defendant was ready to take his trial on both these occasions; and the recognizances were estreated in Hilary term, without any notice having been given to the defendant, or any motion made by the prosecutors:—Held, that the estreat was regular, and conformable to the ordinary practice. Rex v. Clark, 5 B. & A. 738.

On an indictment against several persons, the counsel for the prosecution has a right, before opening his case, to the acquittal of any defendant he intends to call as a witness. Rex v. Randall, 1 R. & M. 401—Abbott. And see Rex v. Kroehl, 2 Stark. 343: and 11 East, 313, n.

It is not imperative on a commissioner of jail delivery to discharge all the prisoners in the jail who were not indicted; it being discretionary in him to continue on their commitments such prisoners as appeared to him committed for trial, but against whom the witnesses did not appear, having been bound over to the sessions. Ans. R. & R. C. C. 173.

Prisoners triable under special commission may be discharged by jail delivery. Rex v. Platt, 1 Leach, C. C. 157, 170.

A prisoner in custody under a defective commitment may be discharged under a jail delivery. Id.

Where indictments were found against a prisoner at the quarter sessions of the N. E. of Yorkshire, and transmitted to the assizes by the justices at the sessions:—Held, that although the indictments were not removed by certiorari, the judge of assizes should try the prisoner on the indictments, and he should not be discharged by proclamation without such trial. Rex v. Webbrell, R. & R. C. C. 381.

Although the counsel for the prosecution of a prisoner has closed his case, and the prisoner's counsel has pointed out a defect therein, the judge is at liberty to put what questions he may think fit to answer the objection. Rex v. Benant, R. & R. C. C. 136.

Whether, on the trial of an information to recover penalties under the game laws, it is necessary that a defendant in custody, who has not employed either attorney or counsel, shall be brought into court at the time of the trial, and if it is necessary that he should, whether he shall be brought up by an order of the judge of the Prius, or by habeas corpus—quære. Dennis v. Birt, 1 C. & P. 439—Littledale.

In indictments for misdemeanours, in the case of private prosecutions, when both the defendant and the prosecutor have brought down their records, and entered them with the marshal, and the defendant's stood first, and the prosecutor's lower in the list:—Held, that the trial must be taken according to the order of entry in the marshal's list. Rex v. Halse, 1 R. & M. 20—Abbott.

4. Trial where Indictment not good.

A judge at Nisi Prius will not take notice of an objection to an indictment, although it fully appears on the face of the record. Rex v. Souter, 2 Stark. 423—Abbott.

A jury sworn on an indictment for a forcible entry, which was clearly bad in point of law, as there was no averment that the entry was made manu forti, and no conclusion contra formam statuti, may be discharged by the judge from trying the indictment, as the defendant ought either to have demurred or moved to quash it. Rex v. Deacon, 1 R. & M. 27—Abbott.

An indictment consisting of two counts, one for a riot, indorsed by the jury "ignoramus," the other for an assault, returned "billa vera," was held good. Rex v. Fieldhouse, Cowp. 325.

A judge at Nisi Prius may refuse to try an indictment clearly bad in point of law. An indictment for perjury, not averring the matters falsely sworn to be material, nor showing them to be so, is within this authority. Rex v. Tremaine, 5 D. & R. 413; 3 B. & C. 761; 1 R. & M. 147—Garrow.

At Nisi Prius, the judge refused to try an indictment for perjury, on the ground of the gross imperfection of the record; and the defendant being again indicted for the same cause, was found guilty, but obtained a new trial in K. B. Instead of taking down the old record again, the prosecutor preferred a third indictment, and removed it into the Court of K. B.:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to have the proceedings stayed, until the costs of the former proceedings were paid by the prosecutor. Rex v. Tremaine, 8 D. & R. 590.

Counsel are not allowed to argue at length at Nisi Prius the invalidity of an indictment for the purpose of inducing the court to refuse to try it. But it is sometimes convenient for counsel to suggest a point on which an indictment is clearly bad, to save the time of the court. Rex v. Abraham, 2 M. & M. 7—Tenterden.

5. Postponing Trial.

If, in a case of felony, a witness for the prosecution is too ill to attend the assizes, this is a good ground for postponing the trial, but will not authorize the reading the deposition of the witness taken before the magistrate. Rex v. Savage, 5 C. & P. 143—Patteson.

No putting off a trial on a collateral issue, unless the defendant will purge himself of the accusation by affidavit. Rex v. Ratcliffe, 1 W. Black. 3.

Trial of information postponed on application by rule, enlarged to the last day of the term, on the ground of absence of a material witness, on payment by defendant of such costs incurred by the crown in preparing for the trial of this cause at the next ensuing sittings as would not serve again, and of the crown appearing upon this application. Att.-Gen. v. Phillips, 13 Price, 592.

A defendant in an information may apply by motion to the court, trial given, on the material witness, upon the necessary statement. 13 Price, 258.

An application for last day of term, was on notice of trial set, and the rule was made, nor would they make defendant should pay as would not do.

The court of Exchequer trial of an information defendant, on the ground of examine witnesses, turned, if they think sufficient time for its return. 3 Price, 221.

If there have been between the first prosecutor and the filing him, and during that on his duty, as well that court will post. Att.-Gen. v. Thacker,

Where an information against an army agent, counts, from 1792 to the present account, by clear having been overruled, amend the plea, and that the attorney-general, might be ordered to pay, accounts, &c., rendered by the defendant there deposited, and were material to his the particular proceedings upon the information the documents were. Brooksbank, 1 Y. & J.

A defendant indicted for misdemeanours committed in a public capacity, 3, c. 85, is not entitled to an affidavit in the country a trial upon the absence put off his trial till return damus to the courts, witnesses, which are such cases at the discretion of the Bench; but he must show special grounds by affidavit to induce them to think that to be examined are material to the prosecutor in such to writs of mandamus. Att.-Gen. v. Jones, 8 East, 31.

The court of Exchequer application for a bill of payment. Att.-Gen. v. Lambirth, 5

A trial will not be put off on the ground of absence of a material witness, if the witness is not suspicious, and the witness resident abroad, never likely to return to England. Rex v. D'Eon, 3 Burr. 1513; 1 W. Black. 510.

But a trial will be put off till a commission can go to examine a material witness, who is out of England, and has refused to attend the trial. Id.

An issue upon the identity of a person is to be tried instanter. Rex v. Rogers, 3 Burr. 1809.

A judge at the assizes may postpone a trial until the next assizes, if he finds the principal witnesses wholly incompetent to take an oath from ignorance, and order the witness to be instructed in the mean time by a clergyman in the principles of his duty, and the nature and obligation of an oath. Rex v. White, 1 Leach, C. C. 430.

In a case of manslaughter, after the jury were charged it was ascertained that the surgeon who examined the body was absent, the prisoner's counsel asked that the jury should be discharged:—Held, that if the prisoner asked that the jury should be discharged, the judge had authority to order it to be done. Rex v. Stokes, 6 C. & P. 151—Tindal and Gurney.

If the trial of an indictment for felony is postponed on account of the illness of a witness for the prisoner, the prisoner is never required to pay the costs of the prosecutor. Rex v. Hunter, 3 C. & P. 591—Park.

Where the trial of a case of felony is postponed, the court will not make any order for the expenses till after the trial has actually taken place. Rex v. Hunter, 3 C. & P. 541—Park.

If the trial of a prisoner indicted for felony be postponed, on the ground of the absence of the prosecutor who is a material witness for the prosecution, the prisoner will not be allowed his costs, but the judge will discharge him on his own recognizance. Rex v. Crowe, 4 C. & P. 251—Littledale.

6. Illness of Prisoner during Trial.

If a prisoner indicted for a felony, with whom the jury are charged, be by sudden illness during the trial rendered incapable of remaining at the bar, the jury may be discharged from the trial of that indictment, and the prisoner, on his recovery, tried by another jury. Rex v. Stevenson, 2 Leach, C. C. 546.

If at the assizes a prisoner is tried for a misdemeanour under the commission of jail delivery, and during the trial becomes ill, and is obliged to be assisted out of court, the judge will discharge the jury; and the consent of his counsel, that the trial shall proceed in his absence, is considered not sufficient to authorize the trial to proceed. If the prisoner recovers during the assize, he may be tried, the whole of the proceedings of the trial being commenced de novo. Rex v. Streek, 2 C. & P. 413—Park.

7. Practice on other Points.

Service of an order of a court of general jail delivery, calling on the editor of a newspaper "to answer for contemptuously publishing the proceedings of a trial there," at the office where the newspaper was published, is good service within the 38 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 12, and the editor not having appeared, the fine was held to be properly imposed upon him in his absence. Rex v. Clement, 4 B. & A. 218.

Exhibiting in an assize town an inflammatory publication, respecting a crime about to be tried at the assizes, is not a contempt which the judge can interfere to stop, by committing the party exhibiting. Rex v. Gilham, 1 M. & M. 165—Littledale and Gaselee.

The court will direct money found upon a prisoner to be restored to him before trial, if it appear by the depositions that it is in no way material to the charge upon which he is to be tried. Rex v. Barnett, 3 C. & P. 600—Park.

The court of K. B. will not grant a habeas corpus to discharge out of custody a person who has been convicted of libel, at the commission of oyer and terminer, at the Old Bailey, on the ground that when the verdict was returned only one commissioner was present instead of two, as required by law. Rex v. Carlile, 4 C. & P. 415.

CXIII. VERDICT.

The jury cannot be charged at the same time to try the two issues of "autrefois acquit" and "not guilty." Rex v. Roche, 1 Leach, C. C. 134.

Though a verdict is recorded, yet, if it appear promptly, that it is not according to the intention of the jury, it may be vacated and set right. Rex v. Parkin, 1 R. & M. C. C. 45.

Where, upon an information for printing and publishing a seditious libel, the jury found the defendant "guilty of printing and publishing only," a venire facias de novo was ordered. Rex v. Woodfall, 5 Burr. 2661. And see Rex v. Williams, 2 Camp. 646.

If two persons are jointly indicted for obstructing a highway, and on the evidence no joint act of obstruction appears, the judge will, as soon as the case for the prosecution is closed, put the prosecutor's counsel to elect which of them they would proceed against, and then take an acquittal for the other. Rex v. Lynn, 1 C. & P. 528—Littledale.

If two defendants are indicted for jointly making a corrupt contract with a third person for the procuring an East-India cadetship, one of the defendants may be convicted, though the other is acquitted. Rex v. Taggart, 1 C. & P. 201—Abbott.

CXIV. NEW TRIAL.

The 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, s. 8, does not apply to criminal causes, so that there can be no rule for a new trial, without mutual consent. Anon. 1 Burr. 252: S. P. Rex v. Redman, 1 Ld. Ken. 384.

A verdict for the defendant in a criminal prosecution shall not be set aside. Rex v. Præd, 4 Burr. 2256.

No new trial can be granted in cases of felony. Rex v. Mowbey, 6 T. R. 638.

But with respect to misdemeanours, it is entirely discretionary in the court whether they will grant or refuse a new trial. Id.

Although it was formerly held, that in all cases of a criminal nature no new trial should be granted; and therefore an application was refused when the defendant had been acquitted on an indictment for not repairing the highway. Rex v. Silverton, 1 Wils. 298.

Not granted where the charges are of a criminal nature, and the defendant has been once acquitted. Anon. Lofft, 451.

Where a special case has been reserved, a new trial has been granted, without previously setting aside the former verdict. Id.

The grant of a new trial supposes either that the verdict was against evidence, or that evidence was improperly received. Rex v. Curtil, Lofft, 156.

And quære, whether a new trial may not be granted on proper grounds in criminal cases not of felony? Id.

So, a new trial will be granted for a defendant in a criminal case upon a report of the judge and affidavits of the jury, that the verdict was taken contrary to their meaning and to the judge's direction in point of law. Rex v. Simmonds, 1 Wils. 329.

No new trial can be granted on an indictment for perjury, where the defendant was acquitted. Rex v. Brice, 2 B. & A. 606; 1 Chit. 352.

A new trial may be granted in an information in nature of a quo warranto. Rex v. Francis, 2 T. R. 484.

Where the defendants in a joint information employ two different attorneys and clerks in court, if notice of trial be served on one of them only, and a verdict be obtained, the court of Exchequer will set it aside, and award a new trial as to both, notwithstanding the offence charged be one which would affect them both as partners in trade, the costs of the trial already had to abide the event of the second verdict. Att.-Gen. v. Stevens, 3 Price, 72.

The court of Exchequer will not, after verdict, arrest a judgment on affidavit that a bill has been found against a witness indicted for perjury on a material point of evidence given by him on the trial. Nor does it seem that a conviction would be sufficient ground for sending a cause back to a jury for re-investigation. Att.-Gen. v. Woodhead, 2 Price, 3.

Where, upon trial of an indictment for a misdemeanour, a witness examined before the grand jury was not examined at the trial, and a witness not examined before the grand jury was examined at the trial:—Held, that it was not such a surprise upon the defendants as entitled them to a new trial. Rex v. Hollingberry, 6 D. & R. 345.

Upon the trial of an indictment for a misdemeanour, which continued more than one day, the jury, without the knowledge or consent of the defendants, separated at night:—Held, that the verdict was not therefore void; and that it formed no ground for granting a new trial, it not appearing that there was any suspicion of proper communication having taken place. v. Kinnear, 2 B. & A. 462.

New trial refused after verdict for defendant upon not guilty to an indictment for a highway. Rex v. Mann, 4 M. & S.

A new trial was refused after a verdict of guilty, upon an indictment for not repairing a road, where the verdict did not bind the defendant. Rex v. Burbon, 5 M. & S. 392.

Where the defendant has been acquitted on an indictment for not repairing a road, the court will not grant a new trial; yet they will, in very special circumstances, suspend the judgment, so as to enable the parties to bring the question reconsidered upon another indictment without the prejudice of the former indictment. Rex v. Wandsworth, 1 B. & A. 63; 2 Cl.

Not granted even for a misdirection, where the defendant was acquitted on an indictment for a misdemeanour. Rex v. Cohen, 1 Stark. 516—Ellenborough.

It is not a misdirection if the judge directs the jury to their own knowledge of any particular facts which have been proved, as matter of fact only, and not as matter of evidence. v. Sutton, 4 M. & S. 532.

The defendant having been indicted for obstruction for erecting stalls in the High-street, the removal of the market, the judge at the trial left it to the jury to say whether the stalls were owners of this market, adding that if they were, the right of removal was in the grant; the jury having found in the affirmative, the court refused to grant a new trial. v. Cotterill, 1 B. & A. 67.

The court refused to grant a rule nisi for a new trial after a verdict for the defendant on an indictment for non-repair of a church fence, which was moved on the ground that the verdict being against evidence. Rex v. 6 East, 315; 2 Smith, 406.

Refused on an indictment for killing because the indictment charged it to have been committed casually and by misfortune, arising from carelessness. Rex v. Grey, Lofft, 391, 42.

If on an information the jury find a verdict of guilty to a sum certain, according to a calculation, and does not warrant the amount, it is a ground for a new trial. Rex v. Grimwood, 1 Price, 36.

But if all the jury were not present at the verdict of guilty was delivered against the defendant for the publication of a libel, and it is certain whether they all heard such verdict pronounced by the foreman, the court will, with the consent of the defendant, grant a new trial. v. Wooller, 2 Stark. 111—Abbott.

Upon the trial of an information for a misdemeanour, only ten jurymen appeared, and two talesmen were sworn to make up the jury. It is no ground for a new trial, that two of the attending special jurymen named in the indictment had not been summoned, though it appears that this fact was unknown to the defendant until after the trial. Rex v. Hunt, 4 B. & A. 430.

Where, on the trial of an indictment for jury, it was necessary to swear talesmen from the common-jury panel, and one J. Williams being called, his son R. H. Williams (at the request of his father, and without collusion) appeared for him, and was sworn and served on the jury, he not being of age, neither having a qualification, nor being on the panel:—Held, that there was a mis-trial, and that a rule obtained for a new trial must be made absolute. Rex v. Tremaine, 7 D. & R. 684; 5 B. & C. 254.

Where several defendants are tried at the same time for a misdemeanour, and some are acquitted and some convicted, the court may grant a new trial as to those convicted, if they think the conviction improper. Rex v. Marobey, 6 T. R. 619.

A defendant, convicted on a criminal prosecution, cannot move for a new trial after the first four days of the next term; though, if it appear to the court at any time before judgment, that injustice has been done by the verdict, they will interpose and grant a new trial. Rex v. Holt, 5 T. R. 486.

All the defendants convicted upon an indictment for a conspiracy must be present in court when a motion for a new trial is made on behalf of any of them. Rex v. Teal, 11 East, 307; S. P. Rex v. Askew, 3 M. & S. 9; Rex v. Cochrane (Lord), 3 M. & S. 10, n.

Where a defendant convicted of a misdemeanour at the assizes was committed to the county jail to abide the judgment of K. B., and was detained for no other cause; on a suggestion of his inability to pay the expense of bringing himself up, the court allowed a motion for a new trial to be made without his personal attendance. Rex v. Boltz, 6 D. & R. 65.

It seems that the consent of the counsel for the prosecution cannot dispense with the rule which requires the presence of defendants convicted upon a criminal proceeding, during a motion for a new trial. Rex v. Fielder, 2 D. & R. 46.

A defendant in the actual custody of the marshal upon criminal process, in consequence of an indictment in this court, need not be present when a motion for a new trial is made on his behalf. Rex v. Hollingberry, 6 D. & R. 344; 4 B. & C. 329.

Affidavits of new facts are not in general admissible in criminal cases, on a motion for a new trial, unless there was some surprise on the defendant at the trial: but affidavits of the death of a person may be received to account for his not having been examined as a witness. Rex v. Bowditch, 2 Chit. 278.

CXV. JUDGMENT AND EXECUTION.

As to MURDER, see ante, p. 744.—See Rex v. Somerton, ante, p. 777.

An act from its passing repeals a former act, which ousted clergy from a certain offence, and imposes a new punishment on the same offence from and after its passing. An offence committed before the passing of the new act, but not tried till after, is not liable to be punished under either of these statutes. Rex v. McKensie, R. & R. C. C. 429.

A statute which takes away clergy from the offender, and all who assist him, includes aides and abettors present. Rex v. Gregory, 1 R. & M. 29—Bayley; R. & R. C. C. 343.

A person was convicted of manslaughter in Feb. 1819, and had his clergy. In April following, he was indicted for the murder of another person, but again found guilty of manslaughter; the act which occasioned death in both cases was on the same day, and at the same time:—Held, that the former allowance of clergy protected him against any punishment on the second indictment. Rex v. Jennings, R. & R. C. C. 388.

The record in a case of felony at the quarter sessions, after stating that the defendant was indicted for stealing oats, to which they pleaded not guilty, and a verdict of guilty thereon added, "that because it appeared to the justices, that after the jury had retired, one of them had separated from the other jurors, and conversed respecting his verdict with a stranger, it was considered that the verdict was bad," and it was therefore quashed, and a venire de novo awarded to the next sessions: and it then proceeded to set out the appearance of the parties at such sessions, and the trial and conviction by the same jury, "whereupon all and singular the premises being seen and considered, judgment was given," &c.:—Held, on a writ of error, that such judgment was right. Rex v. Fowler, 4 B. & A. 273.

If a defendant demur to an indictment, whether in abatement or otherwise, the court will not give judgment against him to answer or, but final judgment. Rex v. Gibson, 8 East, 111.

After conviction on a criminal information, to which objections were taken, the defendant must stand committed, pending the consideration of the judgment, unless the prosecutor expressly consent to his standing out on bail. Rex v. Waddington, 1 East, 159.

Where upon an indictment an act is charged to have been committed feloniously, and the jury find a verdict of guilty, although the charge so laid, does not amount to felony; yet, if it amounts in law to a misdemeanour, the court will pronounce judgment as for that offence. Rex v. Scofield, Cald. 397.

The first count of an indictment charged an assault with intent to ravish; the second a common assault. The jury found the defendant guilty of the misdemeanour and offence in the said indictment specified, and the court adjured him, for the said misdemeanour, to be imprisoned two years and kept to hard labour:—Held, upon writ of error, that the word misdemeanour was nomen collectivum, and that the finding of the jury, therefore, was, in effect, that the defendant was guilty of the whole matter charged in the indictment, and consequently that the judgment was warranted by the verdict. Rex v. Powell, 2 B. & Ad. 75.

When a defendant is brought up for judgment his acts subsequent to the trial may be considered either by way of aggravating or mitigating the punishment even though they be separate and distinct offences, for which he may be afterwards punished. But in such cases the court will take care not to inflict a greater punishment than the principal charge itself will warrant. Rex v. Withers, 3 T. R. 428.

Affidavits are not admissible in aggravation in a case of felony, although the record has been removed into K. B. by certiorari. Rex v. Ellis, 9 D. & R. 174; 6 B. & C. 145.

The compliance of a party, convicted of a nuisance with the prosecutor's proposal for payment of costs, goes in mitigation of a fine. Rex v. Martha Gray, 2 Ld. Ken. 307.

Where the court refuse to discharge a recognizance, they have power to mitigate the penalty. In re Hooper, M'Clel. 578.

A witness being indicted for perjury is not a reason for postponing judgment against the person convicted. Rex v. Haydon, 1 W. Black. 404; 3 Burr. 1387.

Indictment against A., B., C., and D., for a conspiracy, charging that they conspired together, with divers other persons unknown. A. and B. were tried. A. was found "not guilty," and B. was found "guilty of conspiring with C." C. had pleaded before the trial of A. & B., but neither he or D. appeared to take their trials. On motion to arrest the judgment against B., or suspend it till C. should be tried:—Held, that the verdict was conclusive against B. as a general verdict of guilty, and that judgment might be given against him without reference to what the verdict might be on the trial of C. Rex v. Cooke, 7 D. & R. 673; 5 B. & C. 538.

A regular judgment in a crown cause cannot be set aside on payment of costs. Rex v. Hunter, 1 Wills. 463.

A judgment of imprisonment against a defendant to commence in future, i. e. from and after the determination of an imprisonment to which he was before sentenced for another offence, is good in law. Wilkes v. Rex (in error), 4 Bro. P. C. 367.

Where a fixed fine by statute for a misdemeanour is miscalculated in the verdict and the judgment, the court, upon a rule served on all parties interested, will alter the rule for judgment against the prisoner, and the entry roll, as to so much of the punishment, but they will not alter the judgment and verdict. Rex v. Stevens, 3 Smith, 366.

A sentence of corporal punishment cannot be pronounced on a person in his absence. Rex v. Harm, 3 Burr. 1786; S. P. Anon, Lofft, 400.

But on certain occasions the court will dispense with the personal appearance of delinquents to receive judgment. Anon, Lofft, 28.

The court refused to dispense with the personal appearance of the defendants to receive judgment in a case of aggravated assault. Anon. Lofft, 42.

Incedon*, 13 E. Commerell, 4 M. & S.

The court cannot on the expense of bringing up to receive judgment if the defendant is to own expense, they will sentence. Rex v. Boltz, 334.

Where a defendant, ment for a libel, was co stance of the prosecution wards bring him up for the prayer of the defendant his absence. Id.

When a defendant is after verdict, the defendant first read, and then after which, the defendant heard, and lastly the counsel Rex v. Bunts, 2 T. R.

But where a defendant tence, after judgment affidavits shall be first after which the counsel be heard, and lastly the ant; if no affidavits shall for the defendant shall the counsel for the prosecution

Where several defendants sentence, some after others after verdict, they be heard in mitigation, the crown in aggravation & R. 406.

If a defendant would move in arrest of judgment after conviction for a misdemeanour, he must be present in court. Rex v. Spragg, 2 Burr. 928.

Judgment for a trespass in taking away an instrument which concerns the realty cannot be given on an indictment for stealing it. Rex v. Westbeer, 1 Leach, C. C. 14.

Where an indictment charges an act to have been done with a felonious intent, and the jury find a verdict of guilty; if the charge as laid do not in law amount to a felony, but is only a misdemeanour, the court will pronounce judgment as for the latter offence. Rex v. Scofield, 2 East, P. C. 1028; Cald. 397.

Judgment for a misdemeanour cannot be given on an indictment for felony, bad for want of a material averment of a fact which makes the offence, which would otherwise be a misdemeanour, into a felony. Rex v. Turner, 1 R. & M. C. C. 47.

A man upon whom sentence of death has passed, ought not, while under that sentence, to be brought up to receive judgment for another felony, although he was under that sentence when he was tried for the other felony, and did not plead his prior attainder. Rex v. Brady, R. & R. C. C. 268.

The time and place of the execution of a convicted felon form no part of the sentence. Rex v. Doyle, 1 Leach, C. C. 67.

It is not the practice of any court of criminal jurisdiction to make the day upon which execution of any corporal punishment is to be done a part of the original sentence. The time of inflicting such punishment is usually left either to the discretion of the officer to whom the execution of the sentence belongs, or is appointed by a particular rule of the court which awards the punishment. Atkinson v. Rex (in error), 3 Bro. P. C. 517.

A peeress convicted of a clergyable offence shall be discharged without burning or imprisonment. Kingston's (Duchess) case, 1 Leach, C. C. 146; 1 East, P. C. 468.

A sentence of transportation may be a second time passed upon a prisoner, although, the term for which he was before transported is unexpired. Rex v. Batle, 1 Leach, C. C. 441.

Upon an indictment for a misdemeanour under the 22 Geo. 3, c. 58, the punishment should be fine, imprisonment, or whipping; imprisonment and fine, or imprisonment and whipping, cannot be inflicted. Rex v. Howell, R. & R. C. C. 253.

Although it appears, upon a case reserved, that evidence has been admitted at the trial which ought not to have been received; yet, if the judges are of opinion that there is ample evidence to support the indictment, after rejecting such improper evidence, they will not set aside the conviction. Rex v. Ball, R. & R. C. C. 132; 1 Camp. 324.

Where, on the trial of an offence, evidence had been received which was not strictly admissible, and the prisoner was convicted upon that and other evidence, but the case appeared otherwise clear against the prisoner:—Held, that this was no ground to stay execution. Rex v. Oldroyd, R. & R. C. C. 88; S. P. Rex v. Tinckler, 1 East, P. C. 354.

So where the credit of the witness is impeached. Id.

If a prisoner did not pray his clergy in a clergyable felony, and sentence of death is passed upon him, he might be brought up at a subsequent assizes and have his clergy. Rex v. Armstrong, 1 R. & M. C. C. 21.

A convict might be allowed the benefit of a general pardon though he had neglected to pray it in proper time. Rex v. Haines, 1 Leach, C. C. 40.

Semble, that if a person be tried at the assizes on an indictment removed by certiorari, the judge would, under very special circumstances, receive affidavits in mitigation, before he proceeded to pass sentence, under the stat. 1 W. 4, c. 70, s. 9, but not in ordinary cases. Rex v. Cox, 4 C. & P. 538—Patteson.

By the stat. 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 70, s. 9, upon trials for felony or misdemeanour on a K. B. record, judgment may be pronounced at the assizes, and shall have the effect of a judgment in the court above, unless the court in the first six days of term grant a rule nisi for a new trial or for amending the judgment. A defendant on such record having been sentenced at the assizes cannot apply to the court to amend the judgment by diminishing the punishments upon ordinary affidavits in mitigation, or without showing some specific defect in the sentence, or some matter which could not have been adduced at the assizes. Rex v. Lloyd, 4 B. & Ad. 135.

The king's coroner has authority to receive fines imposed on defendants convicted on indictments or criminal information in the court of King's Bench. Rex v. Shackle, M'Clell. & Y. 514.

It is not necessary to specify the names of the grand jury in the record of the caption of an indictment: it is enough to aver that the indictment was found by twelve good and lawful men for the party indicted has an opportunity of resorting to the original caption, where the names of the jurors appear. Aylett v. Rex (in error), 3 Bro. P. C. 529.

CXVI. ERROR.

After judgment the record can only be removed by a writ of error. Rex v. Sater, 1 T. R. 373.

Where there was in a case of perjury a judgment, it was ordered that the defendant should be transported "to the coast of New South Wales or some one or other of the islands adjacent" for seven years. This was held, on error, to be no judgment, and a procedendo was awarded that the court below should give judgment, and in the mean time the defendant was bailed. Rex v. Kenworthy, 3 D. & R. 173; 1 B. & C. 711.

A return to a writ of error, directed to the commissioners of oyer and terminer of the city of London, set out the record of an indictment found against the defendant before the lord mayor and others, and stated that he was tried upon the said indictment by a jury of the country at the next session holden before the lord mayor and several of the judges, aldermen, recorder, and others, assigned by certain letters patent under the great seal directed to them, or any two or more of them, to inquire of certain offences; and that he was, by the verdict of such jury, found guilty, and that thereunto judgment was given by the court against him. Upon this return the defendant assigned, as errors in law, that the judgment was insufficient, and should have been for the defendant, and, as errors in fact, first, that when the jury gave their verdict there was but one of the justices named in the commission present in court; and, secondly, that the verdict was not at the time it was so given entered of record. The king's coroner and attorney answered, "in nullo est erratum," and prayed that the judgment might be affirmed:—Held, as to the first error in fact, that, as it appeared by the record that the verdict was given at a session holden before several of the commissioners and justices, the plaintiff in error could not be allowed to aver, in contradiction of the record, that only one of the justices was present when the jury gave their verdict, and the answer "in nullo est erratum" is no admission of the fact assigned for error, unless it could lawfully be assigned, and is well assigned in point of form:—Held, also, that the second error in fact assigned was no error, inasmuch as it was impossible that a verdict should be recorded at the time when it was given, the recording of it being necessarily an act subsequent to the delivery of the verdict by a jury. Rex v. Carlile, 2 B. & Ad. 362.

Error was brought in K. B. upon a judgment at the Old Bailey, and one ground assigned was that a material fact stated on the record was not true. The court held such an averment inadmissible, and affirmed the judgment. The fact being as alleged by the defendant below, the court of oyer and terminer afterwards ordered the record to be amended, and their clerk, by a rule of the court of K. B., came into the latter court and made the amendment there. Upon motion afterwards that the case might be again set down for argument:—Held, that the court of K. B. could not rehear it after the expiration of the term in which judgment was given, though the attorney-general consented, and that the only remedy was by writ of error to the House of Lords. Rex v. Carlile, 2 B. & Ad. 971.

CXVII.—COPY OF INDICTMENT.

A prisoner upon his acquittal is not entitled ex debito justitiæ to a copy of his indictment. Rex v. Brangan, 1 Leach, C. C. 27.

The court will not grant a copy where the acquittal arises from the incompetency of a witness. Rex v. Quick, 1 Leach, C. C. 28, n.

In the case of an acquittal, on a prosecution for felony, the prisoner is not entitled to a copy of the indictment in such cases, without an order of the court. Rex v. Kelly, 1 W. Bl. 104.

But he is so entitled as a matter of right to the court. P. 952; 1 Phil. Ev. 104.

A prisoner is entitled to a copy of his indictment to enable him to prepare his defence. Rex v. Vandercom, 1 P. C. 519.

A copy of an indictment of an action for the court will not be granted if it was obtained by the plaintiff. M. & R. 275.

If the plaintiff, in a prosecution, offer to produce a copy of the indictment, the court will not receive it, unless it is a copy of the original, or a copy of such record as is produced out such authority, a copy of it to the court, in contempt of court. Nisi Prius would not receive it in evidence, Gatt v. Tollervey, 1 P. C. 519.

Where a party has obtained a copy of the indictment by the virtue of the attorney-general's copy, and the court refused to receive it, the plaintiff may move for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain a copy so obtained. R. 118; 10 B. & C. 118.

Quære, that the plaintiff is entitled to a copy of the record.

7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 64, repeals the statute 18 Geo. 3, c. 1, s. 3; 18 Geo. 3, c. 1, s. 3, in far as they relate to

In frivolous cases the court will not allow the prosecutor to be bound over to prosecute. Powell, 1 C. & F. 104.

The statute 58 Geo. 3, c. 15, s. 1, empowers the court to order the prosecutor or witness to be bound over to prosecute, and who shall be bound over to prosecute a person accused of felony, and who shall be bound over to prosecute the costs of prosecuting the grand jury; and who shall be bound over to prosecute their loss of time and expenses. Where a person is bound over to prosecute and incurred an expense in endeavouring to bribe tice, and had succeeded in apprehending them:—Held, that under that statute he was not entitled to any compensation for the money so expended. Rex v. Austen, 1 D. & R. N. P. C. 24—Park.

Where the treasurer of the county of Surry refused to pay the expenses of a witness in a case of felony, pursuant to an order from the borough of Southwark sessions, under the 58 Geo. 3, c. 70, the proper remedy was held to be by indictment, or by an attachment in the inferior court, and not by mandamus. Rex v. Surry Treasurer, 1 Chit. 650.

The costs of a prosecution in the borough court of Liverpool, for a felony committed within the borough, may be ordered by the court to be paid by the treasurer of the county of Lancaster, the borough of Liverpool not having exclusive jurisdiction, nor any treasurer like a county treasurer, nor any rate in the nature of a county rate, but contributing as a part of the county to the county rate. Rex v. Johnson, 4 M. & S. 515.

The expenses of a witness going to identify stolen property cannot be allowed, as the statute 58 Geo. 3, c. 70, is confined to the allowance of the expenses of the prosecution and apprehension. Rex v. Millington, 1 C. & P. 83—Hullock.

The stat. 18 Geo. 3, c. 19, which enabled the court in certain cases to make an order on the treasurer of the "county, riding, or division," where the offence was committed, to pay the prosecutor and his witnesses their expenses, extended to inferior districts having jurisdiction to try felons, and raising their own rates similar to the county rates. Rex v. Myers, 6 T. R. 237. And see Rex v. Johnson, 4 M. & S. 515.

Where an indictment for felony is removed by a certiorari, and tried at Nisi Prius, neither the judge at Nisi Prius nor the court of K. B. has authority to award costs to the prosecutor under 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 22, whether the indictment be removed by the prosecutor or the prisoner. Rex v. Treasurer of Exeter, 5 M. & R. 167.

On the trial of an indictment for manslaughter, the surgeon will only be allowed for his attendance on the trial, and not for his fee for opening the body by order of the coroner. Rex v. Taylor, 5 C. & P. 301—Littledale.

The judge, on a trial for murder, has no power to allow the expenses of the witnesses for their attendance at the coroner's inquest. Rex v. Rees, 5 C. & P. 302—Littledale.

A prosecutor and his witnesses were bound by recognizances to prosecute and give evidence at the assizes. They attended there, and preferred an indictment, which was found. The prisoner had been by mistake discharged by proclamation at an adjourned sessions which preceded the assizes, and had absconded. The judge allowed the expenses. But semble, that, if the prosecutor and witnesses had merely appeared at the assizes, and had not preferred any indictment, the judge would have had no power to allow any expenses. Rex v. Robey, 5 C. & P. 552—Taunton.

2. Expenses of Prosecution in Misdemeanors.

7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 22.]—Where the prosecutor of an indictment for a misdemeanor found at sessions removes it into K. B. by certiorari, he is not entitled to costs under 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 23. Rex v. Richards, 2 M. & R. 405; 8 R. & C. 420: S. P. Rex v. Johnson, Car. C. L. 110; R. & M. C. C. 173.

Justices of the peace at the quarter sessions have no authority, by an act of parliament, to order the costs of a prosecution for a misdemeanor, carried on under the direction of magistrates, to be allowed out of the county rates. Rex v. W. R. Yorkshire, 7 T. R. 377.

Where to an indictment at the assizes for a misdemeanor the defendants consented to plead guilty, upon an understanding that they were not to be brought up for judgment; and no stipulation or agreement having been then expressly made by the prosecutor for the payment of his costs:—Held, that he was not afterwards entitled to a rule on the crown side to have his costs taxed. Rex v. Rawson, 4 D. & R. 194; 2 R. & C. 598.

3. Costs in other Cases.

The court of K. B. has no power to award costs to prosecutors by indictment, nor to compel a defendant to go before the master. Rex v. Richardson, 6 D. & R. 141.

A judge could not certify for the costs of a special jury, under stat. 24 Geo. 2, c. 18, s. 1, in criminal cases. Rex v. Abingdon (Lord), 1 Esp. 226—Kenyon.

Costs for not going to trial shall be paid to a defendant, by the course of the court, on informations for misdemeanours, where the prosecutor does not countermand his notice of trial in time. Rex v. Heydon, 3 Burr. 1304.

But a prosecutor is not to pay costs for not going to trial according to his notice, if it be not occasioned by his own default. Rex v. Righton, 3 Burr. 1694.

If a sessions' case be sent down to be re-tried, and the prosecutor abandon it when it is returned, the court will discharge his recognizance for the costs given under stat. 5 Geo. 2, c. 19, but if he dispute the amended order, they will not. Rex v. Edgeworth, 4 T. R. 218.

Where there is a new trial, the costs of the trial already had are generally directed to abide the event of the second verdict. Att.-Gen. v. Stephens, 3 Price, 72.

A prisoner suing as a party grieved on the Habeas Corpus Act, and having been refused a copy of his warrant of commitment, is entitled to costs if he recover a penalty. Ward v. Smi. 1 H. Black. 10.

If a clerk of assize draw an indictment with unnecessary prolixity, he may be ordered to pay the extraordinary expense. Rex v. Bury, 1 Lush. C. C. 210.

He has no lien on the records in his custody for his fees. Id.

If a clerk of the peace in drawing an indictment introduce unnecessary recitals, the court will order him to pay the expense thereby incurred. Rex v. May, 1 Dougl. 193: S. C. not S. P. 1 T. R. 237, n.

How costs of amending a plea, with liberty to the adverse party to reply de novo, are to be taxed, and what allowance to be made. Rex v. Philipps, 2 Burr. 757.

Where justices of the peace are complained of without reason, they shall have costs. Rex v. Palmer, 2 Burr. 1162.

After a cause is called on, if the defendant puts off the trial on account of the absence of witnesses, he must pay the costs of the day, as well in criminal cases as in civil. Rex v. Doyle, 1 Esp. 125—Kenyon.

Persons indicted for not repairing roads, ratione tenuræ, shall pay the costs of the prosecutor. Rex v. Wingfield, 1 W. Black. 602. And see Rex v. Cheshunt, 1 W. Black. 295.

The sessions, before whom a parish is acquitted upon the trial of an indictment for not repairing a highway, may by their order award C. and E. to pay costs to the parish, although the names of C. and E. be not on the back of the indictment, and although the indictment originated in a presentment of A. and B. constables, whose names are on the indictment; and it is enough if the order is intitled as in the prosecution of C. and E., without showing further that C. and E. are prosecutors; neither need it appear on the face of the order that the indictment was tried, if that appear by the record of the proceedings; and the order is good in form, if it be for the payment of the costs to the solicitor of the parish. Rex v. Commerell, 4 M. & S. 203.

If the judge, on the trial of an indictment for not repairing a road, certify that the defence was frivolous, without also awarding costs in express terms, under stat. 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, the prosecutor is entitled to costs. Rex v. Clifton, 6 T. R. 344. And see Rex v. St. John, Margate, 6 M. & S. 130.

If a person gives notice of his intention to appeal to the quarter sessions against the poor-rate, but do not enter his appeal, the sessions cannot award costs to the other party under the stat. 17 Geo. 2, c. 38. Rex v. Essex, (Justices), 8 T. R. 583.

So the costs to be paid by offenders under stat. 6 G. 1, c. 48, s. 1, must be ascertained by the conviction, or it is bad. Rex v. Hall, Cowp. 60.

So the costs to be paid by offenders under the Stage Coach Act, 50 Geo. 3, c. 48, must be ascertained by the conviction, or it is bad. Rex v. Payne, 4 D. & R. 72.

Though a local act says, that "all moneys paid, expended by, or recovered against the commissioners or their treasurer, &c., by means of an action, prosecution, &c., or appeal for any cause relating to the act, or anything done by or under the authority of the same, shall be defrayed out of the money in the hands of the treasurer;" it does not extend to discharge the commissioners from personal responsibility, in the first instance, for the costs of an appeal awarded to be paid by them, however they may afterwards reimburse themselves out of the fund in the treasurer's hands. Rex v. Kingston, 8 East, 41.

And they may be indicted for non-payment of such costs. Id.

2. After Removal by Certiorari.

[See Rex v. Midlam, and Rex v. Emden, 3 Burr. 1720.]

Where the expenses of an indictment for a misdemeanour are defrayed by subscription, and the nominal prosecutors incur no expense, they are not entitled to costs as prosecutors within 5 W. & M., c. 11, s. 3. Rex v. Cook, 1 M. & R. 526.

Quære, whether the near relations of a person whose body has been disinterred for the purposes of dissection are parties grieved within that statute? Id.

Rated inhabitants of a parish, who were prevented by rioters from entering the vestry-room to attend a meeting called for the purpose of imposing a church-rate, and who afterwards prosecuted the offenders, are parties grieved within the meaning of the stat. 5 W. & M., c. 11, s. 3; and, therefore, entitled to costs, on conviction of the defendants after removal of the indictment by certiorari. Rex v. Thompkins, 2 B. & Ad. 287.

Where a defendant who removes an indictment into K. B. by certiorari is convicted, he shall not pay costs on the stat. 5 & 6 W. & M., c. 11, to the prosecutors. Rex v. Ingleton, 1 Wils. 139.

Under the third section of W. & M., c. 11, for regulating the removal of indictments from the sessions by certiorari, the representatives of the prosecutor are entitled to the costs taxed during his life, though no personal demand was ever made by him. Rex v. Chamberlayne, 1 T. R. 103.

Where a defendant had removed an indictment from the sessions into K. B. by certiorari, and was convicted, but died before he could be brought up for judgment:—Held, that his bail were liable to pay the taxed costs of the prosecution, under 5 & 6 W. & M., c. 11, s. 3. Rex v. Turner, 4 D. & R. 816; 3 B. & C. 160: S. P. Rex v. Finmore, 8 T. R. 409.

Where an indictment was removed by certiorari at the instance of the defendant, and he was found guilty, the costs of conveying him to jail, on his receiving sentence of imprisonment, are reasonable costs within the statute 5 & 6 W. & M., c. 11, s. 3, to be allowed to the prosecutor on the taxation of costs. Rex v. Gilbie, 5 M. & S. 520; 2 Chit. 159.

The court granted a rule to refer it to the master of the Crown Office, to tax in favour of the defendant the costs of a certiorari, the record having been withdrawn without notice. Rex v. —, 2 Chit. 159.

Where on removing an indictment from the sessions, by certiorari, a recognizance is given by two in 20<sup>l</sup>. each, under stat. 5 & 6 W. & M., c.

11, ss. 2, 3, to secure the costs, such recognizance shall not be discharged till all the costs are paid, though they exceed 40*l.* Rex v. Teal, 13 East, 4.

Upon an indictment for perjury, removed into K. B. by certiorari, if the prosecutor gives notice of trial to the defendant, and withdraw his record countermanding his notice in time, he shall pay costs to the defendant. Rex v. Bartrum, 8 East, 269.

If the defendants, in an indictment for not repairing a road, (and which is removed by certiorari), be acquitted for want of prosecution, the court has no power to award costs to the defendants on the ground of its being a vexatious prosecution under stat. 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 65, but the application must be made to the judge at Nisi Prius. Rex v. Chadderton, 5 T. R. 272.

The stat. 5 & 6 W. & M., c. 11, directing, by s. 2, that no certiorari shall be granted on the part of a defendant to remove an indictment for a misdemeanour from the sessions before he shall enter into a recognizance, &c., in 20*l.* to try at the next assizes, &c.; and by s. 3, that, "if the defendant prosecuting such certiorari be convicted, the court of K. B. shall give reasonable costs to the prosecutor, and that the recognizance shall not be discharged till the costs taxed shall be paid;" attaches only upon a defendant convicted by judgment; and therefore if, after a verdict of guilty, the judgment be arrested, no costs can be taxed for the prosecutor. Rex v. Turner, 15 East, 570.

A justice of the peace, who has prosecuted a jailor to conviction for suffering a prisoner to escape, committed by him on a charge of felony, is not entitled to the costs of the conviction under stat. 5 & 6 W. & M., c. 11, s. 3. Rex v. Sharpness, 2 T. R. 47.

Persons dwelling near a steam-engine, which emitted volumes of smoke, affecting their breath, eyes, clothes, furniture, and dwelling-houses, and prosecuting an indictment for it, are parties grieved, and entitled to have their costs taxed under the stat. 5 W. & M., c. 11, s. 3, upon removal of the indictment by certiorari from the sessions into the court by the defendants, and their subsequent conviction. Rex v. Dewnap, 16 East, 194.

The prosecutor of an indictment for obstructing a highway must show himself to be the party grieved, in order to obtain costs under the 5 & 6 W. & M., c. 11, s. 3; therefore, where the prosecutor did not apply for the costs until two years after judgment given, and it did not appear that he had ever used the highway before it was stopped, and whilst it was stopped declared he did not care about it:—Held, that he was not entitled to costs as the party grieved, although the prosecution was at his instance and expense. Rex v. Incedon, 1 M. & S. 268.

Several persons were held entitled to costs under stat. 5 W. & M., c. 11, as prosecutors of an indictment, removed by certiorari, for not repairing a highway, one as constable of the manor within which the highway lay, the other as parties grieved, they having used the way for many years in passing and re-passing from their homes to the next market town, and being obliged, by reason of the want of repair, to take a more circuitous route. Rex v. Taunton, St. Mary (Inhab.) 3 M. & S. 465. And see Rex v. Bird, 2 B. & A. 522.

A justice of the peace, who indicts a road for being out of repair, (the indictment being afterwards removed by certiorari,) is entitled to costs, under the stat. 5 & 6 W. & M., c. 11, s. 3, if the defendant be convicted. Rex v. Kettleworth, 5 T. R. 33.

The prosecutor of an indictment for stopping a common footway, who had used it for some years before it was stopped up, is a party grieved within the meaning of 5 & 6 W. & M., c. 11, s. 3. Rex v. Williamson, 7 T. R. 32.

Upon an indictment for not repairing a highway, removed by the prosecutor, if the judge at Nisi Prius certify that the defence was frivolous, the prosecutor shall have his costs, notwithstanding the defendant hath obtained a rule nisi to arrest the judgment. Rex v. St. John, Margate, 6 M. & S. 130. And see Rex v. Clifton, 2 T. R. 344.

No costs are due on a certiorari removing summary proceedings, unless a recognizance be entered into at the time of removing the proceedings: but it is discretionary in the court whether they will grant a certiorari; and in future they will compel the party to enter into a recognizance. Rex v. Jenkins, 1 T. R. 82.

Where a judge at the assizes refused to try an indictment for a misdemeanour (perjury), manifestly bad on the face of it, but did not order it to be quashed, and the prosecutor preferred another indictment for the same offence, and removed it into K. B., the court would not call upon the prosecutor to pay the costs of the first prosecution, before he proceeded with the second. Rex v. Tremaine, 5 D. & R. 413; 3 B. & C. 761; 1 R. & M. 147.

Where an indictment is removed by certiorari from the quarter sessions, the prosecutor has costs taxed by the master, which, if not paid within ten days, an attachment issues, and the recognizance stands as a security. Anon. Loff, 520.

The 12th section of the stat. 38 Geo. 3, c. 52, providing that no indictment shall be removed into the next adjoining county, except the persons applying for such removal shall enter into a recognizance in 40*l.* for the extra costs, &c., does not relate to indictments sent by K. B. to be tried in the next adjoining county, after a removal thither by certiorari. Rex v. Nottingham, 4 East, 208; 1 Smith, 51.

Where a defendant removes an indictment from a court of general quarter sessions by certiorari into K. B., and is afterwards convicted, the master of the Crown Office, in taxing the prosecutor's costs under 5 & 6 W. & M., c. 11, ought to consider those only which were incurred subsequently to the certiorari. Rex v. Wallace, Hull. on Costs, 547.

Where a defendant had removed an indictment, entered into a recognizance, been convicted and fined, and the prosecutor received one third thereof, so much shall be deducted out of costs. Rex v. Osborne, 4 Burr. 2125.

Where the attorney-general on behalf of the crown sued for money, and the defendant resisted the payment, though the crown succeeded in the suit: yet as there was a reasonable doubt whether the money did not belong to other parties, it was held to be too much to visit the defendant with the crown's costs. Mucklow v. Att.-Gen. 4 Dow, 12, 16.

On a defendant's acquittal on an information, he is not entitled under stat. 4 & 5 W. & M., c. 18, s. 2, to costs, beyond the extent of the recognizance entered into by the prosecutor in 20l., under that act. Rex v. Filewood, 2 T. R. 145.

The court, on granting an information, will not require the prosecutor to give security for the costs, in case the defendant should be acquitted, beyond the extent of the recognizance in 20l. required by the statute of 4 & 5 W. & M., c. 18, s. 2. Rex v. Brooke, 2 T. R. 190.

An indictment removed into K. B. by the defendant, and made a special jury cause by the prosecutor, came on to be tried, and was immediately referred. The order of reference stated, that if the arbitrator should be of opinion that the defendant was guilty, and the prosecutor entitled to costs, the defendant agreed to pay the costs. The arbitrator did so find:—Held, that the prosecutor could not recover the costs of the special jury, since the judge had not certified for those costs pursuant to 6 Geo. 4, c. 50, s. 34; and the order of reference did not expressly give a power of doing so to the arbitrator. Also, that the general term "costs" in this order did not include those of the reference and award. Rex v. Moate, 3 B. & Ad. 237.

CXIX. INFORMATION.

1. Generally.

A criminal information is not proper to try a civil right, unless the parties will not submit to a trial at law. Anon. Lofft, 184.

It is not to be grantable where there is contradictory evidence. Tuit v. Faukes, Lofft, 64.

The granting it is discretionary under the circumstances. Anon. Lofft, 323. And see Rex v. Robinson, 1 W. Black. 541.

On a rule for information, though the court may think a ground is laid, yet if under the circumstances the payment of the prosecutor's costs appears an adequate punishment, they will discharge the rule of the defendant's undertaking so to do. Rex v. Morgan, 1 Dougl. 314.

An information founded on a penal statute must negative the exceptions in the enacting clause creating the penalty, and also those contained in a former clause to which the enacting clause refers in express terms. Rex v. Pratten, 6 T. R. 559.

Where a prosecutor excepts in a statement of facts, and the defendant does not except, the statement is to be taken as true, and the prosecutor is not to be allowed to add to it. And see Gill v. Je

An introductory statement that outrages had been committed in the neighbourhood of a place, and that four persons may be considered as being in the neighbourhood. Salter, 4 M. & S. 1.

An introductory statement gaged in such outrage under the direction of a known person, call import that the person is a justice of peace, and the purpose is sufficient.

Not grantable. Anon. Lofft, 155.

The court will not grant an information on the sole testimony of a single person (uncontradicted), where the public interest, an alderman, who is a justice of peace.

2. Ex-officio.

A defendant, in a criminal information, may be allowed to call the attorney-general as a witness of venue without his oath. 2 Price, 113.

Where a statute may recover it by a prosecutor, the attorney-general may recover it by a prosecutor-general. Rex v. Moate, 3 B. & Ad. 237.

Information for a criminal offence, on which the attorney-general may grant one. (Mayor), 4 Burr. 20.

May be filed by a prosecutor in the absence of the office of the attorney-general. Witthens, 4 Burr. 20. (in error), 4 Bro. P.

The court will not grant an information filed ex-officio. He may stop the prosecutor, and file a criminal information. Dougl. 239.

An information for the same offence was granted. ing, 2 Burr. 654; 21.

In informations filed by the attorney-general, the facts are to be considered as being of particular counts. 183.

3. Against.

When a justice of peace is charged with a criminal offence, or corrupt motives, the information is not to be granted. Rex v.

The court will not grant an information against the magistrate of a borough for having disfranchised persons entitled to their freedom, although sworn to have been done to serve election purposes, if the defendants deny that motive, and swear that they thought there was legal ground for the disfranchisement, and the ground on which the disfranchisement went has not been decided. Rex v. Doire, 2 Dougl. 588.

No information shall be granted against justices acting in sessions, unless in very flagrant cases. Rex v. Seaford (Justices), 1 W. Black. 432.

The court will not punish a justice in an extraordinary way for compelling a complainant to do that justice which he ought to have done of his own account, when the matter does not appear to have been done malo animo. Rex v. Jackson, Loft, 147.

An information was granted against justices for refusing to relieve burgesses appealing against a poor's rate. Rex v. Phelps, 2 Ld. Ken. 570.

So a rule nisi was granted against a justice for paying over to the poor certain fines, and returning the convictions according to 19 Geo. 2. W.'s case, Loft, 44.

Wherever magistrates act uprightly, though they mistake the law, no information will be granted against them. Rex v. Jackson, 1 T. R. 653.

Error in form is no ground for criminal information. Rex v. Staffordshire (Justices), 1 Chit. 219.

And it is only granted where a magistrate has acted corruptly. Anon. 1 Chit. 217, (a).

On an application for a rule nisi for a criminal information against a magistrate, the question is not whether the act done might on full investigation be found to be strictly right, but whether it proceeded from oppressive, dishonest, or corrupt motives (under which fear and favour may generally be included), or from mistake, or error; in either of the latter instances the court will not grant the rule. Rex v. Barron, 3 B. & A. 432.

The court will grant a rule nisi for a criminal information at the end of a term against a magistrate for mal-practices during the term, but not for any misconduct before the term. Rex v. Smith, 7 T. R. 80.

A commitment by a justice of the peace for a time certain, as for fourteen days under the Vagrant Act, is a commitment in execution, and the party is not entitled to be bailed; and if another magistrate, on illegal and corrupt motives, discharge a person so committed, the court will grant an information against him. Rex v. Brooke, 2 T. R. 190.

The court will not grant an information against a magistrate, for having improperly convicted a person, unless the party complaining make an exculpatory affidavit, denying the facts. Rex v. Webster, 3 T. R. 388.

A criminal information was refused against a magistrate for returning to a writ of certiorari a conviction of a party in another and more formal shape than that in which it was first drawn up, and of which a copy had been delivered to the party convicted by the magistrate's clerk; the conviction returned being warranted by the facts. Rex v. Barker, 1 East, 186.

An information was granted against a justice, who was also a collector of customs, for sitting to decide the salvage of a vessel, under the 12 Anne, c. 18, of which he was entitled, as a custom-house officer, to part. Rex v. Davis, Loft, 62.

And information goes against a justice for committing a man for not paying 1s. for discharging his warrant. Rex v. Jones, 1 Wils. 7.

Where facts tending to criminate a magistrate took place twelve months before the application to the court, they refused to grant a criminal information; although the prosecutor, in order to excuse the delay, stated that the facts had not come to his knowledge till a very short time before the application was made. Rex v. Bishop, 5 B. & A. 612.

Nor will they grant a certiorari in the first instance to remove an order for the appointment of overseers for the purpose of having it quashed, on a suggestion that the justices made the appointment from corrupt and improper motives; the propriety of the appointment being matter of appeal to the sessions; but they will grant a criminal information against the justices, if the corrupt and improper motives for making the appointment be satisfactorily established. Rex v. Somersetshire (Justices), 1 D. & R. 443.

Quære, whether a criminal information will lie against justices for making a false return to a mandamus, unless the return is corruptly and wilfully false? Rex v. Lancashire (Justices), 1 D. & R. 485: S. C. not S. P. 5 B. & A. 755.

Rule nisi for an information against justices of peace (inter alia) making a commitment without previously taking the prosecutor's oath, who was a peer of the realm, and also for neglecting to take the noble prosecutor's recognizance to prosecute, discharged, these being deemed only irregular, not criminal. Rex v. Fielding, 2 Burr. 719.

An information will be granted against a justice of the peace, as well for granting as for refusing an ale license improperly. Rex v. Holland, 1 T. R. 692.

An information was granted against justices of peace, for refusing to grant an ale license from motives of resentment. Rex v. Harris, 3 Burr. 1716. And see Rex v. Young, 1 Burr. 556.

An information against a justice, upon a charge of refusing to grant a license, will be refused, if the reasons assigned for the refusal prove false in fact. Rex v. Athay, 2 Burr. 653.

So where the other party does not appear quite free from imputation. Anon. Loft, 314.

An information was granted for refusing to grant licenses to those publicans who voted against their recommendation of candidates for members of parliament for the borough. Rex v. Williams, and Rex v. Davis, 3 Burr. 1317.

But where the justices had not appeared to have acted corruptly, an information was refused. Res v. Baylis, 3 Burr. 1318.

Where a magistrate, upon whose property a malicious trespass had been committed, issued a summons, requiring the offender to appear before himself, or some other magistrate, and purporting that informations had been given to him (the magistrate) on oath, whereas no oath had been taken, and the information had been communicated by the magistrate to the informer, the court, in discharging a rule for a criminal information against the magistrate, refused to give him his costs. Res v. Whateley, 4 M. & R. 431.

4. Against Parish Officers.

If a parish officer make an alteration in a poor rate, after it has been allowed by two justices, but without the approbation of the justices, he shall not be punished by information. Res v. Barrett, 2 Dougl. 465.

An information lies for a conspiracy by parish officers and others to marry persons settled in different parishes, if the delinquents are of good situation in life, but not if they are low and indigent. Res v. Compton, Cald. 246.

Refused against an overseer for bribing a man to marry a chargeable pauper, where the parties had delayed three terms. Anon. Lofft, 272.

Granted against overseers for procuring a marriage to change a settlement. Res v. Herbert, 2 Ld. Ken. 466.

Granted against an overseer for procuring a pauper to marry another pauper with child of a bastard. Res v. Tarrant, 4 Burr. 2106.

Granted against overseers for procuring a soldier to marry a poor woman who was an idiot, and chargeable to the parish. Res v. Watson, 1 Wils. 41.

Refused against an overseer for removing a pauper to prevent her being chargeable. Res v. Rushby, 1 Bott, P. L. 335.

5. In other Cases.

An information for not taking an office in a corporation is not to be filed against one neither usually resident therein, nor obstinately refusing. Res v. Denison, 2 Ld. Ken. 259.

The court will not grant a criminal information against the members of a corporation for a misapplication of the corporation money. Res v. Watson, 2 T. R. 199.

Where an information of seizure lays the number of things seized under a videlicet, the allegation is material; and the proof, verdict, and judgment, are limited to the number so laid, or a number within it; and it seems that such an information requires an averment of the quantity of things seized, and would be bad without it. Att.-Gen. v. Jeffreys, 1 M'Clel. 270; 13 Price, 545.

Where an information for smuggling, founded on the statute 45 Geo. 2, c. 121, s. 7, stated the offence minutely, so as to bring it within that statute, and alleged, that, by reason thereof, the defendant having illegally on board foreign spirits, valued at 711*l.* 5*s.*, his boat was forfeited, according to the statute in that case made and provided; and it also, after stating another matter of offence, that the defendant was found on board the said vessel, charged, that thereby he had forfeited the sum of 2,133*l.* 15*s.*, the commissioners of customs having, by virtue of the said statute, elected to sue for the treble value of the said goods, instead of the penalty: and objections were made, first, that the information did not state the offence to be contrary to the form of the statute; secondly, that it omitted, in stating that the defendant had forfeited the sum of money, to allege "according to the form," &c.: thirdly, that the information did not aver that the sum charged to be forfeited was the treble value of the goods seized; and, lastly, that the name of the defendant was omitted in the concluding averment, that the commissioners had made an election to sue for the treble value: the court of Exchequer held, that in a revenue information, where upon the whole record the offence and statute were so plainly stated, as that the court might see that an offence had been committed with reference to the particular statute, the objections did not afford ground for arresting the judgment, on a motion made for that purpose. Att.-Gen. v. Rattenbury, 9 Price, 397.

Where an information on the stat. 33 Geo. 3, c. 52, s. 62, prohibiting officers of the East India company, residing in India, from receiving presents, charged that the defendants, being British subjects, on the 1st of January, 1794, and from thence for a long time, to wit, until the 29th of November, 1795, held certain offices under the company, and during all that time resided in the East Indies; and that whilst they held the said offices as aforesaid, and whilst they resided in the East Indies as aforesaid, to wit, on the 29th of November, 1795, they received certain presents:—Held, that the context showed that the word "until" was to be taken inclusive of the 29th of November, 1795, but that if it had been incapable of receiving an inclusive construction, the words under the first videlicet, "until the 29th of November, 1795," could not have been rejected as surplusage; for that can never be where the allegation is sensible and consistent in the place where it occurs, and not repugnant to antecedent matter, though laid under a videlicet, and however inconsistent with an allegation subsequent. Res v. Stevens, 5 East, 244; 1 Smith, 437.

In an information on a count, framed on the statute 42 Geo. 3, c. 38, s. 12, stating that the defendant, between the 31st day of August, 1819, and on each and every of divers, to wit, twenty other days, between that day and the day of exhibiting the information, did mix a large quantity, to wit, twelve gallons of strong beer with a large quantity, to wit, twelve gallons of table beer, in each and every of divers, to wit, five casks, whereby, &c. the defendant had, for each of the said offences, forfeited the sum of 200*l.*, amounting in the whole to 21,000*l.*:—Held, that this might be supported, although it was objected, first, that it was cumulative and multifarious, being a single count for many penalties: whereas each separate offence ought to have been made the subject of a separate count; secondly, that the divers other days on which, &c., ought to have been specified and stated; thirdly, that the charge was uncertain, unintelligible, and repugnant; and, lastly, that from the calculation as to the amount of the sums alleged to be forfeited, it appeared that the defendant was charged with five offences on each day, whereas he could not, in point of law, be considered to have committed more than one offence on each particular day. Att.-Gen. v. Freer, 11 Price, 183.

An information on 48 Geo. 3, c. 143, for selling "beer or ale" without an excise license is bad, and a conviction thereon, showing that the defendant had sold ale only, quashed. Rex v. North, 6 D. & R. 143.

It is not necessary to state, in an information against a maker of vinegar for the duties of excise under the 42 Geo. 3, c. 69, schedule (A.) that the liquor was preparing for sale, but that may be proved. Att.-Gen. v. Green, 4 Price, 224.

In an information for exercising a trade, not having served an apprenticeship, it need not be averred that the defendant did not exercise the trade at the time of making of the act. Bull q. t. v. Cobus, 1 Burr. 366.

In an information for post-dating a draft, it is not necessary to set it out in the language in which it was originally drawn. Att.-Gen. v. Valabreque, Wightw. 9.

An information lies for a false return to a mandamus. Anon. Lofft, 185.

But refused against a man who has refused to serve the office of one of the sheriffs of London. Rex v. Grosvenor, 1 Wils. 18; 2 Str. 1193.

The court granted an information against a person refusing to take on himself the office of sheriff, because the vacancy of the office occasioned the stop of public justice, and the year would be nearly expired before an indictment could be brought to trial. Rex v. Woodrow, 2 T. R. 731.

So, for endeavouring to procure the appointment of certain person to be overseers of the poor, with a view to derive a private advantage to the party. Rex v. Joliffe, 1 East, 154, n.

The surveyor of a high road having improperly expended a large sum of money, borrowed by the trustees under an act of parliament, without the consent of the trustees, which the act required, to sanction the expenditure, the court refused a criminal information, no corrupt motive being expressly alleged: and they will not convert a civil into a criminal injury. Rex v. Friar, 1 Chit. 702.

An information was granted against commissioners for exceeding their powers, &c. Rex v. Rogers, 1 Ld. Ken. 373.

But refused against twelve commissioners for pulling down a turnpike, on a suggestion of irregularity in the time and manner of the meeting. Anon. Lofft, 199.

So, against a husband for endeavouring to take his wife contrary to articles. Rex v. Vane, (Lord) 1 W. Black. 18.

So, for embezzling money collected on a church brief. Rex v. St. Botolph, Bishopsgate, 1 W. Black. 443.

So, for burying a dead body found in a river, without sending for the coroner. Rex v. Proby, 1 Ld. Ken. 250.

But granted for maliciously pressing. Rex v. Webb, 1 W. Black. 19.

An information for a nuisance will be refused, if an application to the party be not shown. Rex v. Green, 1 Ld. Ken. 379.

Whether or not the particular schemes denounced by the stat. 6 Geo. 1, c. 18, s. 18, is manifestly tending to the common grievance, prejudice, and inconvenience of great numbers of subjects in their trade and other affairs, such as raising a great many subscriptions for trading purposes, and making the shares on the joint stock transferable, be in themselves unlawful, and prohibited, without reference to the fact of such tendency in a particular instance in the opinion of a court and jury; at any rate, the inviting of such subscriptions, by holding out false and illegal conditions, such as that the subscribers would not be liable beyond the amount of their respective shares, seems to be an offence within the act. But as the statute had not been acted upon for a great length of time, and was now sought to be enforced by a private relator, who seemed not to have been deluded by the project, but to have subscribed with a view to this application to the court, they refused to interfere, by granting an information, though they discharged the rule without costs. Rex v. Dool, 9 East, 516. And see Rex v. Webb, 14 East, 406.

An information does not lie for a riot, if the parties did not disperse, and are within the penalty of the Riot Act; otherwise it does. Anon. Lofft, 253.

Nor for pretending to read the Riot Act. Rex v. Spriggins, 1 W. Black. 2.

All persons by their presence, countenancing a riot, are liable to an information. Rex v. Hunt, 1 Ld. Ken. 108.

An information was granted for attempting to bribe a privy councillor to procure a reversionary patent of an office grantable by the king under the great seal. Rex v. Vaughan, 4 Burr. 204.

An information was granted on the deposition of two persons, to the offer of a bribe by the defendant at an election. Rex v. Ingham, 2 Ld. Ken. 202.

6. Application for Criminal Information.

See Rex v. Borron, 3 B. & A. 432; Rex v. Prynne, 3 B. & A. 668; and Rex v. Hunt, 4 B. & A. 430.

One information only may, by leave of court, be exhibited under the Irish statutes 19 Geo. 2

c. 2, s. 4, against different persons, and against the same persons for usurping different franchises; and there is no necessity to state such leave upon the record. Symmers v. Rex (in error), Cowp. 489.

A joint information against several defendants cannot issue upon distinct rules for one or more information or informations against each. Rex v. Haydon, 3 Burr. 1270.

A qui tam information for penalties under the game laws is not an information within the meaning of the 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, so as to entitle the plaintiff to enter an appearance and plea, when the defendant himself neglects to appear and plead. Davies q. t. v. Bint, 5 D. & R. 353.

The motion for a criminal information must be made by the law officers of the crown, or by a barrister, and not by a private individual. Rex v. Lancashire (Justices), 1 Chit. 602.

The party applying for an information must come with clean hands into court. Rex v. Eden, Loft, 72.

Therefore an information will be refused to cheats and gamblers against others of the same description. Rex v. Reach, 1 Burr. 548.

So, an information for a challenge was denied to the first sender of it. Rex v. Hankey, 1 Burr. 316.

A party applying for an information must waive his right of action; but if the court, on hearing the whole matter, are of opinion that it is a proper subject for an action, they may give the party leave to bring it. Rex v. Sparrow, 2 T. R. 198; 1 Tidd's Prac. 8.

An information was refused where the charge of giving a challenge was made under false and ambiguous colours; the words spoken admitting of a favourable interpretation. Prideaux v. Arthur, Loft, 393.

So, where the party is unreasonably late in his application. Id.

A criminal information may be moved for against magistrates, for misconduct in the execution of their offices, in the second term after the offence committed, there being no intervening assizes. Rex v. Harries, 13 East, 270.

The court will not grant a rule nisi for a criminal information against a magistrate, so late in the second term after the imputed offence, as to preclude him from the opportunity of showing cause against it in the same term. Rex v. Marshall, 13 East, 322.

An information against a magistrate must be moved for within the second term after the offence, time enough for him to answer the affidavits. Rex v. Taylor, Nolan, 204.

If a complaint for an information against a justice of peace prove frivolous, the attorney as well as the original complainer must pay the costs. Rex v. Felding, 2 Burr. 654; 2 Ld. Ken. 386.

7. Affidavits.

An affidavit to found a motion for a criminal information must distinctly negative the charge; and it is usual to do so in the words of the charge. Rex v. Wright, 2 Chit. 162.

And on a motion for such information against two persons for a conspiracy in endeavouring to raise the price of oil, it must appear distinctly that they combined together, as it is no offence for an individual separately so to endeavour. Rex v. Hilbers, 2 Chit. 163.

If circumstances of suspicion only are stated, in affidavits in support of a rule for criminal information:—Held, to be insufficient, unless the deponents add their belief that the party against whom it is moved acted from corrupt motives. Rex v. Williamson, 3 B. & A. 582.

An information on stat. Hen. 5, c. 4, against a person for practising as an attorney whilst he was under sheriff, was refused because the affidavit did not mention what particular acts he did as an attorney, of which the court should judge. Rex v. Bull, 1 Wils. 93.

Affidavits, upon which an information is applied for, must not be sworn before the attorney in the prosecution. Rex v. Ipswich (Jailer), 2 Ld. Ken. 421.

An affidavit by A., stating that B. had brought him a challenge from C., and that B. had refused to make an affidavit that C. sent him with it, is not evidence in which the court will grant a rule nisi for a criminal information against C. for sending the challenge. Rex v. Willett, 6 T. R. 294.

Rule to show cause for an information for challenge, granted, upon producing only copies of the letters containing it. Rex v. Chappel, 1 Burr. 402.

When any defendant shall be brought up for sentence on any indictment, or information, after verdict, the affidavits produced on the part of the defendant, if any such be produced, shall be first read, and then any affidavits produced on the part of the prosecution shall be read; after which the counsel for the defendant shall be heard, and lastly, the counsel for the prosecution. Reg. Gen. K. B. M. T. 29 Geo. 3. Rex v. Bunts, 2 T. R. 683.

Where a defendant was convicted of a libel, which purported to have been written in consequence of his having seen a statement of facts in different newspapers, an affidavit that he read those statements in such newspapers may be received in mitigation of punishment; but an affidavit that the facts contained in those statements were true, is not admissible. Rex v. Burdett (Bart.), 4 B. & A. 314.

The court granted a peremptory rule for an attorney, concerned in showing cause against a mandamus, to file his affidavits on the morrow, the rule for the mandamus having been made absolute. Rex v. Middlesex (Justices), 1 Chit. 368.

When a defendant who has been convicted on an indictment comes up to receive judgment, the prosecutor may read affidavits in aggravation, though made by witnesses who were examined at the trial, and which affidavits the defendant is at liberty to answer. Rex v. Sharpness, 1 T. R. 228.

Where a defendant is brought up to receive judgment after conviction, an affidavit by the prosecutor in aggravation, stating that a third person, who refuses to join in the affidavit, had informed him that the defendant after the trial had repeated in his hearing the libellous matter for which he was indicted, is not admissible; at least not without swearing that such third person was under the control or influence of the defendant. Rex v. Pinkerton, 2 East, 357. And see Rex v. Withers, 3 T. R. 428, and Rex v. Mawbry, 6 T. R. 627.

Affidavit entitled "in the King's Bench," upon which the attorney-general had filed an information ex-officio against the defendant, permitted to be read in aggravation after judgment by default. Rex v. Morgan, 11 East, 457.

An affidavit, to put off a trial at Nisi Prius, being returned to the court of K. B., they granted another information on it against the defendant, considering the affidavit taken at Nisi Prius as taken under the authority of the court. Rex v. Joliffe, 4 T. R. 285.

It should be stated in the affidavit, in support of an application to postpone a trial on account of a commission to examine witnesses not having returned, that the return is expected, and when. Att.-Gen. v. Laragoty, 3 Price, 221.

In an information at the suit of the attorney-general to recover penalties, an affidavit by a defendant to ground a motion to postpone the trial on account of the absence of a witness, must be minute and circumstantially particular as to all the matters therein stated. Att.-Gen. v. Tyson, 11 Price, 229.

And must show where the witness is. Att.-Gen. v. Phillips, McClell. 251.

But the trial of an excise information was ordered to be postponed, where the court of Exchequer were not unanimous in considering the affidavit on which the application was founded to be sufficiently circumstantial. Att.-Gen. v. Dodsworth, 11 Price, 232.

When a defendant, who has suffered judgment by default in a criminal prosecution, is brought up for judgment, each party should come prepared with affidavits disclosing his own case (if he mean to produce any affidavit at all); but, if in the course of the inquiry the court wish to have any point further explained, they will give the defendant an opportunity of answering it on a future day. Rex v. Wilson, 4 T. R. 487.

Affidavits allowed to be read on a defendant's being brought up for judgment, stating that the defendant had made use of expressions aggravating his guilt, in the presence of two persons who had related them to the persons making the affidavits, and the prosecutor swearing that the persons who heard the expressions refused to come forward, and were supposed to be under the influence of the defendant. Rex v. Archer, 2 T. R. 203, n.

Where the party applied for time to send to Trinidad for an affidavit of the truth of certain matters in a libel, in order to show cause against such a rule, the court would not grant further time. Affidavits abroad, before judges there, and verified, although receivable as affidavits of debt, are not to be received on rules to show cause, in opposition to affidavits made in K. B. Rex v. Draper, 3 Smith, 391.

A rule nisi for an information cannot be served on a clerk in court, employed formerly by the defendants. Anon. 2 Ld. Ken. 496.

CXX. PRISONS.

[See Brandling v. Kent, 1 T. R. 62.]

The house of correction for the county of Middlesex, adapted to the separate reception of felons pursuant to the 22 Geo. 3, c. 64, and other acts, is a legal prison for the safe custody of persons under a charge of high treason. Ex parte East, 8 T. R. 172.

The court of King's Bench has no authority to interfere in the regulation and management of the jails in the kingdom; therefore, where persons had been found guilty of a misdemeanour, and confined in a county jail under the sentence of the court, prayed to be allowed the same indulgences as prisoners confined for felony, the court refused to make any order upon the jail for that purpose. Rex v. Carlile, 1 D. & R. 56. But see Anon. Loft, 257.

The lord of a franchise is not, as such, bound to repair a jail within it, but he may be subject to such a charge by immemorial usage. Rex v. Exeter (Bishop), 6 T. R. 373.

One convicted upon the stat. 9 & 10 W. 3, c. 41, s. 2, of having unlawfully in his possession, or concealing the king's naval stores, cannot, since the stat. 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 83, s. 2, be sentenced to hard labour. Rex v. Bridges, 1 East, 53.

Semble, that a jailor bringing a prisoner out of his county, to be present at the trial of an information on the game laws, in which he is defendant, without having a habeas corpus or judge's order for that purpose, is liable to an action for false imprisonment, at the suit of such prisoner. R. Bint v. Lavender, T. Bint v. Same, and Pitt v. Same, 1 C. & P. 659—Littledale.

Assumpsit for money had and received will lie against a jailor, where, by the regulations of a prison made by the magistrates, certain rates are settled for lodgings, &c. within the prison, and the jailor takes more than that sum, even though he has paid it over to the magistrates to whom the accounts. Miller v. Aris, 3 Esp. 231—Kenyon.

CXXI. TRANSPORTATION.

5 Geo. 4, c. 84.

By the word "transportation" in the 8 Geo. 3, c. 15, is meant not merely the conveying of the felon to the place of transportation, but his being so conveyed and remaining there during the term for which he is ordered to be transported; and therefore, a felon attainted is not by that statute restored to his civil rights till after the expiration of the term for which he is ordered to be so transported. Bullock v. Dodds, 2 B. & A. 253.

Where a prisoner was convicted of perjury &

the assizes at Chester, and the sentence of transportation was entered on the record as follows:

"Wherefore, all and singular the said premises being seen by the said justices here, and fully understood, it is therefore ordered that he the said L. K. be transported to the coast of New South Wales, or some one or other of the islands adjacent, for and during the term of seven years:"

—Held, on error brought, that this was no judgment, but merely an order. Rex v. Kenworthy, 3 D. & R. 173; 1 B. & C. 711.

The king's sign manual may be given in evidence by the prisoner, on an indictment for returning from transportation; and if not revoked, and the condition be literally, though not substantially complied with, it shall discharge the prisoner from that indictment. Rex v. Miller, 2 W. Black. 797.

The stat. 3 Geo. 4, c. 38, s. 2, which enacted "that if any servant shall steal any money, &c., from his master, and shall be convicted thereof, and be entitled to benefit of clergy, he, instead of being subject to such punishment as may now by law be inflicted upon persons so convicted, and entitled to benefit of clergy, may be transported for fourteen years," did not extend to cases of petty larceny. Rex v. Ellis, 8 D. & R. 173.

A judgment of transportation for fourteen years, if bad for excess, is bad in toto, and cannot operate as a good judgment of transportation for seven years. Id.

Where a court of quarter sessions have passed an erroneous judgment of transportation, the court will not send it back to be amended, but will reserve it, on writ of error. Id.

CXXII. ARTICLES OF THE PEACE.

Articles of the peace ought to be exhibited in the neighbourhood, that the security may be given there. Rex v. Waite, 2 Burr. 780: S. C. nom. Rex v. A. B. 2 Ld. Ken. 511.

Where a person exhibits articles of the peace, and swears that her life is in danger, the truth of the facts cannot be controverted. Lord Vane's case, 13 East, 172, n.

There ought to be a reasonable foundation on the face of the articles, to induce a fear of personal danger, before the court will require sureties of the peace. Id.

A wife may sue a supplicavit in Chancery against her husband, and to find sureties not to beat or evil intreat her, aliter quam causa regiminis et castigationis. Id.

The facts stated in the articles are to be considered as true till the contrary appears upon a proper prosecution. Id.

Where there are articles of separation between the husband and wife, if the husband afterwards confine her, she may have a habeas corpus, and be set at liberty. Id.

One, against whom articles of the peace are exhibited, is not entitled to read affidavits on his behalf, in contradiction of the facts sworn to against him in such articles. Rex v. Doherty, 13 East, 171.

Upon articles of the peace exhibited, the court have power of requiring bail for such a length of time as they shall think necessary for the preservation of the peace, and are not confined to a twelve-month. Rex v. Bowes, 1 T. R. 696.

Where the court had at first required bail for fourteen years, they afterwards lessened the time to two years, upon its appearing to them that an information was depending against the defendant on the same account, which must necessarily be determined within that time. Rex v. Bowes, 1 T. R. 696.

Where articles of the peace appeared malicious and untrue, the court stayed process on them, and committed the exhibitant for perjury. Rex v. Parnell, 2 Burr. 806.

The court ordered that directions to justices of peace to take security, specifying the sums wherein principals and sureties should be bound, to be indorsed on the attachment of the peace. Hutt's case, or Rex v. Bowmaster, 2 Burr. 1039.

I. VALIDITY GENERALLY.

A custom may be to do a thing several ways, if not inconsistent. Anon. Lofft, 398.

A custom is void which is unreasonable, uncertain, savours too much of arbitrary power, and tends to make a lord of a manor a judge in his own cause. Wilkes v. Broadbent, 1 Wils. 63.

It is no objection to a custom that it is not conformable to the common law of the land. Horton v. Beckman, 6 T. R. 760, 764. And see Hardy v. Holliday, 4 T. R. 718, n.

But the usage of a particular place cannot vary the general law. Rex v. Saltern, Cald. 444.

A custom for the inhabitants of a particular place to take a profit in alieno solo, is bad; a right to take such a profit can be claimed by prescription only. Grimstead v. Marlowe, 4 T. R. 717.

No one can claim a prescription in his own land. Cooper v. Barber, 3 Taunt. 99.

A prescription cannot be where the creation of the thing upon which it is claimed is within the time of memory. Rex v. Johns, Loft, 76.

An ancient grant, without date, does not necessarily destroy a prescriptive right; for it may be either prior to time of memory, or in confirmation of such prescriptive right, which is matter to be left to a jury. Addington v. Clode, 2 W. Black. 989.

A custom, regulating the rights of the owners of all lands bordering on the sea, is so general that it need not be pleaded. Rex v. Yarborough (Lord), 2 Bligh, N.S. 147; 1 Dow, N. S. 178; 5 Bing. 163.

Unity of possession has the effect of suspending an easement, but does not extinguish a prescription. Canham v. Fisk, 1 Price's P. C. 148.

II. AS TO LANDLORD AND TENANT.

A custom that tenants, whether by parol or deed, shall have the away-going crop after the expiration of their terms, is good. Wiglesworth v. Dallison, 1 Dougl. 201. And see 1 Bligh, 287.

So, a custom that a tenant may leave his away-going crop in the barn, &c., of the farm after he has quitted the premises, is good. Beaven v. Delahay, 1 H. Black. 5; S. P. Lewis v. Harris, 1 H. Black. 7, n.

Quære, whether a custom to demise by parol an incorporeal hereditament, (for instance, a right of common,) can be supported at law? Lathbury v. Arnold, 1 Bing. 219; 8 Moore, 72. And see Rex v. Lane, 1 D. & R. 76; 5 B. & A. 488.

Where, to trespass quare clausum fregit, the defendant pleaded a custom applicable to all farms within the parish, which were not exempted by special agreement or otherwise:—Held, that, to avail himself of the fact that his particular farm was exempted, the plaintiff ought not to traverse the custom generally, but to confess it, and avoid it by showing that the exception applied to his farm. Evans v. Ogilvie, 2 Y. & J. 79.

III. RESPECTING PARISHES.

Where a parish contained within itself a borough not co-extensive with it, and the mayor of the borough, on a return to a mandamus for allowing a poor rate made by the churchwardens and overseers of the whole parish, stated a custom which had existed since the 43 Eliz. of appointing separate churchwardens and overseers, and of making separate rates for the borough, and for those parts of the parish which lay without the borough; it was holden that such custom was invalid; and the return was quashed accordingly. Rex v. Gordon, 1 B. & A. 524.

A custom, that every pound of butter sold in a particular market-town should weigh eighteen ounces, is bad. Noble v. Durell, 3 T. R. 271.

Quære, whether a custom to sell butter in lumps of a certain weight may not be good? Id.

A custom for all the inhabitants of a parish to play "at all kinds of lawful games, sports, and pastimes in the close of A., at all seasonable times of the year, at their free will and pleasure," is good; but a similar custom "for all persons, for the time being, being in the said parish," is bad. Fitch v. Rawling, 2 H. Black. 393.

A person who rents a tenement within a parish, which he uses occasionally, but does not actually reside there, is within a custom for all the inhabitants of a parish. Fitch v. Fitch, 2 Esp. 543—Heath.

A prescription as lord of the manor for toll of all goods landed within the manor, in consideration of repairing a wharf within the manor, not confining it to the wharf, is good. Colton v. Smith, Cowp. 47; Loft, 463.

A prescription for taking three bushels of barley out of every ship's cargo, brought to a certain quay to be exported, is reasonable and good. Serjeant v. Read, 1 Wils. 91.

An annual officer of an hundred, to which the privilege of holding a fair has been granted, may prescribe to hold it, although not a corporation. Taylor v. Rondeau, 2 Ld. Ken. 50.

Evidence of a custom, to perambulate the boundaries of a parish, is not sufficient to support an allegation in pleas in trespass of a right to perambulate the boundaries of a liberty. Grant v. Kearney, 12 Price, 773.

No person has at common law a right to glean in a harvest field: neither have the poor of a parish, legally settled (as such), any such right. Steel v. Houghton, 1 H. Black. 51. And see Worlledge v. Manning, 1 H. Black. 53, n.

But in one case it was held, that the right or privilege by law or custom of gleaning or leasing must be exercised under proper circumstances and restrictions. Rex v. Price, 4 Burr. 1925.

A custom for poor and indigent householders living in A. to cut and carry away rotten boughs and branches in a chase in A. cannot be supported; the description of the persons entitled being too vague. Selby v. Robinson, 2 T. R. 758.

Therefore where the defendant justified, in trespass, under such a custom, which was found for him, the court set aside the verdict on that issue, and entered a verdict for the plaintiff, with nominal damages. Id.

IV. CUSTOMS OF MANORS.

1. Generally.

An immemorial custom, for the steward of a manor to nominate the jury to serve on the court-leet at the election of the mayor of a borough, is good in law. Rex v. Jolliffe, 3 D. & R. 240; 2 B. & C. 54.

Twenty years' regular usage, uncontradicted and unexplained, is cogent evidence for a jury to presume that a custom for the steward of a manor to nominate the jury to serve on the court-leet, at the election of the mayor of a borough, is an immemorial custom. Id.

A custom, to swear the jurors at one court-leet to inquire and return their presentments at the next court, is bad in law. Davidson v. Moscrop, 2 East, 56.

A custom within a manor that lands shall descend to the eldest sister, where there is neither a son nor a daughter, does not extend to an eldest niece; but the lands must descend according to the rules of the common law, in default of such son, daughter, and sister. Denn d. Goodwin v. Spray, 1 T. R. 466.

A court-leet, holden on the 28th of April, was adjourned, after the jury had been sworn in, till the 15th of December, which day was given them to make their presentments:—Held, that an adjournment of such duration (which was admitted to be according to the custom of the manor) was not unnecessarily unreasonable. Wilcock v. Windsor, 3 B. & Adol. 43.

A custom in a manor, for the leet jury to break and destroy measures found by them to be false, is lawful. In a plea of justification grounded on such custom, it is enough to say that the measures were found by the jury to be false, without alleging that they were so. Id.

In trespass, for seizing weights and measures, four defendants pleaded that they were sworn, with divers, to wit, twenty others, as a leet jury, according to the custom of the manor of Stepney; and that it was the custom of the jury so sworn to examine weights and measures within the manor, and seize them if defective; and they alleged that they, the defendants, being on such jury so sworn as aforesaid, examined and seized the plaintiff's weights and measures, which they found defective. Replication, de injuria. There was evidence at the trial that only five of the leet jurors were actually in the plaintiff's shop when the defendants made the seizure there, though the rest were close at hand; but the judge refused to let any question go to the jury on this part of the case, being of opinion that the objection was on the record:—Held, that the objection was on the record, and was valid; it not appearing by the plea that the examination and seizure were made by the jury sworn at the court-leet, according to custom. Sheppard v. Hall, 3 B. & Adol. 433.

In an action by a copyholder against the lord of a manor for a false return to a mandamus, in which mandamus a custom was set forth in respect of copyholds granted for two lives, that the surviving life should renew, paying to the lord such fine as should be set by the homage, to be equal to two years' improved value, and not guilty pleaded. Depositions made in an ancient suit, instituted against a former lord of the manor by a person who claimed to be admitted to a copyhold for lives, upon a custom for any copyhold tenant for life or lives to change or fill up his lives, paying to the lord a reasonable fine, to be set by the lord or his steward, and which depositions were made by witnesses on behalf of the said copyholder, were held to be admissible evidence for the lord, as depositions of persons called on behalf of a person standing in pari jure with the new copyholder, although it was not proved that the persons making such depositions were copyholders, but it appeared only from the depositions themselves, that they were such, or were persons acquainted with the customs of the manor; and their depositions, supposing them to be only admissible as declarations of persons deceased, were not inadmissible on account of their being made post litem motam, because the same custom was not in controversy in the former suit as in the present. Freeman v. Phillips, 4 M. & S. 486.

Leases, without proof of enjoyment under them, are admissible in evidence to prove a particular custom of a manor. Clarkson v. Woodhouse, 5 T. R. 412, n.; 3 Dougl. 189.

Trespass for breaking and entering three closes in S. Pleas in justification:—1. A right of common of turbary; 2. of pasture. Replication, that the closes are parcel of S. Moss, within the manor of S.; that there are divers ancient messuages, which have had common of turbary and pasture upon the waste. The replication then stated a custom within the manor of S., for the owners of S. Moss, by themselves or their Moss reeves, to assign to the owners of such ancient messuages, certain reasonable proportions of the Moss dales, to be by them held in severalty, for the purpose of getting turves; and, after the Moss dales shall have been cleared, the owners of the Moss shall hold the same in severalty, discharged from all common of turbary and pasture. The replication then stated the clearing and approvement of the closes accordingly. Rejoinder, traversing the custom; and verdict for the plaintiff. On motion in arrest of judgment, it was objected, 1. that the custom was bad, as extending to messuages without the manor; 2. that it was bad, as repugnant to the right claimed in the plea; 3. that it was bad, as not being to extend to all the ancient messuages; 4. that it was bad, in stating that "reasonable proportions" were to be assigned:—Held, that the custom, as stated in the replication, was good. Id.

2. To grind Corn.

A custom "that all the inhabitants of a manor shall grind all their corn, grain, and malt, which by them or any of them shall be used or spent on the ground within a manor, at a certain mill," is good. Cort v. Birkbeck, 1 Dougl. 218.

A custom "that all the tenants, residents, and inhabitants within a manor, should grind at the lord's mill all their corn and grain, as well growing within the manor as brought from other places, and spent or consumed in a ground state in their respective houses," within the manor, may be a good custom; but it does not extend to restrain the inhabitants who do not grow corn and grain, or who have no corn and grain of their own, from buying or using in such houses, ground corn or flour, though it may not have been ground or grown within the manor, but produced from corn ground at other mills. Richardson v. Walker, 4 D. & R. 498; 2 B. & C. 827.

And where by the custom of a manor all the tenants, residents, and inhabitants within the manor were bound to grind all their corn, grain, and malt, as well growing within the manor as brought from other places, and which, after the grinding thereof, should be spent or consumed in a ground state in their houses, at two ancient mills belonging to the lord, or one of them, at their own option, and the lord having pulled down one of the mills, so as to deprive the tenants of their option:—Held, that the custom was suspended. Richardson v. Capes, 4 D. & R. 512; 2 B. & C. 841.

In an action upon the case upon a custom for not grinding at plaintiff's mills, plaintiff may declare generally upon a custom for a certain toll, without specifying the particular toll, or the consideration for it, or that it is a reasonable toll; and a continuance of uniform payment and acquiescence is evidence of its reasonableness, and the court shall judge under all the circumstances what is reasonable. Gard v. Callard, 6 M. & S. 69.

V. CUSTOMS OF TRADE.

The custom of merchants is part of the law of the land. Vallexjo v. Wheeler, Loft, 631.

The custom of merchants is the general established law, not any special local custom. Edin v. East India Comp., 1 W. Black. 299; 2 Burr. 1216.

But it must be controlled by adjudged cases. Id.

The opinion of merchants is not the custom of merchants. Id.

But evidence of the general opinion of merchants is allowed to be given to prove the custom of merchants. Camden v. Cowley, 1 W. Black. 417—Mansfield.

An usage of trade cannot be set up in contravention of an express contract; therefore, on a warranty of prime singed bacon, evidence is not admissible of a practice in the bacon trade to receive bacon to a certain degree tainted as prime singed bacon; nor of a practice to preclude the purchaser from all remedy, if he does not discover and point out the defect by an early day. Yates v. Pym, 6 Taunt. 446; S. C. nom. Yates v. Pim, 2 Marsh. 141; Holt, 95.

Semble, that there is not any custom in the cloth trade, by which a tailor, who receives cloth from a clothier which he does not approve, is bound to pay for it, if, when sent back, it does not reach the seller, unless he shows that he has delivered it to the seller's order in writing. Davies v. Halton, 5 C. & P. 69—Tindal.

To prove the manner of conducting a particular branch of trade at one place, evidence may be given to show the manner in which the same branch is carried on in another place. Noble v. Kenneway, 2 Dougl. 510.

It seems that a custom for bankers to use bills deposited with them, (which were never written short, but entered to the full amount, on the day they were paid in, in the pass-book, and also in the books of the bank, to the credit of a customer, as "bills," not as "cash," and after such entry the customer was at liberty to draw to the full amount, by checks), by paying them over in the course of their banking business, is not good in law, and cannot bind the customer without his express assent. Thompson v. Giles, 3 D. & R. 733; 2 B. & C. 422.

There is a custom in London to let cart-horns for heavy trades. Ex parte Wiggins, 1 Mont. & Bligh, 168.

VI. CUSTOMS OF LONDON.

The court cannot take notice of a custom of London, unless it has been certified by the recorder. Hartop v. Hoare, 1 Wils. 8; 2 Str. 1187.

The court takes notice of such of the customs of London as appear to have been certified by the recorder. Blacquiare v. Hawkins, 1 Dougl. 78.

If a custom of London be put in issue which has never been certified, it is properly triable by the mayor and aldermen, certified at the bar of the court in term, by the mouth of the recorder. Plummer v. Bentham, 1 Burr. 248.

The courts will not take judicial notice of the custom in London to cart whores: it must be proved. Steinton and Wife v. Jones, 2 Sels. 1 P. 1225—Mansfield.

There is no custom in London giving the vestry-bailiff power to cut unlawful nets or seize fish. Bulbroke v. Goodeve, 1 W. Black. 569.

It does not appear that a feme covert who trades by the custom of London has authority to contract a debt by bond, or give a warrant of attorney, or prosecute or defend an action in a court of common law, without her husband's name being joined. Jewson v. Read, Loft, 134.

A woman's real estate is not affected by the custom. Id.

VII. PLEADING.

Whoever pleads an easement must plead it specially. Hawkins v. Wallis, 2 Wils. 173.

A party in pleading may prescribe for less than he is entitled to claim. Trotterbury (Bailiff) v. Bricknell, 1 Taunt. 142.

All prescriptions are in their nature entire, and when they are pleaded, the adverse party cannot deny a part only, but must either demand or traverse the whole. Moreshead v. Wood, 4 T. R. 157.

Therefore, if to an action of trespass is the common called A., the defendant pleads that A. and B. commons lie open to each other, and the prescribe for a right in both commons, the plaintiff must traverse the whole prescription. Id.

If a custom be set forth generally, and it be proved that there are exceptions, it is a fatal variance. Griffin v. Blandford, Cowp. 62. And see Peter v. Kendall, 6 B. & C. 703.

If a custom be pleaded, another custom repugnant to it cannot be replied without a traverse, although a custom or matter consistent with it may. Kenckin v. Knight, 1 Wils. 253; 1 W. Black. 49.

If a custom be set up by the lord of a manor to have the best live or dead chattel as an heriot, quære, if the tenant can modify that custom by pleading another, that the homage shall assess a compensation in lieu of the heriot? Parkin v. Radcliffe, 1 B. & P. 282. And see Kingsmill v. Bull, 9 East, 185.
